A STEWARDSHIP MESSAGE

The utter dependence of the larger program of Northern Baptists upon the teaching and practice of Christian stewardship by God's people is daily becoming more and more apparent.

The General Board of Promotion is planning a denomination-wide campaign of education in stewardship as taught in the Scriptures, and as required for the Kingdom work of our day, as one of our major duties from this time on.

We must conserve the advance already made and rally our forces for a greater work in the days to come! We can hold the higher levels of Christian living and of Christian giving attained through the challenge of the New World Movement if we teach steadily and practice faithfully Christian Stewardship. There is but one way to insure that we shall carry over the standards set by the New World Movement into the years after this five-year

The Washington Conference—III.

By WILLIAM AXLING

WHEN IS DISARMAMENT DISARMAMENT

PREMIER BRIAND'S dramatic presentation of France's perplexity regarding the question of land disarmament brought the conference face to face with the fundamental problem of permanent peace. Although Germany has been deprived of her fleet, and her army was reduced to 100,000 men by the Treaty of Versailles the nightmare of a German invasion still floats across the dreams of France.

Premier Briand contended that Germany's disarmament is only physical. Mentally and morally she is still armed to the teeth. Hatred still fills her heart. The spirit of revenge still stains her soul. And in the background stand 7,000,000 potential troops—men trained and tried in the world's recent baptism of fire. Back of these stands Germany's industrial organization capable of almost instantaneous conversion into the making of armunitions. Until Germany has a change of heart France must live in the cheerless fog of fear and keep her army strong.

All of which emphasizes anew the fact that this war on war must be spiritual in its motive, its method and its dynamic if it is going to reach its great goal. The hearts of men and of nations must be made new. The world life and international relations must be shot through with ideals and the spirit of Christ. The church of Jesus Christ must break through narrow nationalisms and deadly race antagonisms and like its Lord take the whole world into its heart. Its mission must be to internationalize organized Christianity and to Christianize internationalism.

Spontaneous assurance of moral backing was given to France by the various delegations. In speaking for England Mr. Balfour said, "It is the cause for which the British Empire fought and in which the British Empire still believes. We lost nearly 1,000,000 men on the field of battle, but we don't grieve over the sacrifice. If that lust should again threaten the peace and independence of our neighbor, how would it be possible that our sympathies once so warmly extended should become cold and we, who have done so much for liberty, see it perish before making another sacrifice?"

Senator Schanzes of Italy said, "The problem is not a simple one and must be considered as a whole. It must be considered at no far distant future. Its solution is essential to world, as well as European peace."

Secretary Hughes voiced America's feelings in the words, "No words ever spoken by France have fallen on deaf ears in the United States. The heart of America was thrilled by her valor and her sacrifice, and the memory of her stand for liberty is imperishable in this country, devoted to the institutions of liberty. There is no moral isolation for the defenders of liberty and justice."

The first reaction to Mr. Briand's appeal was that the problem which he pushed out into the arena was of such magnitude that the conference would be compelled to side-step it and do nothing but assure France of moral support. An additional difficulty lay in the fact that many of the nations which have large land armies are not represented in this conference.

In the world today 8,000,000 men are under arms with 25,000,000 reserves. The total land forces of the nine nations who have representation in this conference are 3,729,300 mobilized troops and 11,070,675 reserves. Thus this conference is not representative when it comes to dealing with the limitation of land armament, a question which is so vital to the world's peace.

A more mature reaction, however, is asserting itself. It is taking the shape of a strongly expressed hope that before this conference closes an effort will be made to arrange for a future conference to deal with this complicated problem. If this conference makes good in limiting naval armament such a conference will undoubtedly be called. In that case the nations not represented here will be invited to participate.

At this stage President Harding's hand is in evidence. Just as the land disarmament issue was slipping out of sight he pulled it back into the limelight by publicly suggesting the holding of a series of world parleys for the consideration of world problems. He has not fully outlined his plan, but the fundamental idea seems to be to bring Germany into this association of nations and induce her to co-operate in giving France adequate guarantees. Thus France would be enabled, without fear, to reduce her army and open the way for the general limitation of land armament by international co-operation. Just what form this association would take is a matter of much speculation, but that the President is earnestly seeking a solution along this line is very evident.

This move on the part of the President has met with a hearty response especially on the part of Italy and Japan, both of whom are vitally interested in land establishment. Senator Schanzes speaking for Italy says, "We cannot but greet with greatest satisfaction the announcement given by President Harding to representatives of the press that it would be his intention to promote yearly conferences for a free co-operation among the nations for the purpose of discussing together questions of universal interest." Vice-Minister Hanihara of the Japanese delegation endorses the President's plan saying, "Japan has come to this conference in a spirit of candor prepared to discuss all matters so that causes of future misunderstanding may be reduced to a minimum. It may be impossible to conclude all things at this session. New problems may arise. It goes without saying that in any future conferences suggested by President Harding Far Eastern questions may logically find their place for deliberation. In this event I personally think Japan will be found ready to take part in the great object of maintaining a harmonious co-operation of the powers for world peace."

CHINA'S EMANCIPATION

The adoption of Mr. Root's four resolutions by the conference carried with it a promise of future action with respect to China's territorial and political sovereignty. The conference has not been slow to fulfill that promise. One of China's demands was that extraterritoriality be abolished and that foreigners living within her borders be amenable to the jurisdiction of Chinese courts. After full consideration of this demand the conference voted to agree in principle and to appoint a commission of international jurists whose duty it shall be to examine whether conditions in China are such as to justify China's claims that legal rights and property of foreigners are safe under Chinese judicial administration. It is also authorized to make suggestions to China helping her to attain that state of advancement. This commission to report its findings within a year.

The second concrete matter taken up by the conference is that of restoring to China the control of the postal system within her domain. At present outside nations maintain their own post offices in many parts of China. Japan has 124, most of them in Manchuria. France has thirteen. England has twelve and America has one. In order to remove this infringement of China's administrative integrity a resolution was adopted by all the nine delegations declaring for the relinquishment of all foreign postal privileges in China, probably on Jan. 1, 1923.

China has also demanded tariff autonomy. Under the present system the powers determine the tariff which China may impose on her imports, and her customs are administered by foreigners. A sub-committee has been appointed to study the matter of giving China control of her own tariff administration and will bring in recommendations in due time.

The question of withdrawing foreign troops from China and abandoning foreign telegraph, radio and police wire systems has won adherents in principle, but the details have yet to be worked out. There has been much speculation as to what attitude Japan would take when in the course of the discussions this question was reached. Prince Tokugawa cleared the atmosphere by saying that "Japan intends to abolish the system under which Japanese troops are in China as soon as possible." This would seem to mean the withdrawal of Japan's troops when this conference has reached a satisfactory solution of China's problems.

OPTIMISM ON THE UP GRADE

The section of the press that is streaked with yellow is endeavoring to discredit the conference and minimize its epoch-making work. Glaring headlines of "crisis" and "conflict" and "deadlock" stare newspaper readers in the face. In the meantime the delegates serenely and optimistically go on sawing wood. The result is that never in all history has an international diplomatic gathering accomplished such far-reaching and constructive work in so brief a time.

Secretary Hughes speaking of the work accomplished on the Far Eastern questions said, "I think I am justified in saying that our expectations with respect to the expedition and thoroughness of our consideration of these matters have already been more than realized."

Prince Tokugawa the other day expressed himself to me as highly pleased with the progress that is being made and hopeful of big results. Baron Kanda said that the progress made by the conference was "gratifying—simplicity, honor and honesty seemed to characterize the whole procedure."

Gordian knots still wait to be untied, but it is a real soul tonic and strengthens one's confidence in humanity to see the world's best brains, with a faith that is fine and a daring that is divine, tackling the task of world reconstruction on principles approximating those laid down by the Prince of Peace.

Baptist Status and Prospects in Denmark

"Baptists have to battle on two fronts at the same time, one against sin and the world and the devil and one against those to whom they would fain be friends and allies."

By PETER OLSEN

IT has seemed to me that my first letters to THE BAPTIST ought to contain a general view of the land and the people and of Baptist life and work in Denmark. This I shall try to give.

The country consists of a peninsula, Jutland, two large islands, Seeland and Funen, and many smaller ones, an area of 43,000 square kilometers. There are no mountains, only rounded hills and valleys and plains with luxuriant beechwoods amid the smiling fields, chattering brooks and, on the peninsula, several stretches of beach, just enough to add a few touches of gravity to the otherwise too smiling features.

The population numbers 3,268,000, one-half of whom are farmers, not without repute in the world for general culture and for their produce of butter and pork and eggs. Of the rest, 700,000 are claimed by the beautiful capital, Copenhagen.

Religion, I am sorry to own, is officially monopolized by a Lutheran state-church. But in justice it must be added, first, that the constitution of the kingdom provides the full right for every citizen to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and secondly, that inside the state-church there are a large number of sincere believers in Christ, most of whom belong to a movement called the "Inner Mission," which means a mission work inside the church, in distinction from a foreign mission. They insist upon being called "a work" and not "a party." A number of state-church ministers identify themselves with the movement, and besides, a large number of lay-workers are employed. On Sept. 13, last, this large and influential body celebrated its fiftieth anniversary.

The Grundtvig Movement

Another large and, especially in well-to-do farmer circles, influential religious movement is named after its founder, N. F. S. Grundtvig. I shall not at this time endeavor to describe it, but reserve this as well as other details concerning the religious state of the Danish people, for future letters. Let me only add that the "Inner Mission" people believe in Christ exactly as a Baptist does, and that I have no reason to say that they are not as sincere followers of the Lord as are genuine Baptists. Still they hate us most heartily because of our attitude toward infant baptism.

So much concerning religious life inside the state-church. Of free evangelical churches in Denmark there are the Baptists (4,913), the Methodists (4,054) and a small body of Swedish origin, called the "Free Mission"; in addition the Salvation Army has for many years been working in Denmark.

From the above it will appear that religious life in Denmark to a large extent is confined within the borders of the state-church, and that at least the Baptists have to battle on two fronts at the same time, one against sin and the world and the devil, and one against those of whom they would fain be friends and allies, could they do it without betraying precious divine truth.

The history of the Baptists of Denmark took its beginning in 1839, in which year a small company of believers living in Copenhagen, eleven in all, were baptized by J. G. Oncken, pastor of the Baptist Church in Hamburg, and were organized into a Baptist Church. They were not the fruits of any Baptist work. They had arrived at Baptist views solely by studying their New Testament. They did not even know that any other person in the world but themselves entertained such views before Köbner from Hamburg, who had heard about them, visited them and explained the way of God more fully to them. From this small beginning Baptist principles spread quite rapidly. During the first years there was some persecution until in 1849 a liberal constitution, and with it liberty of conscience, was secured. By 1864 the total membership had grown to about 1600.

But the one great want of the young Baptist churches in Denmark was educated leaders. Julius Köbner was such a man. He was by birth a Jew, born in Denmark and converted and baptized in Hamburg. He became pastor of the Copenhagen church from 1865. His disciple and successor, M. Larson, a great preacher and leader, was also well educated. But outside the capital the leaders were

Pay His Dues, and See Him Smile

Is it the custom of your church to gladden the heart of your pastor at Christmas? Have you thought what you will do this year? We can tell you something that he would appreciate greatly as a Christmas present, namely: pay his dues for the first year's membership in the Retiring Pension Fund of this Board. Think what it will mean for your pastor to receive notice that you have placed in your church budget the annual payment of his pension dues or that at least you will pay for the first year of membership. Scores of pastors tell us how much they desire to become members but are not able to pay the dues the first year. The Board plans to reduce materially the dues after the first year and following years of membership. This gift will start the preparation for a fund which will save him anxiety and add comfort to his whole life. He will be a stronger man by reason of such gift.

Every Baptist minister ought to be a member. The General Board of Promotion is so deeply concerned that it has made this action the third objective for every church in the Northern Baptist Convention in the current year. We should wisely help all Baptist ministers to escape poverty in old age. They should receive pensions when they are no longer able to render self-sacrificing labor for the Church of Christ. The church should at least be as considerate of her workers as are great business institutions.

Christmas is not far off, write us at once for full particulars. A little planning will enable you to cheer your pastor by conferring a lasting benefit upon him.

E. T. TOMLINSON,
Executive Secretary, Ministers and Missionaries' Benefit Board.

all of them uneducated lay preachers, devoted and able men indeed, but as the condition of the churches proved, unable to lead them on to new conquests. This state of things lasted until 1883 when for the first time the Baptists of Denmark came into relation with the American Baptists.

A number of young preachers were invited over to be educated at the seminary in Morgan Park, Ill., where a Danish professor, N. P. Jensen, was the leader of a Danish-Norwegian department for churches of those nationalities in America. And at the same time financial support to the churches in Denmark was granted by the American Baptist Missionary Union, with a view to the appointment of those brethren when they had finished their studies.

The first to return of those young preachers was Rev. August Broholm, at present pastor of the Danish Baptist church in Storden, Minn. I well remember the impression I received of the first sermon from him which I heard; a clear and orderly presentation of gospel truth, genuine enthusiasm for the work of the Lord and for the salvation of souls, a bright and hopeful assurance of progress for the Baptist cause in Denmark, were its most conspicuous traits. After him came a number of young brethren, with a diversity of gifts and of abilities, but all having had the privilege of an education for their high calling, and all being enabled, by the support from the Missionary Union to their respective churches, to give their whole time and energy to the work. The tangible results to the Danish Baptist churches were, in fifteen years, from the beginning of 1886 to the end of the century, 3,578 baptisms and an increase in membership from 2,174 to 3,901.

Nearly Doubled in Six Years

During the first fifteen years of the new century the numerical growth was but slight, but to one who has known the Baptists of Denmark for about a generation those years stand out as a period of singular growth in maturity spiritually as well as otherwise. Since 1915 the membership has increased again to not far from 5,000, and there is at the present time a great willingness among the people in general to listen to the proclamation of the gospel, and very little prejudice against Baptists. Indeed more doors are open to us than we are able to enter.

Now I might enlarge upon the different lines of Baptist work in Denmark at the present time, and I should like to do it; but being an editor myself I can imagine how the editor of THE BAPTIST would feel if I did. So I shall refrain, and only add, in closing: We have learned from the past that the only religious work which succeeds in Denmark is solid work. Whether we are doing such work as ought to be done, I shall not decide. But we try to do it. And we look upon the new and more intimate connection with American Baptists as God's way of enforcing Baptist work in Denmark just at the time when such an enforcement seemed indispensable. Gistrup, Denmark.

A Picture Story of the Fellowship Shipment

The S. S. "Esthonia" of the Baltic American Line just before sailing Nov. 23 with nearly three-fifths of its regular cargo space filled with clothing, shoes, blankets, soap and other supplies for distribution in Poland, Latvia, Esthonia, Lithuania and Russia. Supplies for distribution in Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Germany were sent on another vessel—the "Oropesa" of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company. A small shipment for France is being sent on a third vessel. The "Esthonia" does not discharge cargo at any of the ports on the western coast of Europe.

In this way the heavy bales of compressed clothing and other supplies were lowered into the hold of the S. S. "Esthonia."

A few of the 1400 heavy bales that were placed aboard the "Esthonia" alone. Some of these bales weighed 225 pounds or more.

A few of the many barrels of soap and toys shipped to European countries in the movement to "Fill a Ship in Fellowship."

A sample bale of clothing for children on exhibition in the rooms of the Foreign Mission Society in New York. This bale contained 958 separate articles, including waists, bloomers, towels, stockings, caps, etc.

Delivering the Goods

Mr. Lipphard was to be met at Hamburg by representatives from Czecho-Slovakia, Austria and Germany to be instructed regarding the supplies that were shipped on the S. S. Oropesa. At Danzig he is to be met by Rev. K. W. Strzelec and others who will take charge of the supplies for Poland, on the S. S. Esthonia. At Libau he is to be met by Rev. J. A. Frey of Latvia and representatives of Baptists from Esthonia and Lithuania. He is to be met there as well by a representative of the American Relief Administration, who will take charge of the bales and barrels designated for distribution in Russia.

The American Baptist Relief Warehouse at 348 East 23rd Street, New York City, is being held open for several weeks longer than was originally intended. All supplies received after this date will be sent through the American Relief Administration, Mr. Herbert Hoover, chairman, for distribution in Russia. This arrangement will enable churches and individuals who have been late in sending in their gifts to do something for Russia.

The Book of Remembrance for 1922

Lest we forget, right now when we most need to know, the name of one of the most beautiful and most significant birthday or Christmas gifts that any one could possibly give a friend, it should be mentioned that the Book of Remembrance for 1922, A Cycle of Birthday Prayers for Our Workers at Home and Abroad, is now ready for our use.

The most worldly friend you have, church member or not, will welcome one of these dainty remembrances, as attractive as any Christmas booklet that you could find in any shop, with its soft blue and old gold cover, its half tone reproductions of masterpieces of religious art, and its verses of Scripture for every day. The book of Remembrance contains all these, besides the names of all our missionaries, foreign, home, state, and city, and of our university pastors, arranged according to their birthdays, that all may pray for them, on that day. Don't hesitate to give the Book of Remembrance to any one. You may be giving him or her something far more important than the book itself—you may be giving the habit of prayer, lost for many years.

And consider—an ordinary gift is just a present from you to one other person. But the Book of Remembrance is also a present to every one of our Baptist Missionaries and university pastors, wherever they may be. It isn't often that you can give a present to so many scores of people for the sum of twenty-five cents.

To secure the Book of Remembrance for 1922, send your name and address with 25 cents to the Literature Department of the General Board of Promotion, at any of the following addresses: 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City; 125 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois; 700 Ford Building, Boston, Massachusetts; and 504 Columbia Building, Los Angeles, California.

More Echoes from the Jubilee

By HELEN HUDSON.

Still we have echoes of Jubilee meetings all over the world. Because all the people who wished to celebrate the jubilee were so widely scattered accounts of some of the meetings have been a long time coming to us.

An account of a series of celebrations in Balasore, Bengal Orissa, has just reached us. Formal greetings have come from the Baptist Woman's Missionary Society of Midnapore, Jellasure and Balasore. These are of especial interest to those who have known one of their own daughters Khanto Bala Rai, since she has been in this country.

Miss Mabel Rix Long writes that Mrs. Esther Rai, mother of Khanto Bala Rai, was present at the Midnapore meeting and gave an interesting talk about her daughter and the daughter's journey to America.

Miss Amy Coe writes "The last of the meetings was in Jellasure, the station where Miss Barnes is working. The community is very small; so small that though every woman was present the whole number was not more than twenty-five. We had the pictures in the convention number of Missions. As I looked at the picture of the great meeting in Boston and contrasted it with the little group on the floor of that tiny Jellasure church it did seem wonderful that the same central thought was the inspiration of both gatherings. In the closing minutes of thanksgiving prayer the women voiced a bit of the thrill too. Ours was only a tiny echo of the big meeting; but we did have the foreign guests, introduced by name. Each told her life story and marked out her journey on the map. In Khanto's case we all talked about her and her family. Some of her relatives were present and every one remembers her wonderful father. They were pleased that she told the story of his life. They reminisced a bit about the early days of the mission. Our banquet consisted of rice pounded and popped with delicious cocoa nut sweets. Would you have liked to have been with us?"

Thirty rupees accompanied the letter of greeting as the jubilee gifts of the Baptist women of Bengal Orissa.

Baptist Gains

In 1920 American Baptists turned a loss of 11,000 members in 1919, into a gain of 129,000. They now number over 7,700,000, which is about the same as the Methodists. In Great Britain and Ireland they amount to 400,000, and elsewhere in Europe nearly 230,000. Canada and Australia contain about 175,000. On mission fields are 320,000. The total of approximately nine million represents a gain of 330 per cent. within a hundred years. However inaccurate detailed figures may be, and however inadequately statistics reflect the spread of the Christian spirit, such a showing gives encouragement to those who are pinning their faith to a coming triumph of evangelical religion.—The Congregationalist.

As Illinois Sees the Issue

At the Illinois Baptist Convention, held at Rockford in October, two significant placards hung on the walls of the auditorium of the First Baptist Church in which the convention met. The first one read thus:

INDUSTRY SHOULD BE A FORM OF SOCIAL SERVICE, NOT A DE-VICE FOR PRIVATE GAIN

And the second, a quotation from Prof. Albion W. Small, was like unto it, namely: "WE MUST SOMEHOW SECURE THIS FUNDAMENTAL CONCEPTION, THAT BUSINESS THEORY MUST BE SHIFTED FROM A PROPERTY BASIS TO A SERVICE BASIS."

France Must Lead, We Must Follow

France has now colonies with a population of over 60,000,000. She must become the leader in their education in genuine Christian civilization. It is compulsory for missionaries to teach French in the schools in the colonies. Therefore, the French Missionary Society must assume the principal burden in this work. Fortunately, almost all of the French Protestant churches are united in one missionary society. They have sent one out of every twelve of their pastors to work in the colonies—a much larger proportion than any American denomination. They have already doubled their contributions of before the war, giving this year over 2,000,000 francs instead of the 1,000,000 which were given prior to the war. But to begin to meet this crisis the Missionary Society must have at least 3,000,000 francs per annum. The Protestants of America should gladly contribute this third million of francs—only approximately $80,000.00 at the present rate of exchange.

The Book of Remembrance is Ready

The Book of Remembrance for 1922 is out and is ready for distribution. It is all that has been promised. Size is convenient, all our missionaries are listed by their birthday dates, every day has a suggested topic for prayer, the pictures are an aid to devotion, and the whole book of 104 pages is most beautiful and worthy of its subject.

A great many advance orders have been received, and you will need to order promptly to be sure of getting your copies.

Two suggestions: Many Sunday School teachers are ordering copies to give to the members of their classes. A large number of copies are being ordered for Christmas gifts.

Send 25 cents to the Literature Department of The General Board of Promotion, at any of the following addresses:

276 Fifth Avenue, New York; 700 Ford Bldg., Boston; 125 No. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 504 Columbia Bldg., Los Angeles.

Coal and Coke

The Geological Survey says: "The depression in the coke industry throws a flood of light on the absence of demand for coal. The coke industry, which normally takes 15 per cent of the coal supply of the country, is now consuming coal at the rate of less than one-third of its requirements during the periods of greatest business activity. In 1918, for example, the industry was consuming every month 5,000,000 tons of raw coal more than at present."

Rockefeller to the Rescue in France

An announcement of great importance for strengthening the hands of French Protestantism has just been made. Under certain conditions it assures to the heroic Churches of France, all but shattered by the war, an asset of far-reaching significance for the future.

The announcement concerns an action of the Executive Committee of the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial, which has resolved that a sum not to exceed $100,000 be appropriated to the Commission on Relations with France and Belgium, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, this amount to be paid on the following terms and provisions: Toward a budget which for the current year's needs exceeds $400,000 the Memorial will give one dollar for every three dollars contributed by others, it being understood that already $96,000 has been received toward the above total of $400,000. Payments of not less than $25,000 from the Memorial will be made on certification that the offsetting amounts have been secured in cash by the Commission.

One Farm Out of Three Has Motor Car

Of the 6,448,366 farms in the United States, 1,979,564, or 30.7 per cent, reported having automobiles to the number of 2,146,512, according to the Census Bureau. Motor trucks were reported on 131,551 farms in 1920, or about two farms out of every 100 in the United States as a whole. The number of motor trucks on these farms was 139,169.

Wheat Carry-Over

The Bureau of Markets and Crop Estimates, United States Department of Agriculture, estimates the carry-over of wheat in the United States on July 1, of the past three years as follows: 1921, 88,786,000 bushels; 1920, 108,374,000 bushels; 1919, 48,129,000 bushels.

Spoke to One Thousand Chinese Laborers

In a recent letter, Rev. B. L. Baker, Chaochowfu, China, says:

"We are on terms of fellowship with all classes from the officials to the working classes. The provincial Governor has sent a gift in appreciation of services rendered in connection with military difficulties in the autumn, the local Chamber of Commerce have a banner to give us for services we have been allowed to render them, and I just a night or two ago was invited to speak to the Labor Society of the city, where some 1000 men were gathered. Our schools are growing faster than we can find teachers and accommodations. In the midst of the social changes in progress, we have our opportunity, for the Chinese are ready, multitudes of them, to listen to the presentation we make of truth. They know now the church is serving the people. They know many of its teachings are good. They wonder if it offers the solution of their problems. They feel we have shown we are their friends. So we have our opportunity."

Lumber Production in 1920

The United States Forest Service reports that 927 large mills, representing about one-half of the annual lumber production of the United States, cut 16,709,115,000 board feet in 1920, compared to 16,254,812,000 board feet in 1919. The total cut by all mills in 1919, as reported by the Bureau of Census, was 34,550,000,000 board feet. The Forest Service concludes that the 1920 cut was approximately the same as in 1919.

No dout Teecher youf heard of my father being profesir of fizzlelofy in the kolege here. Well, hes a very cool clever man who belevs in devluping oridginalty, witch is y I was aloud to grow up natchrul. My mother is not fizzlelofickle she is convenshunul and when she found my father had such peeqlur tearies about us she cride and said Alfius deer at leest let me have 1 of my own chilrun to bring up centsabul. So he let her have Annabel. Annabels my twin sister. Shes a gurl and is being brot up centsabul by mother wile I am brot up natchrul by father. Annabel has a nawfle time off it for shes gotto lurn thinks frum books like joggerfree and speling and pomes and histry fax. She thinks there soon wont be any more room for fax incider hed. fathers eggspearmint with me lets me lurn evrythink ass the spirut moves, witch means I rite my own pomes with my own natchrul way off speling, and I pik up joggerfree and lots of fax wile wawking bak and 4th to kolege with father evry morening and afternune. Whenever uther profesirs joint us they laffed, but genrully said hes a nawfly oridgenul tipe Alfius and a big credit to fizzlelofy. (But I notis there wifes woodnt let them edyoukate there own boys my way.)

Well Teecher this kep up all rite untill febrary when mother gave a fakultea tea one afternune for the kolege profesirs trusteeas and so 4th. Annabel wore her blew dress with roofles and they warsht me behind my ears untill I was soar. But I wore my sunday pants so then I felt better.

I guess they drest us urly to get us done, for then they chined the silver spunes some more and lited lots of candels all over, rite in brode daylite, 2. It lookt nice, but cueer. So Annabel and I got qrius and ast all about this tea. Tea in a teapott we new about. its wet and brown and a nawfle drink. You spit it out when knowbodys looking. But a fakultea tea means filling lots and lots of teapotts, so profesirs and wifes and trusteeas and wifes can come in caridges and oughtos to drink our tea from 4.. 2.. 6 mother said. Y do you say those numbers mother said I said if there going to feal as hungry as me youd better say 1-8-4-2.

I wood have ast more but she said 4 goodnesakes go and sit kuilet someware, chilrun.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

So Annabel lift up her blew roofles and we set on the seller steps and I said its a nawful think to have a tea.

Annabel do you no what it sounds like to me.

No said Annabel.

Well it sounds like a fewnrul to me I said.

A fewnrul, skueeled Annabel, and grabbed me tite.

Yes I said isnt there candels lited and isnt there kurtens all pulled down and isnt caridges and oughtos going to stop in front of our house just like when Mister Smith dide.

O cride Annabel its a nawfle sad think to have a fewnrul in a famby Percy. Witch off us is it thats ded anyrow said she.

How do I no I said but when Mister Smith dide I said wheres he gone 2 and mother said hes gone to be with God dever deer.

O O O whaled Annabel wile reel teers wet her blew roofles, then its poppa whose ded Percy for I heard him say to mother I wish to goodness this blame tea was all over Sarah, it frightens me to deth.

Well I was stund. If I lost my fizzlelofickle father woodnt I have to lurn fax like Annabel? So I almost cride onto my sunday pants, but 1 of the fizzlelofickle thinks my father has lurnt me is to be cool whatever comes. So altho I side deeply I said Annabel at mister Smiths fewnrul there was a big reeth on the front door. I think its 2 bad father hasn't a reeth.

What kind of a reeth ast Annabel.

Y you no Annabel I said its like a Crissmus reeth only theres pupple viletas at the botom of it and a black sash tide on top of it and you loop it over the doorbel.

O she said how purrfekly luvly cant we put 1 up for poppa rite away.

Y yes I finly said, for down in the seller theres the old holly reeth I saved to play poet with. (Teecher, poets ware reeths on their Ibrows.) But have you a black sash Annabel.

Yes she said and run upstares to get it wile I fisht the old holly reeth from the coal been in the seller, and ript off the red buries. Annabel tide her sash in a big bo and it lookt ass fewnrul as Mister Smiths and she cride on her blew roofles but I said theres no time to lose Annabel havent you any pupple viletas or wite flours I done care witch.

So she found some pail flours off a summer hat and we took our reeth outdoors and hung it over our doorbel just like Mister Smith had his. And the campuss clock struck 4.

Indoors father stood by mother in the parler waiting for peepul to come and all the kurtens were down and candels were burning and he had a nawfle look on his face.

He isnt ded yet said Annabel maybe the peepul wont like to come to a fewnrul and find him standing up and evrythink.

Purrhaps its the fizzlelofickle way to dye I said so we ran unstaes and lookt out the windos.

But it was a disapointing fewnrul. for the caridges and oughtos drove up just like for Mister Smiths only our iaddies wore more silk and fethers on them than his and seemed hapy, witch his hadnt. but when they got ½ up our front wawk they came to a stanstil and lookt awfly cueer, and some of them put there pose into there hancurchufs when they saw the reeth. Then they all got bak into there oughtos and never came in for tea. The ones that came on foot turned and went home, 2.

This is not like Mister Smiths I side. I guess the tea must be awfle cold in the potts.

Annabel cride again on her blew roofles. O I did wont poppa to have a poplar fewnrul she cride.

Just then the campuss clock struk 5 and we saw an ant come up our sidewawk kuikly. Our red ant. And rite away she spoilt the fewnrul by carying the reeth indoors to father and screeming Alfius what does this turrrable reeth mean. knowbody dares come in.

O cride mother we wondered and wondered y peepul were so late. O Alfius this is what comes off your fizzlelofickle eggspearmint on Percy. The boys hopeless, simply hopeless. We are disgraced dever. What will the fakultea and trusteeas think of us now.

But father just laffed and Annabel an I were glad it wasnt his fewnrul so we eggspained evrythink. Quite a few fakulteas and wifes had come in, 2, now that there was no reeth and they laffed till they cride.

So now you no Teecher y Im coming to school. being natchrul is hard on parunts.

The Blue Santa Claus

OF course he ought to have been red, just as red as red could be, with the rosiest of cheeks and the jolliest of smiles. For that is the way Bill and Peggy always pictured him. Yet actually he was blue, just as blue as indigo, and his cheeks looked pale and tired, and there was no smile anywhere on him!

He propped his arms on his knees, and gazed at them mournfully: "The time has come," he groaned, "the time has surely come—I shall have to own up! But I do hope you won't think I'm a fake."

"Oh, no indeed, Santa Claus," they answered politely, but they looked at each other in great surprise. The poor old Dear must certainly be sick.

"The truth of the matter is," he said, "that you folks all think my workshop is up at the North Pole, and that I keep several hundred jolly little elves and gnomes busy all the year round making toys and presents for me to stuff in your stockings on December twenty-fifth. But... But..."

"But what?" Peggy asked, while Bill thought to himself that he never dreamed it was going to be like this to stay awake the night before Christmas to see the jolly old fellow, only to find him blue; blue, blue!

"My dears," he said kindly, "there's trouble in three directions, so I'm going to ask you to please hop into my sleigh and I'll drive you around and show you."

So they hopped! And he bundled them up in great fur robes so that only their little noses were left outside to be nipped in the frosty air. Away they went skidding over the snowy roofs and icy tree-tops, each of them holding one of Santa Claus's hands while he said to them: "Now one of my troubles is this foolishness about elves and gnomes. That is perfect nonsense, my dears, for all my helpers are actual people. Some of them boys and girls just your age. Here we are—you shall see!"

And to their great surprise they found themselves in an enormous factory where people seemed to be making more dolls than you ever dreamed about in your wildest dreams. One man made a plain little head, then zip! he tossed it to another man who painted in eyes and ears and nose and mouth like lightning; zip! and a third man glued on some hair; zip! and a fourth man sewed up a sawdust body; zip! and a fifth person, a woman, stitched the head onto this body; zip! and another woman slipped a skimpy little dress over the doll's head; zip! and a young girl fastened on some tiny boots and laid the doll in a box. And behold, that doll was ready for Christmas! But hundreds of other dolls were also being made, and fingers were flying, flying, flying. There were other rooms where the hair was made into little wigs, where leather was made into little boots, and muslin was cut into little dresses.

"My dears," sighed Santa Claus, "these are my real partners. Without them couldn't leave a single doll in anybody's stocking. And you can see for yourselves that they aren't elves or fairies, but just somebody's ordinary every-day father or mother or sweetheart. There are thousands of others who made the sleds and the horns, the candies and all the toys; and I'm blue because I'm tired of getting all the credit when they do all the work. I simply tote the presents around Christmas Eve, and, of course, that's fun."

Peggy smiled. "You know you're what my mother would call conscientious. Yes, you are! And I love you for being blue over a nice beautiful thing like getting too much praise. But Bill and I will never forget about your partners, never!"

Meanwhile they had dashed over miles and miles of roof and were landing on the Biggest-Department-Store-in-town.

"I have other partners here," sighed Santa Claus, "most people call them Bundle Clerks and Special Delivery Boys. Did you ever see so many packages to be wrapped? Now that's because too many somebodies in town forgot to do their Christmas shopping early, and the provoking part of it is that tomorrow half the people in town will shout: 'Oh see the nice present Santa Claus wrapped up for me!' And you can see for yourself I don't do any wrapping at all, the Bundle Clerks do it all. It makes me blue to get so much credit."

Bill patted him on the arm. "You certainly are awfully generous about it, Santa Claus, and I'll always get my shopping done early, after this!"

Then they flew through the air again, and Santa Claus said dismally: "Here's one of my bluest of blue troubles. Do you see that young lady staring at that perfectly wretched little Christmas tree? Well, tell me what's the matter with it?"

Peggy cocked her head on one side very wisely: "As a pine tree, it's very nice, indeed," she said, "but as a Christmas tree it's a perfect failure, because it hasn't got a single thing on it."

"Exactly!" shouted the dear old fellow, "and now tell me why there aren't presents on it. . . ."

"P-perhaps y-you f-forgot," Bill stammered, hating to seem so very impolite.

Santa Claus looked utterly shocked: "What, you blame me? ME!! Why, my dear child, I've never forgotten anybody in all my life; but you know it's a very strict unbreakable rule that I simply can't leave a present anywhere unless some one makes an arrangement with me—some one like a parent, or a guardian, or a friend. They tell me what I'm to leave, and leave it. It's lots of fun; only of course the blue part of it is that sometimes nobody makes any arrangements with me, and a whole lot of people can't receive presents. I'm in honor bound to observe that rule—it's awful, simply awful. Now tell me, don't you recognize that young lady sitting by the empty Christmas tree?"

"She does look familiar," Bill said, "yet I don't seem to know her name."

"Yes, you do, too," said Santa Claus. "She's your Miss City Missionary, and she supposed the people in your church were surely going to send trimmings for her tree, and presents for her little foreign friends that live all around her. She left it to you to make all the arrangements."

"And—we—forgot," sighed Peggy, "yes, my Sunday school class promised to do something about it, but not one of us remembered."

Santa Claus shivered: "Bur-r-r! You make me chilly, my dears, for you're my partners, you see, but unlike those dear other partners of mine in the factories and the stores you don't work. You just expect me to stuff your stockings with goodies. And it isn't only the two of you, there are thousands of other Baptist boys and girls, as good as gold, all of them, only they forget to be my partners. And meanwhile poor Miss City Missionary waits, and Miss Indian Missionary waits, and Miss Cuban Missionary waits, and Miss Alaskan Missionary waits. It makes me blue to think of the missionaries who are waiting this very minute. I simply am at my wits' end to know what to do."

Bill had a suggestion: "Why don't you skip all of us this year, every single forgetful Baptist child, and give our presents to those nice waiting missionaries for their foreign children?"

Santa Claus looked horrified: "But I am in honor bound to give as your parents make arrangements with me. They would lose all faith in my honesty if I did anything so rash."

Peggy groaned: "We're such very old Baptists, too, and we've known about Christmas for years and years and years; I suppose they are very new Baptists, or maybe they're not Christians at all yet, and they're probably expecting us to be really interested, as you are."

"That's it," said Santa Claus, "of course they think you're real partners, not fake ones."

"No wonder you're so blue, so awfully blue," mumbled Bill, and to his surprise found Peggy shaking him.

"I'm not blue, at all, Bill, and it's Sunday morning. Hurry and get up!"

"Isn't it Christmas morning?" Bill gasped, rubbing his eyes.

"Christmas? Mercy—no, not for seven long endless days," sighed Peggy forlornly.

But Bill sat bolt upright in bed and shouted: "Hurrah! Hurrah! Then there won't have to be any blue Santa Claus this year! We can do a lot in seven days, Peggy, an awful lot."

And they did.

But I wonder if you won't please remember that you're Santa Claus's partner, too!

International Uniform Lesson for December 25

THE VISIT OF THE WISE MEN
Matt. 2:1-12. Golden Text, Matt. 2:11

BY JOHN A. EARL

The Lesson Text

The evident purpose of Matthew's Gospel is to tell the story of Jesus, the King of the Jews. It was written by a Jew for Jews. The Old Testament predictions about the Messiah are quoted liberally and the fulfilment of them either implied or expressed. The writer evidently had in mind that prophecy which speaks of the gathering of the Gentiles unto his light when he told this striking incident of the wise men from the East.

The Lesson Taught

The wise men and the wisdom of man, the wise men and the word of God, and the wise men and the worship of Christ are three suggestions arising out of the lesson text which may aid the teacher in presenting this lesson to his pupils.

The Wisdom of Man

The wisdom of man is the gift of God. Silently the wise men steal into the narrative of Matthew and just as silently steal out. They appear upon the horizon for a moment and are gone. Who they were, where they came from, the number of them, their station in life are hidden in mystery. They were not Jews. Evidently they were astrologers who read the stars and as such they were the forerunners of modern, devout scientists. They were men of culture and of wealth perhaps as their gifts to the infant Christ imply, and they had heard somewhere of the Messianic hope of the Jews as the question, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" indicates. But aside from this meager knowledge of divine revelation they were dependent upon their own wisdom. Wonderful as their own wisdom was for that time it was not sufficient without revelation to lead them to the King. This is the lesson which human wisdom needs to learn in every generation. Knowledge is power; but mere scientific knowledge apart from faith in the will of God revealed in his word and in Christ does not generate enough power to lift the soul out of its sins and give it the hope of immortality. "Let knowledge grow from more to more," as Tennyson sang; but let it be accompanied by the same good sense that characterized the wise men who sought to augment their own inadequate wisdom by coming to the source of revelation as found in the inspired prophets and apostles of the Bible.

The Word of God

The works and Word of God are never in conflict. The star and the Scriptures always agree. If there is any apparent disagreement it is due to faulty interpretation. The star led the wise men to Jerusalem; the Scriptures led them to Bethlehem. The same God governs both star and Scripture. The scientist has no trouble with the star; his trouble begins with the Scriptures because he cannot quite see how the God who made so many stars of such incomprehensible magnitude and fixed them in their orbits by eternal laws could belittle himself to inspire an ordinary man to write predictions in a book like the Bible. A certain type of theologian has no trouble with the Scriptures; his trouble begins with the star because he is determined to crowd the measureless universe into the narrow confines of his interpretation of Scripture. Both need the temper and spirit of the wise men. They followed the star as far as it would lead them, thanking God for its light; but they did not stop their quest when the star failed them. Eagerly seeking additional light they inquired where the king of the Jews was to be born, and did not rest until the Scriptures were opened and read. With the light of revelation to guide them Bethlehem was soon reached and there again the star appeared shining over the birthplace of the king thus symbolizing the essential unity of Scripture and science.

The Worship of Christ

This after all is the climax of the story of the wise men. It was no idle curiosity or speculative interest that prompted their long journey to find him that was born King of the Jews. Tired of the existing world-order or disorder, they longed in common with multitudes of others for the golden age of human brotherhood. The promised King of the Jews offered hope in the realization of their desire. Old commentators used to say that the gifts laid at his feet indicated the faith of the wise men—gold as an evidence of their faith in his royalty, frankincense as an evidence of their faith in his deity, and myrrh as an evidence of their faith in his atoning death; but modern Bible students cannot accept this charming fancy as good exegesis. The gifts were evidences of the sincerity of the worship of the wise men and a proof of their enthusiasm in finding the object of their long and unwearyed search.

Worship without giving is hypocrisy. The very idea of worship is so involved with the thought of giving that even the heathen in his blindness who bows down to wood and stone does not think of worshipping without a gift. The universal custom of Christmas gifts is based upon the first gifts presented to the infant Jesus. It is well to have one day in the year devoted to the spirit of giving in order that the principle of giving may not lose its emphasis. It was a rare privilege the wise men enjoyed that day so long ago in Bethlehem; but it is no richer than our privilege today. Did not Jesus say, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me?"

Making 100% Christians

BY A. EDITH MEYERS

IS THERE a 100 per cent Christian in your church? If so, how can you pick him out? By his prayer-meeting talks? By his long prayers? Possibly; but the 100 per cent or the approximately 100 per cent Christian has other distinguishing characteristics. Four of them stand out for all to see:

He attends church; he assumes his share of responsibility; he works co-operatively in local church and denominational enterprises; he has a world vision.

It is the task of the church, especially through its teaching agencies, to develop Christians in whom these characteristics are prominent. It cannot be done as long as emphasis is laid only upon the Great Invitation: COME—LEARN (Matt. 12:28). Equal emphasis must be placed upon the Great Commission: GO—TEACH (Matt. 28).

Baptists are blessed with a great wealth of instructional material for all church groups, on both Biblical and missionary lines. The new Keystone Graded Courses are both evangelistic and missionary. The "Sunday School Worker" carries a department of missionary education; the columns of our denominational journals and Sunday-school periodicals are rarely devoid of at least a touch of missionary information. Our excellent department of missionary education is furnishing to all Sunday schools that will use them thrilling missionary stories for all departments. The Children's World Crusade programs and leaflets stand out pre-eminently when compared with the publications of other denominations. As for Missions! Every missionarily-intelligent Baptist swells up with pride at every thought or mention of it.

In view of our wonderful denominational resources, it is scarcely credible that there are thousands of churches and Sunday schools who are content if a reasonable number of their members measure up like this:

Attend church occasionally; assume responsibility sometimes; work spasmodically in the local church; vision limited to local church interests.

Is it not time that we make the most of our educational resources and with prayer and consecration set ourselves to the task of training a generation of Christians who will, because we have helped them to achieve a world vision, assume their full share of responsibility in all Christian enterprises, and who will work co-operatively for all Christian enterprises.

Topic for December 25

THE GREAT COMMISSIONER

Luke 2:41-52; Matt. 28:16-20

(Conquest Meeting)

"Why is it that you have been searching for me?" He replied: "Did you not know that it is my duty to be engaged upon my Father's business?"

Christmas time again! How quickly the days, weeks and months have passed by! In a few days the pages of the book of 1921 will be closed. Just how does the record read as I contemplate the meaning of Christmas? What has my life meant to the world?

1. A backward look. The incident related in the lesson took place nearly 2,000 years ago. It is a glimpse into the life of the Master when just a lad, but it shows the bent of his life. From the temple he went home with his parents and "advanced in vision and stature, and in favor with God and man." In later years he takes up the task for which he came into the world, a task the completion of which sends him to Calvary. How the needs of the world bore upon his great soul! The sins of humanity broke his heart. Tired and weary we see him staggering toward yonder hill, bearing the cross on which his body is to be broken. And what for?

2. Up to 1921. From the days of Christ to our day Christianity has had a somewhat checkered career. How soon the Christians of the early centuries drifted away from the ideals of their Lord! Formalism soon takes hold and crowds out the spirit. There is an early alliance between church and state. Down the centuries we have what is called the period of the Dark Ages. It was a dark age. Evangelical religion seemed to be lost from the earth. Then comes the renaissance of learning and religion. Martin Luther and others break away from the Roman power and begin to preach evangelical religion. Later we have the rise of denominations and the beginnings of the modern missionary movement. How derelict we have been in carrying forward the program of Jesus! Even now, it is quite difficult in many places to arouse our people to the crying needs of the world, and yet they claim to be Christian!

3. The inevitable now. We must say these are dark ages. In some places sin and vice rule. Wrong seems to be in the lead. The big international and national problems are unsettled. Some seem to find comfort in such conditions because is somehow just fits in with their theory of things. To one who has given his life over to the Master for service in his great redemptive program, instead of comfort, there is grief. But, there is hope. Soon after the great body of Northern Baptists launched their new world program a pastor wrote to our office: "The New World

This page is for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Movement is of the devil. The very word new signifies that it is of the devil." As if the devil was the only one who has a worthwhile program. Fortunately there are only a few misguided brethren who hold such opinions. Northern Baptists somehow feel that the Great Commissioner has spoken to them and they are advancing.

4. A look ahead. We face 1922 a bit baffled, but not defeated. We are sure that Christ is leading. With the grand old missionary of the cross we can say "The prospects are as bright as the promise of God." To beat a retreat would be to fail our Commissioner. To turn to the right or to the left would mean a side-stepping of the great tasks of the day. There is only one way for us and that way is forward! Our slogan in past years has been "Back to Christ." For 1922 it should be "Forward with Christ." He is saying to us in no uncertain terms, "Remember, I am with you always, day by day, until the close of the age." With the passion of a Knox: "Give me Scotland or I die" we will win. The Lord is leading on!

NORTH DAKOTA NEWS

There is reason to believe that the young people's work in North Dakota is making progress. Last summer the supposition that young people would not attend the state convention was exploded. A large percentage of the delegates at Minot were of this class. An even greater surprise was in store for those who look with suspicion upon the younger generation in our churches, when more than 100 young people registered for a post-convention of two days. The attendance at this first distinctly young people's convention was very steady. So successful was this meeting that they petitioned the state convention to arrange for a similar gathering next year. Another forward step was the making of a committee which should study the possibility of holding a summer assembly in this state in the near future. The convention department of religious education has already taken step in this direction. In the near future an interdenominational committee will meet to discuss the advisability and possibility of holding an interdenominational young people's gathering, which shall take the form of an assembly. There is reason to believe that at least several of the denominations will co-operate in such a movement.

Organization and Extension

These steps of progress will be more certain because of the perfecting of the organization of the State B. Y. P. U. The committee on constitution has already drafted such a document, and it will be presented for action at the next annual meeting. A further step was the organization of the associational B. Y. P. U.

It is hoped that these too will be in working order, so that the large program which the young people of the state adopted at the Minot meeting may be assured of success.

Increased Activity

As a result of the Minot meeting there has been noticeable an increased activity in most of the societies which then existed. Three societies have been reorganized and report progress. As far as can be ascertained there has never been a systematic and united attempt made to correlate the state activities and program to that of the B. Y. P. U. A. Now, however, there has been organized a Life Service League which already has an enrollment of more than fifty, and the prospect of adding a score more. Several societies have reported a number of tithers. The Baptist Trained Leaders' Course is under consideration by quite a number. The Quiet Half Hour League is receiving new members in encouraging numbers. Mission study and other special study classes are being organized. During the month of December a state-wide evangelistic campaign is being proposed, whose slogan is "Everyone Win One."

Advance Goals

Several of the goals which have been adopted by the state B. Y. P. U. are as follows: 200 decisions for Christ, fifty life service volunteers (there are now more than sixty), twenty-five special study classes, 200 tither's pledges, 200 Quiet Half-Hour Pledges, twenty-five enrolled in the Baptist Trained Leaders' Course, twenty-five delegates to the next B. Y. P. U. convention at St. Paul.

Fargo in the Lead

The Fargo B. Y. P. U. issues a bi-monthly paper. Topics and leaders are announced. Items of interest in the life of the society and church are published. There are some humorous anecdotes to give spice to life. The idea is not copyrighted, so if you feel like trying the plan, you may do so.

A WINNER!

Dr. F. F. Gibson of Louisville, Kentucky, writes:

"Many thanks for the tracts. We are really making it unpopular in our church for the non-tithers. It does wonders for the finances of the church. Last Sunday week ago we raised over $6,000 in a special offering for the property next door. No trouble at all. You will be glad to know of the growth in all departments of the work. As you know the Sunday-school problem in Louisville is a difficult one. When I came we were running around 300. We have had a steady growth until this fall, when we reached 800 and then we kept on climbing till last Sunday we had 1122. We are now out after 1,500 and then of course we shall go on for 2,000. Last Sunday was the best day of my ministry. We had during the day forty-two professions, fifteen for baptism, eight by letter and I baptized sixteen. House packed and people in the balcony. Of course I am happy. May God bless you in all of your works."

SHALL WE MAKE IT EASIER TO JOIN THE CHURCH?

THE other day a member moved from a village of one church, Baptist, into a town where there are four other churches. He "visited round" for a while, then the Baptist pastor sought an interview.

"Aren't you going to bring your letter and unite with us?" he asked.

"Well, I don't know," the newcomer answered, doubtfully. "I used to think it was mighty hard when a member of another church moved into our village and wanted to join our church, and we wouldn't let him unless he was baptized our way. I guess perhaps I may unite with that church over there on the corner," indicating the direction, "and see how it does things."

"Do you believe that sprinkling is baptism?"

"Oh, no, not for me. But if some one else is satisfied with it, why, I wouldn't quarrel with him."

"More than twenty babies were 'baptized' over in that church last year," the pastor informed him. "Do you think they are fit subjects?"

"No, I don't. But I'll let them settle that for themselves. It's real easy to join that church, and I like the idea. It used to be hard to join ours."

"Well, don't you think it will work a greater hardship on your conscience to accept infant sprinkling as your church practice when you don't believe in it, than to make it necessary for a prospective member to be consistent with his own views of New Testament principles?" was the pastor's inquiry, as he rose to take leave.

This question remains unanswered by the man; but, meantime, ought we to try to make it a little easier to join a Baptist church, despite the principles involved? Are there others who feel like this man does?

THE COMMUNITY BAPTIST CHURCH

AMONG the many criticisms that I have read regarding false faith and practices, I have seen nothing about the so-called "Community Baptist Church." Dr. G. Clifford Cress in his excellent article in THE BAPTIST, Oct. 22, speaks of a community church which is an undenominational movement, and not a "Community Baptist Church." I thought, when I first heard this term, that it was some arrangement for community social service, without a compromise of our distinctive principles, but in this I find I was mistaken. These churches adopt a constitution providing for an affiliated membership of members of other denominations (including Pedo-Baptists) who bring letters which are placed on file to be returned to them when removing elsewhere. These members are FREE expression of one's convictions is dear as life to every Baptist heart. The Baptist method has always been to talk things out face to face, in dependence upon the guidance of God's Spirit and the teaching of his Word. A large majority of those who responded to a recent referendum ask for the Open Forum. The editorial staff has always wished it, believing it necessary in a democratically-organized denomination. None but members in good and regular standing of Baptist churches in the Northern Baptist Convention are expected to contribute to this department. Each writer is responsible for his own utterances. The following rules will be observed.

1. No article must exceed 400 words. The editors will cut copy to that limit in the interest of fair play to all.

2. No attacks upon persons, either directly or by implication, will be allowed.

3. Controversy as such will be avoided, but every man or woman who honestly believes that he has a vital message for the denomination will be given a hearing.

4. Articles which are merely repetitions of arguments previously published will not be used while there is new matter on hand.

5. The editors reserve the right to terminate any particular discussion whenever it seems to them wise to do so.

allowed voting privileges, and the right to hold any office except pastor and deacon or delegate to an association. It seems to me that this is a great innovation, as it compromises our Baptist belief in immersion of believers as the only Christian baptism. It certainly is not in harmony with our time-honored Baptist position and positively has no warrant in Scripture teaching. Furthermore, these are churches receiving missionary support, and this form of organization is proposed and arranged by missionaries under direction of our denominational boards.

I believe in the "New World Movement." To me it is a great thing for our Northern Baptist Convention to raise $100,000 for missions and education. But I believe that every dollar of it should be given to that class of work that is strictly loyal to our Baptist standards and that means loyalty to every Bible truth. We did not make our distinctive principles, but find them already made in the Bible, and we have no choice but to obey. Our country churches are an important part of our work. They need more help, many have been allowed to die for want of sufficient help and encouragement, but we do not need to sacrifice those sacred truths which we hold dear to gain the support of outsiders. If a hundred years ago, when we were a small and insignificant people, we felt the need of loyalty to every Bible truth, how much more now that we have grown strong and wealthy. "What, hoist the white flag when our triumph is nigh?" I rejoice that statistics show that we have made the greatest numerical gains in the past year, for many years, perhaps ever, and I believe we should all strive to make them greater in the years to come. But let this growth be under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, and in loyalty to God's Word.

What shall we do with the "Community Baptist Churches?"

First: Let every loyal Baptist raise an honest protest against this form of organization, and second, let our missionary boards refuse support to men engaged in propagating these organizations. Let it be understood that our missionaries, both general and local, are employed to do distinctly Baptist work.

ALL UP FOR A WARLESS WORLD

IN your issue of July 23 you gave half a column (I've forgot how to spell since Killam began corrupting the English language) to the Christian Endeavor slogan, "A warless world by 1923."

My suggestion is that every issue contain a healthy editorial in support of the C. E. program. There are thousands of angles from which to approach the subject, but every one would do for editorials. When our daily papers wish to bring on war or put some special issue across every day's paper is loaded with news and with editorials tending to prove the view advocated. Why should not our denominational papers take up this slogan and cry aloud until the desire of people for peace will make them as willing to be taxed for its propagation as they now are meek in being taxed for war.

Suppose that every Christian paper in America, whether Catholic or Protestant, should join in this campaign, suppose that through their influence the majority of our preachers and teachers should take up the issue, the result would be as sure as the goodness of God. In place then of Americans looking on every man of another color as a barbarian and unfit to sit with him in church or public meeting a new feeling of the humanness of all men and of our essential oneness would be developed. Instead of the determination by power of army and navy to get what is by right ours would develop the desire to see that others get what is by rights theirs even if we have to yield a point.

A task like that is well calculated to stir the imagination and the devotion. I believe that those of our young people who now give but little thought to religion would be won to service such as we have never dared to dream and to a loyalty to God as earnest as that of the prophets of Israel.

Dr. George W. Truett in St. Louis

By W. H. GEISTWEIT.

The Third Church of St. Louis has just had an experience in evangelism which, it seems to me, is worthy of special mention. The Third Church has always stood for evangelism of a high-standard sort, so it was ready for any special movement that might be inaugurated. It is a great church, with a great history, and a great congregation. It is situated in the very heart of the city, on the edge of the residential district, right up against the business district on the east; in the heart of the theatre district, next door to it being the biggest theatre in the middle west—just finished, and now going at full blast. It is reasonably estimated that 50,000 people pass its doors every day, while the crowds at night are immense. Yet here is this church with a parish of influence far out-reaching any possible parish of locality.

Well: To plan for daily evangelistic services seemed to be a risky undertaking; but the writer believed that with the right man it could be done. After four years of patient waiting and longing and pleading, Dr. George W. Truett of Dallas, Tex., consented to give us ten days. He came the early part of this month—November. Special preparations had been made—began last spring—for this work; the whole church was ready to move, doing magnificent team work. With our own song leader, Dr. Tyzzer, a busy physician, but with the heart of an evangelist, we entered upon the work. Nothing that I can say will overstate the work of the ten days; in many respects the greatest days of the kind I have seen in a long experience.

The country, north and south, and abroad, all know Dr. Truett. Intellectually the peer of any man in the American pulpit; spiritually the superior of most of the preachers I know—in every way, the prince of us all, he began preaching at the appointed hour. Advertising of a great sort filled the building for first service; and that was enough. Every night the great building, accommodating 2,000, was full to the top; the one Sunday given to us was beyond description in attendance and power; and we turned hundreds away, an occasion duplicated on the last night.

And such preaching! He never raised a laugh; he never told a joke; wasn't even humorous—but thrillingly human. No light preaching; great truths, pungently presented, masterfully applied with great spiritual unction; no sermonettes—no; no fads, no hobbies, no sidetracking on things that do not apply to the one great business of the soul's relation to God. Man! but he preached!

He kept close to the job; he did not waste his strength or cool his spirit by going everywhere—he stayed by the job; he would read nothing that could by any means affect his sensitive spirit. Yet he talked to the preachers of the city. They will never forget it. His keenest thrust was when he described a conference in his city where the things taught were the reduction of the Bible to three and five and sevens, and quoted an ungodly lawyer as saying, "If that is the message of the gospel to this age, God have mercy on us all." He added: "Don't waste your time on such work; if you make it three and five and seven, there is no reason why you should not go on and make it nine and eleven and thirteen and twenty-six." Oh, how such a man clears the atmosphere for the genuine things!

Results? There we are again—statistics! A great church lifted to higher ground; a coming back home of some who a long time ago had gone out from the church; about seventy-five for baptism, perhaps (fifty-five baptized at this writing), about fifty restorations, and others coming right along—this is the brief story. The occasion, the man, the message, the thrill of a new life given to the whole city, of other denominations too—all of it marks a step to higher ground, for which the writer lifts his heart in gratitude to God.

I have a great desire: It is to see Dr. Truett give a week in every seminary in the land, somewhere in the course of every student, in order that our lads may get a vision, which, added to what they get of a scholastic nature would help them to be flaming evangelists for the kingdom of God. And they don't need any strange doctrine, they don't need any fanciful geometrical interpretation of the Bible; but to know it—its direct response to human need; its message of salvation, its power to bring men to God, and build them in God. This—this man, superb in intellect, wonderful in spiritual grasp, perfect in physique, a "specimen" prophet of God, is a man for the hour.

Colorado Letter

By W. F. RIPLEY.

Colorado Baptists are seriously endeavoring to do their very best for our denominational work during the remaining five months of the present fiscal year. Plans are being worked out whereby every church in the convention will be reached in an effective way between now and April 30.

It is a matter of real satisfaction that practically every one of our churches is well manned.

Rev. N. D. Austin of Versailles, Ky., began his pastorate with the First Church, Pueblo, the first Sunday in December.

Rev. J. B. Henderson has come from Texas to the pastorate of the church at Ordway.

Rev. C. A. Sigmund of Indiana has recently begun the pastorate at Monte Vista.

Rev. T. F. Lowry of Illinois has recently located at Alamosa.

Rev. Chas. F. Thomas of Iowa has just entered the pastorate at Fountain.

Rev. F. W. Starring, former convention evangelist, is rejoicing in numerous additions to the membership and a generally wholesome activity in the beginning of his pastorate with the Beth Eden Church, Denver.

Rev. F. E. Eden, who recently came to the Broadway Church, Denver, conducted two weeks of special meetings and has had the joy of extending the hand of fellowship to something over forty members, most of whom came by baptism.

Rev. E. B. Pratt began his ministry with the Calvary Church, Denver, on Nov. 1. He has been formally welcomed with an appropriate reception. New members have been received at every service since the beginning of his pastorate. The serious condition in the church has quickly and happily adjusted itself and the prospects now before the church are most encouraging.

Colporter R. L. Williams, assisted by A. G. Kochenberger, singer, is in the midst of a promising meeting at Limon.

Mt. Olivet, Denver, has recently had a good meeting with a number added to the membership.

State Evangelist Steadman has recently held meetings at Holly and with the Liberty Church, located at Bonny. At each place there were a number of additions. Most of these were by baptism and were adults.

On Nov. 20 the church at Longmont conducted a most impressive service at which the corner-stone of the new edifice was laid. Among the speakers was Charles R. Brock, president of the Home Mission Society. Under the leadership of Pastor Lane this church is rapidly coming into its own.

Pastor Gravett and the Galilee Church, Denver, are also in the midst of a building enterprise. The new structure will give them a very much better plant for the doing of their important work.

At the annual meeting of the Denver Baptist Union on Nov. 17 the principal address was given by Dr. Chas. A. Fulton of the First Church, Colorado Springs. Following the address of Dr. Fulton a brief statement of our denominational situation was made and the meeting resolved itself into a prayer meeting. The company adjourned to meet at the First Church on Dec. 1 for further discussion and prayer. Denver Baptists are determined to be doing Baptists. Superintendent Laughlin is in a most promising meeting with Pastor Butler of the Bethany Church, Colorado Springs.

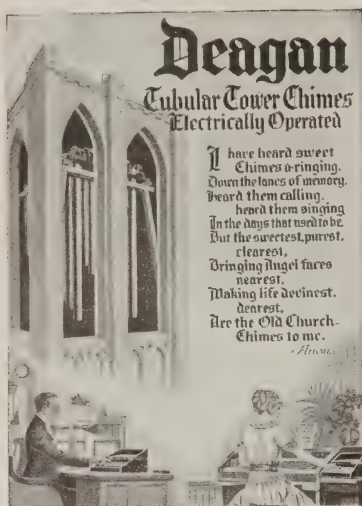

Harlan Palmer, a senior electrical engineer in the University of Colorado, and oldest son of Dr. and Mrs. F. B. Palmer, is at this time (Nov. 30) critically ill with typhoid fever. His recovery seems doubtful. Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, together with the other son and daughter greatly appreciate the many expressions of interest already received. Their many friends will join them in earnest prayer for the recovery of their son.

To Visit Home Mission Fields

Rev. Arthur T. Fowler on Jan. 1 closes his pastorate of nearly eight and a half years with the North Orange (N. J.) Church.

During this period the church has received 505 new members, of whom 291 came on confession of faith. It is interesting to note that during his pastorate Dr. Fowler has preached in his own pulpit 795 sermons and 212 elsewhere. He has also delivered 206 addresses, made 7,649 pastoral visits, conducted 388 funerals and officialated at 196 weddings. During his term of service $153,108 was raised for current expenses and $249,656 for beneficence, a total for both of $402,764. The apportionment under the New World Movement to the church was $245,000, and the church pledged $258,000.

Their location becomes a landmark; the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

Dr. Fowler has been president of the Council of Religious Education of the Oranges, president of the local Ministerial Association for three successive years, chairman of the state board of promotion, member of the board of managers of the Home Mission Society, of the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board and of the General Board of Promotion and its administrative committee.

It is probable that Mrs. Fowler, who has long been in ill health, will spend the winter in New England while her husband accepts the invitation of the board of the Home Mission Society to inspect its missions in Latin America and its educational institutions in the South. Dr. Fowler will sail from New York with Secy. Hovey as Superintendent Detweiler on Dec. 30 for Haiti. For two or three weeks they will make an investigation of the missionary needs of the republic and report their findings to the board of the society in order that its responsibility may be determined, in view of its allotment of this work by the Latin American Committee of the Home Missions Council.

Dr. Hovey will sail home from Haiti, but Dr. Fowler will accompany Mr. Detweiler on a visitation of our missions in Central America and Mexico. It is the expectation then that Dr. Fowler will return to Florida, and later it is hoped that he will be able to visit our missions in Cuba and Porto Rico and the schools in the South and preach one or more commencement sermons. During the extensive journey in Latin America, Dr. Fowler through an interpreter will give courses of lectures on the great foundation truths of Christianity to native pastors and such groups of believers as can be assembled. Being a keen observer, a careful writer and a skillful photographer, the denomination may look during the next few months for numerous articles from his pen.

This extensive tour was made possible by the generous action on the part of the North Orange Church, which has extended its pastor's full salary for a year. Two members of the church also have shown their deep appreciation of his valued service, and incidentally are setting a noble example of what might be done in order instances by making back payments to the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board, so that Dr. Fowler's pension with it may date back to 1913. In order also that the visit to the Tropics in behalf of the Home Mission Society might be as extensive as was needed, the same two members of the church made a designated gift of $500 toward his expenses.

The Home Mission Society's board will covet every bit of service Dr. Fowler can render until some church may be so fortunate as to secure him as its pastor.

The North Orange Church will give a farewell reception to their retiring pastor and his wife on Dec. 9.

Second Call to Churches

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is issuing this second call to the churches concerning the great opportunity and duty immediately before us. Splendid results were secured from the work done in October and from the nationwide observance of November 6th by the churches. But the campaign is only begun. The Washington Conference will continue many weeks—perhaps several months. Our campaign must continue also.

The time has come for the churches unitedly and unmistakably to declare war upon the whole war system. A powerful movement for a genuine reduction of armaments is the first practical step in this campaign.

The Federal Council now urges the churches:

1. To promote the quiet study in every church of international questions by adult and young people's study groups and in prayer meetings. At the close of the course it would be helpful if the group would write to the appropriate Senators and Representatives in the House, expressing the conclusions to which it has been led.

2. To continue in every Sunday service and on every other possible opportunity to pray for the success of the conference and to educate the people on the Christian principles at stake.

3. To hold public meetings in every city, unitedly wherever possible, some time in December, in behalf of a real reduction of armament.

4. To emphasize afresh in the services at Christmas time the Christian belief in a warless world and in a sweeping reduction of armament as an imperative step toward the ultimate goal.

5. To organize in each of the larger cities a Committee on International Justice and Goodwill, representing all the churches, for vigorous and continuous co-operation in the long and serious campaign against war.

6. To keep in touch with the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council.

Fiftieth Anniversary at Calvary, New Haven

By H. B. SLOAT

Calvary Baptist Church, New Haven, was organized with 103 members, Aug. 7, 1871. The corner-stone of the church building was laid Nov. 30, 1869. One year later the newly organized church dedicated its house of worship and began doing business for God and humanity. Beginning with slightly more than 100 members fifty years ago, the church has grown until now it numbers more than 1,000 members, being the largest Baptist church, numerically, in the state.

The church has just celebrated its fiftieth anniversary with an interesting and appropriate program covering Nov. 13-17. On Sunday morning, Nov. 13, Rev. Charles E. Smith, of Fredonia, N. Y., the first pastor of Calvary Church, also present at the twenty-fifth anniversary, preached the fiftieth anniversary sermon. The Bible school session was addressed by those who formerly had been superintendents of the school. In the evening Rev. John Wellington Hoag, Detroit, Mich., a former pastor and most intimate friend of the present pastor, Rev. James McGee, preached to a large congregation.

Monday evening was ladies' night of the men's club. A reception was held at 6:45, and dinner was served at 7 o'clock. Mr. Charles T. Lincoln, president of the club, presided, following the dinner, and introduced in turn the "famous Phelps brothers," both members of Calvary Church. Dr. Dryden Phelps, a recognized walking encyclopedia of all things, Baptist and otherwise, spoke reminiscently in an interesting and informing fashion on the history of the church for fifty years. Prof. William Lyon Phelps, of Yale, delivered an address on "Fifty Years Young." Calvary's youthful deeds of daring were recounted in a captivating style by this inimitable orator. When the Phelps Brothers speak everybody sits up and listens. Music was furnished by the church orchestra and a male quartette from the Yale Glee Club.

At the regular church prayer meeting on Tuesday evening, after the devotional service came the roll-call of members. A large number responded. Mrs. Jennie E. Robinson, one of the charter members, read a historical paper of "Fifty Years in Calvary Church."

Following a largely-attended reception the fiftieth anniversary dinner was served in the church parlors at 7 p. m. on Wednesday. Rev. Horace B. Sloat, director of promotion, said grace. Mr. H. H. Weed, chairman of the anniversary committee, presided. Mr. Weed introduced Hon. John Q. Tilson, a Calvary man and member of Congress, as the toastmaster of the evening. In a most happy vein Congressman Tilson introduced the following persons: Rev. Charles E. Smith, first pastor of the church; Mrs. Thomas S. Samson and Mrs. George H. Ferris, wives of former pastors; Rev. J. W. Hoag; Mrs. Grace S. Richmond, daughter of Dr. C. E. Smith; Prof. Wm. Lyon Phelps; Dr. A. B. Coats, secretary of the Connecticut Convention, and the pastor, Rev. James McGee. A letter was read from Dr. Edwin M. Poteat, now in China. It was a joyous occasion replete with sparkling wit, sage wisdom, tender reminiscences and serene utterances. Miss Ruby A. Weed, Mrs. Harry I. Cooper, members of the church, and Mrs. Byron Merwin, now of Rock Island, Ill., put their thoughts of Calvary's half century of service into verse, and throughout the evening selections were sung most lustily to the tunes "Smile the While," "My Old Kentucky Home" and "Maryland."

The program closed on Thursday evening with an address by Rev. James H. Franklin, foreign secretary of the A. B. F. M. Society, subject: "The World's Cry for Brotherhood."

The following constituent members of the church are now living: Mrs. Fayette S. Curtis, Miss Janet C. Bishop, Mrs. William Crossley, Mrs. Jennie L. Brocksieper, Mrs. Adaline B. Ely, Mrs. Jennie Robinson, Mr. Walter Larkins, Mr. Charles E. Larkins, Mrs. Janette A. Linsley, Miss Sarah W. Mansfield, Mrs. Jennie M. Taylor, Mrs. Minerva C. Cook, Mr. I. De W. Weed, Miss Susan A. Wright, Mr. Sumner T. Thayer, Mrs. Irene M. Mattison and Mrs. Carrie Fairman Moulthrop.

During the fifty years of history-making Calvary has had eight pastors: Rev. Chas. E. Smith, 1871-1875; Rev. Henry M. Galaher, 1875-1879; Rev. Thomas Samson, 1880-1887; Rev. Edwin M. Poteat, 1888-1898; Rev. George H. Ferris, 1899-1905; Rev. Donald D. Munro, 1906-1910; Rev. John Wellington Hoag, 1911-1915; Rev. James McGee settled in 1916 and still serving with ever-increasing acceptance.

This "Church of a Thousand Welcomes" at the heart of a growing city's throbbing life, in close proximity to one of our greatest universities, enters upon another half century of service with an ever-widening ministry, to meet the challenge of the new day. Great things will be expected of Calvary. Calvary will undertake great things.

the Grand Rapids churches have asked them to return for concerts.

THIRTY-FIVE YOUNG PEOPLE have organized a Christian Endeavor Society at Fenville. Pastor R. E. Priest states that the young people are earnestly working and praying for a revival. It is the plan to have special services this fall.

KANSAS

THE CHURCH AT ABILENE, Rev. T. J. Duvall, pastor, has just closed a three-weeks' evangelistic campaign with Rev. Robert J. Church, of Arkansas City, helping.

RECENT PROGRESS has been marked in the Sunflower State along three special lines: evangelism, ordinations, and church-building enterprises.

Evangelism

The church at Kingman, L. E. Marvin, pastor, had the assistance of Field-Worker J. J. Griffin and Pastor LeRoy Goodwin of Harper, in a meeting of remarkable power. More than fifty members are welcomed into fellowship, most of them by baptism.

The village church at Labette City, under pastoral leadership of Vernon S. Cloninger, assisted by Associational Missionary W. E. Tanner and Miss Hazel Spriggs, has experienced the most fruitful revival in its history. Nearly seventy people made professions, among them heads of many families. The church considers purchasing or building a parsonage.

Pastor E. E. Poff of Dodge City was assisted in revival meetings by Evangelist Jack Cardiff and Mrs. Cardiff. The attendances were large from the start to the close, the city was moved with the power of the preaching, and more than a score of people united with the church.

C. F. Mosher, pastor of our church in the village of Belpre, called to his help Evangelists Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Martin for a meeting lasting three weeks which greatly rallied the working forces and added many new members.

The church at Atchison has just closed special evangelistic efforts in which Pastor W. O. Shanks preached, assisted by H. O. Echols, evangelistic singer, of Bloomington, Ill. More than fifty people have united with the church, most of them by baptism.

Many pastors are mutually exchanging evangelistic help and scores of our churches are now in the midst of special revival effort.

Ordinations

On Oct. 6, Pastor Ed. Pennington of Louisburg was ordained to the gospel ministry. He is a graduate of Ottawa University with some Biblical studies at William Jewell College. Dr. W. A. Elliott of Ottawa preached the sermon; H. G. Fraser, field secretary for Ottawa University, gave the charge to the church and Pastor F. F. Bock the charge to the candidate. Pastor Pennington is leading forward in an excellent work.

On Oct. 21 a council convened with the Grand View Church in Kansas City to consider the propriety of ordaining Pastor Allen W. Lee to the ministry. Thirty workers were present representing fifteen churches, the Kansas City Seminary and the City Baptist Union. The council was well pleased with the candidate's statement of Christian experience, his call to the ministry and his views of Christian doctrine. The sermon was preached by Pres. P. W. Crannell; charge to the candidate, Pastor L. M. Denton; prayer of ordination, Pastor F. L. Streeter. Brother Lee is a graduate of the Kansas City

MICHIGAN

TWO HUNDRED FORTY-SEVEN members were received into Beulah Church, Detroit, in the first year of the pastorate of Rev. James S. West. Ninety-two of these came by baptism, and fully half the remainder represent reconsecrations little less significant than outright conversions. Not a single extra meeting of an evangelistic character was held. No outside help, either singer or evangelist, was used. Today there are more people prospective for conversion and membership than at any time within the year past.

DAVISON CHURCH, P. J. Johns, pastor, recently concluded a two-weeks' evangelistic campaign which resulted in several conversions. The pastor was assisted by evangelist W. H. Garfield of Grand Rapids and E. J. Rollings and Mrs. Rollings, of Detroit, who had charge of the music. A week-end service, Nov. 11-13 was in charge of the Baptist Guild Evangelistic Band of the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. A fine group of consecrated young men with an inspiring message for young people! Some improvements in church property have been made—a heating plant installed in the parsonage, a new outside entrance made to the basement, and a fine new bulletin board erected.

EVANGELIST S. A. HAYWORTH of Danville, Ind., has been secured to assist Pastor E. D. Wright in special meetings at Byron. Mr. Hayworth will be available for evangelistic services in the state after the holidays.

REV. FRANK M. SPOONER, pastor of the Milan and York churches for the past seven years, has, with the assistance of Rev. George Woolcock of Ovid, closed a very successful series of meetings on the York field. Eight young people have already been baptized and others expect to come. This is a country church composed largely of young people.

Such topics as "The Man and his Health," His Religion, Friends, Hobbies, Money, His Master, Home, Town, Country and World are discussed at the several meetings. One evening in April is set aside for a consideration of the problems of the city and country church, when the use of the automobile and the movies will be discussed, also the "Exodus from the Farm" and the "Unattached to the Church." There are no dues for the brotherhood, nor is there any "joining"—just come is the invitation and the requirement for membership.

REV. E. BOND GRIFFITHS baptized thirty-two into the membership of the First Church, Mt. Clemens, following the series of meetings conducted by Evangelists Littrell and Moody. Several others are soon to be baptized. Mr. Griffiths speaks in highest terms of the same methods followed by these men whose messages are deeply spiritual and convincing. The entire city was stirred by the meetings.

REV. VINCENT C. WEBB is leading the members of the church at Lyons in a searching period of consecration for the Master. Cottage prayer-meetings are being held preparatory to the evangelistic campaign which will be put on soon.

THE CHURCH AT EVART is putting extensive repairs on its building, which will mean practically a new church.

FIVE NEW MEMBERS have been received into the Scribner Avenue, Grand Rapids, Church, by Pastor M. H. Pettit. Special meetings were conducted by Rev. F. L. Currey, assisted by Prof. E. A. Greenlaw, singer. All the workers in the simultaneous campaign met during the meetings for a day of prayer and conference, when reports were given from all churches. Scribner Avenue women served dinner.

PROF. AND MRS. E. A. GREENLAW have given several concerts after special meetings held in different churches. Six of

The Hebron Church in Jefferson, under leadership of Pastor Z. F. Osborne, is making definite progress. Recent meetings brought twenty-eight additions. In the midst of the good work a council was called and ordained one of their young men, Earl Edmond, to the work of the gospel ministry.

Church Building Enterprises

The church at Caney, under pastoral care of E. L. Ryals, has purchased a commanding site and erected an excellent building at the cost of $18,000. The house was dedicated Oct. 9, with provision made for all accounts.

For the past two years our church at Conway Springs has been pressing forward in the erection of the new building. It occupies the best location in the town and was dedicated Oct. 31, with all obligations met. A. B. Kirk has been pastor for nearly seven years.

On Nov. 20, the Wellington Church dedicated its new building, which has cost approximately $50,000. It is one of our most commodious and well-arranged meeting houses in that section of the state. M. G. Barlow is pastor. On the day of dedication they lifted in good pledges about $10,000, thus making ample provision for all obligations.

The Chelsea Church of Kansas City laid the corner-stone for a new building, Oct. 17. It is the expectation to complete the basement at this time and erect the superstructure later. J. S. Jones is pastor.

On Armistice Day, Nov. 11, our church at Wellsville laid the corner-stone for a magnificent meeting house. It will cost approximately $40,000. When completed it will probably be our largest church building in any village of Kansas. Pastor C. W. Fisher is aggressive in leadership and the influence of the church covers a wide territory.

The North Topeka Church had an impressive service of corner-stone laying for the new building, Nov. 15. It is the expectation to enclose the superstructure during the winter months. The house will cost approximately $35,000. Pastor O. L. Weir and his people face the great proposition with courage and are equipping themselves for enlarging ministry in days to come.

Labor Board, and a former governor of Tennessee, will speak on "Some Phases of the Labor Situation."

The Baptist public is welcome to all these lectures.

SUPT. N. T. HAFER of the Hudelson Baptist Orphanage at Irvington writes: "Perhaps our most important problem for the future is to secure a school building at the home. Our two school rooms are crowded to the doors with more than eighty out of the 110 children now in the home. These rooms are small and located in one of the large buildings near the mechanical part of the institution and therefore very noisy. We need a separate building with at least three school-rooms and a chapel, and in the basement a manual training equipment. This building should be given by one individual or family as a memorial. What greater appeal does a person of philanthropic spirit need than an institution which cares for from 100 to 200 needy boys and girls who have had a poor start in life? I would like to hear from any one who wishes to know more about this plan."

THE TALK OF HARD TIMES cannot keep the church from making financial effort when there is a real will to succeed. The church at Kankakee, under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. Herbert Hines, recently planned for some extension work that will require the expenditure of at least $1,500. On the first Sunday, when the matter was presented to the congregation, they shot over their aim. As a result the people are jubilant and believe that they have conquered that feeling of depression before which it is easy to give way.

REV. J. C. GRACE of Chicago Heights baptized four on a recent Sunday evening. This means twenty-nine additions in the eight months since he assumed the pastorate of this church.

REV. J. BRAINARD BROWN, formerly of the Ridgewood Church, Joliet, has assumed the pastorate at Petersburg, and believes that there are possibilities in this field for a strong forward work.

DELAVER CHURCH, Rev. Louis P. Jensen, pastor, has just completed very interesting and helpful church school of missions, known and advertised as the "Sunday Evening Discussion Groups." The groups for men and women, young people, and children met at 6:30 for one hour which was followed by the regular evening service. The home mission study books were used and all who attended felt well repaid for coming. On Nov. 16 this church began special evangelistic services with the pastor in charge, assisted by Miss Margery C. Thompson, harpist and soloist, from Iowa. This church is also looking forward to the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary, Dec. 16-18. Pres. George M. Potter of Shurtleff is to bring the anniversary address.

THE ROGERS PARK BAPTIST CHURCH, on Nov. 16 gave a supper and evening program as a welcome to new members received during the past year, and also in celebration of the anniversary of Rev. Eugene Lower's assumption of the pastorate. This church, at the time of entering its new home three years ago, numbered less than 100, with only sixty-three resident members. There are now 240 on the church roll, sixty-four of these having been received the past year. The Sunday school also registers a remarkable growth, numbering now over 250.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL of the First Church, Mount Vernon, had a great day recently when all departments brought bountiful provisions as a Thanksgiving offering for the Hudelson Home. It required thirty automobiles to carry the goods to the home. A resolution of appreciation was passed of the splendid work done by Mr. C. W. Harriss, who has been superintendent of this school for twenty years.

THE FIRST BOHEMIAN SUNDAY school, Chicago, meets in three centers: Throop Street, Millard Avenue and Marigold Chapel. The home school at Millard Ave. has increased this fall from seventy-six to over 200. On Saturday evening, Dec. 5, there was a Sunday school party. An opportunity was given to accept Christ and more than fifty responded.

DANVILLE, FIRST, E. Leroy Enslow, pastor, must raise $8,000 at once to pay off a mortgage, having received notice of foreclosure. The Illinois Baptist Convention has offered to help, and the church is making heroic and hopeful efforts to raise the money.

WOOD RIVER has moved into its new and incomplete building.

EAST ALTON's new pastor William McIntosh was ordained, November 15.

SOUTH DAKOTA

THE MEMBERS OF THE STURGIS B. Y. P. U. made an effort this year among themselves to see that Thanksgiving Day should be observed as a day of praise to God instead of in frivolous amusements. The members pledged themselves that on that day they would attend to their religious duties in a thankful spirit, that they would indulge in no amusements, such as dancing, card playing, attending football games, etc., and that they would see in their homes that all except necessary work was done on the preceding day.

NEBRASKA

Rev. and Mrs. F. I. Blanchard, missionaries on Chapel Car Evangel, went to Rockville last week in August. No one in town knew of their coming. After twenty-five years of religious efforts of various kinds by ministers and missionaries to establish a work there, the town was still without a Protestant church. There was no Baptist within eleven miles of the place, except an Italian boy who was working on a farm three miles out in the country. On Oct. 25, when the missionaries closed their labors at that town, there was a Baptist church of fourteen members, which included some of the most prominent citizens; a woman's auxiliary with missionary program arranged for six months and work meetings planned. A Junior B. Y. P. U. soon to be organized by the principal of the school, who was baptized and joined the church. More than enough pledges were secured to meet all the expenses of the church, including the renting of the hall and minister's salary for one year. The Nebraska State Board pledged $200 and the balance was raised in the community. A splendid pastor, Mr. Bukoutz, has been secured for part time service and will give a meeting every Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening with pastoral work. He began his work Oct. 30. A union Sunday school was founded in the town and will continue as such in its workings.

MINNESOTA

REV. S. C. MARTIN was installed as pastor of the community Baptist Church at LaPorte, Nov. 11. The parish consists of a small town with a large rural community, in which this is the only church. The Home Mission Society and the Minnesota Baptist Convention are co-operating in the enterprise. Congregations and Sunday school attendance already overflow the house.

OHIO

ZANESVILLE. The simultaneous evangelistic campaign in the Baptist churches of southeastern Ohio held in the early part of November was productive of great good. Some thirty or more churches were in meetings at the same time. In Zanesville the meetings were from Nov. 9 to Nov. 20. Weather conditions were very much against the attendance, but the meetings were interesting and helpful. At the First Church, Rev. O. L. Martin, pastor, Rev. L. A. Wood of Mansfield was the preacher. At the Market Street Church, Rev. C. M. Eddy, pastor, Rev. A. A. Nellis of Warren was the preacher, and at the Fair Oaks Church, Rev. S. E. Davies, pastor, Rev. Henry Brandt was the visiting preacher. The spiritual life in each of the churches was quickened; some backsliders restored and a number of conversions reported.

Good word comes from New Lexington, Rev. Chas. Walsh, pastor, that the church there received "ten candidates for baptism and church membership and five more by profession." Bro. Walsh has been very successful in his work with this church, it having doubled in membership during the two years of his pastorate.

THERE WAS ORGANIZED recently in the First Church, Toledo, Rev. Albert King Morris, pastor, the only Chinese Sunday school in Toledo. There was present about twenty-five Chinese and as many of their American friends. Mr. Charles Way, the official city interpreter for the Chinese people, was elected the superintendent, Mr. Charles Lewis, sec. of the Chinese Federation, assistant superintendent, and Mr. Seung Yee, who is connected with the Mandarin Hotel, secretary. Mr. Loo, the proprietor of the "Oriental," was present and will take active part in the work for young men. The movement is backed by the Toledo Baptist Union of which John D. Rhoades is president, and the work is promoted under a special committee of which Rev. A. K. Morris is chairman. This organization is exceedingly fortunate in securing the services of Miss Bell Myers, for ten years a missionary in China. It is not generally known that there are about 300 Chinese people in Toledo, many of whom are cultured and refined. All are thrifty and industrious and none are illiterate. Among this number there are eleven women and fourteen children. There is in this city a federation known as the Chinese Association which has, up to this time, been their only means of social communication. The attitude of local Chinese people toward Americans is one of exceeding friendliness and confidence and their appreciation for a brotherly interest in their welfare is unlimited. On Friday, Dec. 7, there will be organized for them in this same church an "American Language and Current Events Club," which will meet weekly.

COLUMBUS, FIRST, Dr. F. Rittenhouse, pastor: For the past two years there has been a steady, gradual increase in attendance at all services. Along with the increase in attendance has come a deepening of the spiritual life of the entire church. The fall work opened with encouragement. On Friday night the prayer room is filled to its capacity. Following the prayer hour, a fellowship half-hour is held in the church parlor.

FIRST CHURCH OF IRONTON, Rev. M. A. Summers, pastor, has just closed a two-weeks' meeting in which there were twenty-six additions to the church, and the church was greatly revived. Rev. W. E. Bridge, pastor of the First Church of Canton, assisted in the preaching, and Rev. Herbert Moule, a student in the Louisville Seminary, led the chorus choir. There have been thirty-three additions to the church since the coming of Mr. Summers as pastor September 9.

IOWA

THE FIRST CHURCH OF FORT DODGE has been honored in the recent election of one of its leading members, Mr. E. H. Williams, to the office of president of the Iowa Baptist Convention. Mr. Williams, although the head of a large lumber company, and one of the leading citizens of Fort Dodge (having been for many years a member of both the public school and public library boards), is one of the most active church workers in the city. He is the teacher of the brotherhood class of the church, and also the teacher of the men's class in the mission. In addition he gives much time to the regular meetings of the mission. This church, of which Rev. B. M. Osgood is the pastor, has received 340 or more members in the last five and a half years. Six candidates, including a father and mother and two children, were baptized Sunday morning, Nov. 13, at a service of unusual impressiveness. Two gospel teams, one from the B. Y. P. U. and the other from the brotherhood have been recently organized. The B. Y. P. U. is full of interest. The Northwest Fort Dodge Mission is flourishing. Extra efforts for the collection of New World Movement funds are being made.

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

FIRST, WATERTOWN: About seventy-five men gathered for a banquet on Nov. 16 to hear the new plans of Pastor Walter Quarrington set forth. These were enthusiastically received and it was also voted that the new layman's organization should be affiliated with the national organization of Baptist laymen; This will make the Waterville Club number 1 among the organizations in the state.

THE CONVENTION BOARD of the United Convention of Maine met in quarterly session at Waterville, Nov. 9. The work of the board is going forward on a greatly enlarged scale and the prospect is good for a winter that will realize the "Maine goals." Hearty approval of the conclusions reached at the Indianapolis meeting of the General Board of Promotion was spoken and earnest effort will be made to carry out the plans proposed.

BRIDGEWATER: Probably the inland location of this town far up in Aroostook county made it take to the suggestion of a sea-voyage with great enthusiasm. A remarkably large amount of excellent material was furnished "To Fill a Ship" and money was provided to pay the freight. Pastor Clark with great energy and enthusiasm is giving himself to a wide and successful ministry.

THE CENTRAL SQUARE CHURCH, Portland, is one of those that went over the top in its first-year payments on the New World Movement and is always abounding in every good work. Dr. Addison B. Lorimer is the pastor. The Men's Club, Mr. Geo. M. Graffman, president, held its monthly meeting on Nov. 19, with a good supper—and speeches by Dr. Mower, Director Whittemore, Hon. A. G. Bisben and others. The club will affiliate with the new Baptist laymen's organization. The congregation in this church is an inspiration to the speaker. The Sunday school, Rev. J. F. Tilton, superintendent, is vigorous in every department. The church motto for the year is "Go forward with God."

MILLINOCKET: Pastor Cooper spent the first six months here getting acquainted and silently preparing for a revival. Cottage meetings, about eighteen each night, have been held, and Sunday, Nov. 13 to Nov. 20 was planned for special meetings. On the first day of the revival over 50 decisions were recorded and practically the whole membership came forward for reconsecration.

MASSACHUSETTS

DR. ROBERT L. WEBB has accepted the call of the First Church in the Dorchester district of Boston. He takes this position in conjunction with his work as secretary of the Northern Baptist Education Society. It is a happy arrangement for both church and pastor. They get a man of commanding ability and rich experience, and Dr. Webb remains in close touch with students and the schools where ministers are being trained.

DR. O. J. WHITE, formerly secretary of our State Convention, has accepted the urgent call of the Belmont Street Church in the Mount Auburn district. He had recently purchased a house nearby, and the timely call fixes his residence there and brings him into the service of an interesting and promising church. They are all happy in their possession of so desirable a minister.

EAST CHURCH, LYNN, Arthur E. Harri-man, pastor, dedicated a memorial tablet October 16 to the 102 members of the church and Sunday school who participated in the World War, and in special memory of Chester A. Fleib, Clayton F. Saunders, Frank F. Freeman and Lloyd E. Wilkins, who died in France.

RHODE ISLAND

A SERIES OF MISSIONARY AND EVANGELISTIC CONFERENCES has just been held throughout the state, as follows: Providence, Pawtucket, Woonsocket, Newport and Westerly. Dr. Heath of the Board of Promotion, Rev. Robert B. Longwell of Assam, and Rev. York A. King were of great assistance by their presence and messages.

BRO. EDWIN R. THORNTON of Newton, at present acting pastor of the Allendale Church, was ordained Monday evening, Nov. 22. The ordination occurred at his home church, the Woodlawn of Pawtucket, R. I.

BLOCK ISLAND is having a series of evangelistic meetings under the leadership of Rev. Wm. G. Cooper. The west end of the island will have two weeks of meetings and the center eight days. Both pastor Rose and Roberts are praying and laboring for large results.

EVANGELIST LYON AND HIS PARTY have just concluded a very successful six-weeks' tabernacle meeting in the Pawtuxet Valley district. The tabernacle seated 2,000 and it was filled most of the time. Many conversions have been reported to the churches.

REV. OSWALD H. RANKIN, pastor of the Broadway Church, Pawtucket, has resigned and accepted the call of a church in Vermont.

REV. C. L. CARRON, French missionary at Woonsocket and Manchaug, died Friday, Nov. 18. Bro. Carron had been failing for some time and finally went to the Worcester Hospital, where he passed away. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Isaac LeFleur, of the French Church of Worcester.

REV. H. K. VYE, pastor of the Phillips Memorial Church, Eden Park, Auburn, has resigned to accept the call of the Calvary Church, Lowell, Mass. Bro. Vye has been closely identified with the state and national program, and has done a constructive work in Eden Park.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Columbia Association met in Metropolitan Church, Nov. 14-17. Rev. H. A. Tupper, Dr. F. L. Anderson, Dr. J. H. Franklin, Harry L. Strickland, Dr. W. E. Chalmers, Dr. J. J. Muir, Rev. James Many, Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Yocum, Rev. H. I. Stewart and others spoke on subjects of special interest.

Every evening featured some novelty. There were exercises by the boys and girls from the Baptist Home for Children, the ladies of the Baptist Home for the Aged being special guests; a missionary procession by 200 members of World Wide Guilds and Young Women's Auxiliaries; a life enlistment service and roll-call of young peoples' societies.

NEW JERSEY

REV. FRANK P. STODDARD has accepted the unanimous call of the Emanuel Church, Newark, and is already making his ability and experience count. Before coming to Newark Mr. Stoddard served churches in Carthage and Amsterdam, New York, also the Strong Place Church, Brooklyn, for nine years, and the Moulton Memorial Church at Newburgh, his boyhood town. Mrs. Stoddard has served as missionary and teacher for the American Board in Japan for twelve years.

THE CHURCH AT RED BANK is rejoicing in the reception into its membership of eighteen young people. These are the result of the fine preliminary work of the group prayer meetings held for two weeks preceding the evangelistic meetings just closed by the J. J. Wicker evangelistic party. What the pastor has to say about these evangelistic meetings: "In simple, just recognition of exceptionally capable, high-quality work in every part, preaching, singing solos, duets, and chorus, two pianos, and violin, it is a pleasure to speak without reservations for Dr. and Mrs. J. J. Wicker, of Virginia, and Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Wolslagel, of North Carolina.

All have given delightful, faithful service. A rich spirit of devotion prevailed, Christians have been enriched in truth and inspired for better service. A goodly number have been received for baptism and others will come soon."

NEW YORK

GREENE AVENUE, Brooklyn, is moving steadily forward under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. Charles Francis McKoy. The church has recently installed a pipe organ costing thirty thousand dollars and is making extensive improvements upon its church property. New members are constantly being added to the church by baptism and letter. Sixty new members were added to the Bible school during the month of November. The average attendance at the prayer-meeting for the past year has exceeded 300. More money was raised by the church during the past year than in any previous year in the history of the church.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

HON. J. C. NISSLEY of Harrisburg was elected chairman of the State Mission Board, at its meeting Nov. 9, in succession to the late Geo. K. Crozer. Mr. Nissley has been a member of the board twenty-five years.

REV. CHAS. M. BOND will close his work at the Baptist Tabernacle of Lee Park and South Wilkes Barre at the end of December to become university pastor at Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

REV. F. B. McARTHUR has resigned his pastorate at Bradford to accept the call to the church at Bethlehem, one of Pennsylvania's thriving industrial cities and the seat of Lehigh University.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. FRED R. McARTHUR, pastor of the First Church, Bradford, has accepted a call to the First Church, Bethlehem, and began work there Dec. 1. During his seven years' pastorate the united budget system of finances has been adopted, a parsonage built and the church edifice remodeled. There have been more than 300 baptisms and a net increase in membership of 144. Under his direction the daily vacation Bible school has done remarkable work. Last summer there were 682 registrations including ninety-two volunteer helpers. Each Friday evening during the school year a junior congregation is attended by about 500 children.

WEST VIRGINIA

FIFTH AVENUE, HUNTINGTON, has a Sunday school attendance running almost to 1,000, large audiences and frequent additions.

meeting, and the actions taken. The conference also listened to brief reports from the pastors. The following are some of the encouraging items gleaned from the pastors' reports:

QUEEN ANNE CHURCH, Rev. F. W. Carstens, pastor: The congregations have doubled since entering the building of the German Methodist Church, which has been leased for a year.

SECOND SWEDISH, Rev. A. J. Stormans, pastor: A course of Bible study led by the pastor at the prayer-meeting service has largely increased both the attendance and interest.

TABERNACLE CHURCH, Rev. F. E. Dark, pastor, has also introduced "Church Night" Thursday night; supper, opportunity for committee meetings or study, and prayer-meeting. Has increased the fellowship, the attendance at prayer-meeting and developed a fine spirit in the meeting.

COLUMBIA CHURCH, Rev. F. G. West, pastor, has started an afternoon service for women who cannot come out to the morning or evening service. This is conducted by Mrs. West and much interest is shown. The Boy Scout movement is found a great help in building up a large boys' class in the Sunday school.

UNIVERSITY CHURCH, Rev. F. B. Matthews, pastor, held special meetings for ten days under the leadership of Dr. W. B. Hinson, of Portland, which were well attended and of deep spiritual power and awakened an interest which it is expected will bear fruit for months. Nov. 20 the church begins holding its Sunday services in a handsome theater building across the street from their church building, which is just completed and will seat 1,000 persons. The auditorium contains a fine pipe organ. A new chorister and a large surplized choir will lend effectiveness to the services.

FIRST CHURCH, SEATTLE: Sunday, Oct. 30, was observed as visiting day. Careful preparations had been made. Dinner was served at the church for the visitors, immediately after which eighty-eight teams representing 178 visitors and forty-three automobiles left the church. About 500 calls were made on members of the church residing within the city limits. Every member of the church was called upon with the exception of about twelve families. The judgment is that this visitation did great good to those who made the calls and those who were called upon. It is the first time that a visitation has been attempted in which the visitors had nothing to ask or give except love, fellowship and prayer.

eight by letter. Sunday school is outgrowing the capacity of the church and plans are in making for the building of an annex to the church for Sunday school purposes. Our B. Y. P. ### Our Book Shelf

The House with Golden Windows, by J. E. Buckrose; New York, George H. Doran Co.; $1.90 net.

To those who look to their reading for relaxation more than for any particular cultural value, books such as the above are welcome. This author has a happy knack of compounding unique, frequently ludicrous situations, crossing the life currents of a few unusual persons, and then easily and naturally propelling the sequential episodes to the necessarily happy ending. His humor is pointed, but clean; the plot action moves along in a natural fashion, enough happens to keep up the interest, and the people portrayed are for the most part healthy, ordinary human beings.

Life and Letters, by J. H. Squire; New York, George H. Doran Co.

When the reviewer first glanced at this volume, he was under the impression that it was a biography; but no, it turned out to be one of the most interesting set of essays that it has ever been his good fortune to meet. The author is one of England's best-known and best-loved literary personalities, widely recognized as an authoritative critic, editor of "The London Mercury." This set of essays, varied in subject, ever polished and urbane in handling and craftsmanship, sparkle and glow with all the legerdemain of a first-class master of the English language; not even G. B. Shaw or G. K. C. have ever surpassed the glitter and fancy embodied herein. The articles are by turn grave and gay; here we have a gentle touch of sincere pathos, now a clever stab of keenly appreciative parody, paradox and epigram tread on each other's heels, and over all floats a tolerant humor that is delightful.

Seed of the Sun, by Wallace Irwin; New York, George H. Doran Co.

ARIZONA

THE "TREE MEETING" on the Verde will be held this year as usual. The churches there intend to perpetuate this annual festival. Bro. Gordon, the pastor, says he has baptized eighteen Indians since he went on the field and that four more are ready. Bro. Gordon is doing a good work on the Verde.

REV. A. C. RUSSELL has become pastor of the St. John's Church (Colored) of Prescott. He is making a good start with this splendid church.

REV. J. LAWRENCE BELL, pastor at Nogales, and Miss Lotta Jameson were married by Pastor Beal of Tucson, Sept. 9. All join heartily in congratulations! The church of Nogales is making rapid advance under the ministry of Bro. Bell.

AFTER A SUCCESSFUL PASTORATE of four-teen months, Rev. T. E. Summers has resigned the pastorate of the church at Miami. He will probably be located within the state again in a short time.

COLORADO

THE FIRST CHURCH, Eaton, is responding splendidly to the work of Pastor N. J. Peterson. Last Sunday he bade twelve welcome at the communion service, all of which came into the church during the month of October, four by baptism and affects Californian life. The plot deals with the trials and tribulations of two American girls, who, after meeting with financial reverses, attempt to make a go of their scant inheritance—a prune ranch set in the midst of a Japanese community, hostile and competitive. The various trials and tribulations met with are finally triumphantly surmounted, and we have a happy ending so far as the principal characters are concerned. The "Question," however, can hardly be considered as settled. Perhaps we do the author an injustice in asking that this be done. He may well retort that his intention was merely to raise the question before a wide audience, to bring more keenly and clearly before the eyes of us just what the "Japanese Problem" really is. Certainly he puts out an eloquent statement of his case, and the book is exceedingly thought-provoking. To me, the drawback to the book is the failing so common to propaganda-novels: obsessed by the "big-idea" the author loses a little of his artistic perspective, and the story suffers correspondingly. The principal characters seem to lack real humanity, they smack too much of convenient models to hang certain facts upon. The most appealing and human personalities in the whole book are two very secondary figures, the pathetic Japanese local pastor and his wife, idealistic and self-sacrificing even when opposed by the might of the local Buddhist organization.

Charles Alexander, by Philip I. Roberts; New York, Fleming H. Revell Co.

Here is a mere handbook, only some eighty-odd pages. But in these few sheets of paper a modern miracle is performed. The reader will once more (if he has ever forgotten!) realize and revive the power and heart-interest of the great servant of the Master, Charles Alexander, the "singing evangelist," gone from us in the flesh since October 13, 1920. As the author states in the foreword, "This book is not to be regarded as anything approaching an ordered or a consecutively arranged biography of the man of whom it treats... All I have aimed to do is to pay a plain personal tribute to one who, in a degree far beyond the ordinary, compelled and retained my affection and regard."

"It Is to Laugh"

(Contributions for this column are solicited from our readers. Especially shall we value the story of any humorous incidents occurring in connection with the life of our churches.—THE EDITORS.)

Mr. Johnson came staggering home one day.

"Why, what's wrong?" Mrs. Johnson asked, startled as she caught the tottering man.

"Wrong?" the poet muttered; "I wrote a poem about our little boy, beginning the first verse with these words: 'My son! My pigmy counterpart.'"

"Yes? Go on; tell me quick. What's the matter?"

Mr. Johnson drew a long breath as he took the paper from his pocket, and, with his face blanched, pointed to the poem. His wife read aloud:

"My son! My pig, my counterpart."

Mr. Johnson, a stickler for correct English, both in and out of the class room, takes every opportunity to set right the erring in this respect. A few days ago he went into a drug store and asked for a man's comb.

"Do you want a narrow man's comb?" inquired the clerk, courteously.

"No," replied Mr. Johnson, with the utmost gravity, "I desire a comb for a stout man with rubber teeth."

This conversation was overheard in the halls of the first week of school.

"Lo, wotcha doin'?"

"Nuthin'."

"Seere, doncha wanten go wi me to clazzify?"

"I guess zo. Lezzurry."

"Right. Comelong."

"It seems," said Jones, "that there is a new name for the throng of gay young girls that throng Broadway. They used to be called 'flappers' or 'chickens.' Now they are called 'Easter egg.'

"Why so?" said Jenkins.

"Why, they have painted exteriors and hard boiled insides."

This true story comes from Canton, Ill. Father had been trying out the new car's ability to climb hills and was delighted to make it "on high." Little daughter cried happily: "Why, Daddy, we sang about that in Sunday school this morning."

Father: "Oh shucks, I guess not."

L. D.: "Yes, we did!"

Mother: "What did you sing, dear?"

L. D.: "We sang, 'When you die, He will take you home on high.'"

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

WILLIAM LESTER

THE WISDOM OF CARUSO

Regard for Time

Singers, of all musicians, have the reputation for displaying the least regard for time. In operatic work, however, with an orchestra to follow or be followed, it is especially essential to observe a sane respect for the proper tempo. Otherwise, one is liable to get into immediate trouble with the conductor. Of course, I do not mean that one should sing in a mechanical way and give nothing of one's own personality. This would naturally rob the music of all charm. There are many singers who cannot or will not count the time properly. There are those who sing without method, who do not fit their breathing, which is really the regulator of vocal performance, to the right periods and who consequently are never in time. They make all kinds of rallentandos where they are not necessary to gain time to recover the breath that they have not taken when they should. It is not enough to give the notes their full value. The rests, above all, should be carefully observed in order to have sufficient opportunity to get a good breath and prepare for the next phrase. It is this exactitude that gives certainty to one's rendition and authority in singing—something many artists do not possess. A singer may make all the efforts he desires and still keep time, and he must keep it.

Those who roar most loudly rarely sing in time. They give every thought to the volume of tone they are producing and do not bother themselves about anything else. The right accents in music depend very much on the exact time. Tone artists, while still making all their desired "effects" in apparent freedom of style and delivery, nevertheless do not ever lose sight of the time. Singers who do are usually amateurs, and are not to be imitated.

Diction

Good diction, or the art of pronouncing the words of a song or opera properly and intelligently, is a matter sadly neglected by many singers, and, indeed, is not considered important by a large proportion of the audiences, who do not understand foreign languages at any rate. And in an opera sung in a language unknown to most of the audience it is apparently unimportant whether the words are understood or not as long as there is a general knowledge of the plot, and the main consideration is, of course, the music.

Yet for those who are conversant with the language in which an opera is written, how common an experience it is (in concerts also) to be able, in spite of their linguistic knowledge, to understand but little of what is being sung. And what a drawback this really is! How many singers there are who seem to turn all their attention to the production of beautiful sounds and neglect in most cases the words that often are equally beautiful, and should be.

One hears a great deal just now about the advisability of giving operas in the native language, as it is done in France and Germany, and the idea would seem to have its advantages, as has already been demonstrated in some excellent performances of German, French and Italian operas in English. But of what avail would such a project be if, after all, one could not understand the words of his own language as they were sung? The language might as well be Sanskrit or Chinese.

In France the matter of diction is probably given the greatest attention, and singers at the Opera Comique, for instance, are noted for their pure and distinct enunciation of every syllable. Indeed, it is as much of a sine qua non there as good singing, if not more so, and the numerous subtleties in the French language are difficult enough to justify this special stress being laid upon correct pronunciation.

Some people claim that a pronunciation too distinct or too much insisted upon spoils the real voice quality, but this should not be the case if the words are correctly and naturally brought out. Doubtless this impression has come from the fact that, particularly in France, many singers possessed of small voices must exaggerate their diction to obtain their effects. But if they did not have this perfect diction they often would have little else to recommend them. I would aver that a fine enunciation, far from interfering with it, aids the voice production, makes it softer and more concentrated; but diction should act rather as a frame for the voice and never replace it.

The Danger of Shouting

Many too ambitious students are their own worst enemies in the culture of their voices. Because they have large vocal power, they want to shout all the time, in spite of the repeated admonitions of their masters, who beg them to sing piano, but they hear nothing except the noise they themselves make. Such headstrong ones will never make a career, even with the finest voices in the world. Their teachers should give up trying to make them listen to reason, and devote their attention to those who merit it and want to study seriously. Singing as an art is usually not considered with enough earnestness. One should go to a singing master as one goes to a specialist for a consultation, and follow with the greatest care his directions. If one does not have the same respect and confidence one places in a physician it must be because the singing master does not really merit it, and it would be much better to make a change at once.

Advice on Teachers and Other Matters

In general, it is better not to rely entirely on one teacher, for it is easy to get into a rut in this way, and someone else may have a quite different and more enlightening way of setting forth his ideas.

"Poor sad humanity

Through all the dust and heat,
Turns back with bleeding feet
By the same road it came,
Until the simple thought
By the great Master taught
And that remaineth still—
Not he that repeateth the name,
But he that doeth the will."

"A wealth undreamed of and almost passing belief" says THE CONTINENT

"Tarbell's Guide almost amazes me by its ability and advantage to any teacher" says G. Campbell Morgan.

Dr. R. J. Campbell, who was a recent visitor to California, has returned to England enthusiastic over the climate and scenery of that state, and even more so over the people. According to The Christian World of London, Dr. Campbell said in a recent lecture that the Californians seemed not to have lost the church-going habit to the extent that the English people had lost it of late years. He stated that he was met by large audiences everywhere.

Says
Edwin Markham:

"I consider The Christian Century one of the most progressive, if not the most progressive church paper, in a social sense, that I have ever read. I want its editor to know that I am back of him with all the power I have."

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

A Journal of Religion

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON and HERBERT L. WILLETT, Editors

FOUR DOLLARS A YEAR

Says

Rev. Charles E. Gilkey:

"I have been reading religious periodicals during the last ten years, but not one of them has contributed either to my thinking, preaching or living, anything like the wealth of guidance and inspiration that I find in The Christian Century."

The New Voice for the New Time!

THE WELCOME that has been given The Christian Century during the past two years by the leaders of thought throughout the nation is one of the most encouraging signs in the history of religious journalism. For such a day as this, the leaders are saying, The Christian Century has come. Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists, Disciples, Baptists and other Christian groups are enthusiastically interested in the service The Christian Century is rendering the entire religious world in interpreting religion as directly applicable to the solution of the problems of today.

BISHOP FRANCIS J. McCONNELL, Methodist Episcopal Church, Pittsburgh.

"I regard The Christian Century as the greatest journalistic force working for social and international righteousness coming from any press of the Christian church. Personally I watch for the arrival of The Christian Century with the utmost eagerness. I never lay down an issue of the paper without feeling a new stimulus for the wider application of the gospel."

PRES. W. H. P. FAUNCE, Brown University.

"I read every paragraph in The Christian Century every week with constantly growing satisfaction. Religious newspapers frequently put us into an irreligious mood, but here is one which, whether we agree with its specific opinions or not, has the horizon of the New Testament and the boundless sympathy of the Nazarene. Here is a journal that puts first things first and leaves the petty things far out on the circumference."

PRES. OZORA S. DAVIS, Chicago Theological Seminary.

"There are some things that a man cannot get on without in these days; The Christian Century is one of them. I do not subscribe to all that you write or include in your columns, for sometimes you make me wrathful. But I have never detected a cheap or insincere note in the paper. You are fearless and constructive and are leading the way. I have found your journal on the tables of men from the Atlantic to the Pacific in a somewhat wide cruise this year."

PRES. CHARLES M. STUART, Garrett Biblical Institute, Chicago.

"You give us from week to week, in The Christian Century, wise and helpful guidance to the Christian interpretation of the times in which we live."

SHERWOOD EDDY, missionary statesman and prophet.

"The Christian Century holds a unique place in American journalism. Among the few journals that have stood for complete social justice and a full social gospel I believe The Christian Century holds a unique place. It is fearlessly sounding forth the truth that America in general and the Christian church in particular need to hear."

JOHN SPARGO, famed socialist-philosopher, New York.

"Of all the religious journals coming to my desk the one that I regularly and carefully read with the closest attention and interest is The Christian Century. I admire its editorial policy for its courage, its forcefulness and its devotion to fundamental Christian ideals. It is a great American journal."

PROF. HARRY F. WARD, Union Theological Seminary, N. Y.

"I consider The Christian Century the most promising venture in the field of religious journalism in the English-speaking world. It is on the way to create a common mind among the leaders of Christianity in this country, because it is leading them to think about common problems in the spirit of the Gospels."

REV. CORNELIUS WOELFKIN, Fifth Ave. Baptist Church, N. Y.

"The Christian Century is the one publication coming to my home that gets a reading straight through upon its arrival, and I always anticipate its coming."

MISS JANE ADDAMS, Hull House, Chicago.

"The Christian Century is a happy departure from the conventional church paper. It displays unusual editorial judgment. Many of us have felt the need of a religious journal which shall intelligently treat of current political and social matters from a spiritual viewpoint."

LOUIS F. POST, formerly Assistant Secretary of Labor.

"The Christian Century emphasizes the principles of the golden rule, the second great commandment and the Lord's prayer, and inculcates their application not only to life for the next world, but also to life in this world."

DR. CHARLES E. JEFFERSON:

"I regard The Christian Century as one of the very best religious journals published in this country. Wherever I go, among men who are wide-awake, I find they are reading it."

SCOTT NEARING, sociologist.

"The earnest social message of The Christian Century should gain a hearing wherever men read, think and love truth."

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH IN AMERICA

"THE first Baptist Church, founded by Roger Williams, A. D. 1638. The oldest Baptist Church in America. The oldest church in the State. This Meeting House erected A. D. 1775." These words are inscribed on the side of the structure. When, in 1775, the Declaration of Independence was being signed by the thirteen colonies, the frame of this fine old building was rising in the heart of the Baptist Colony of Rhode Island. The vigor, purity and stately taste of the time were installed into this fine old spire by men who loved architecture and understood, better than we, its time significance in religious life. Joseph Brown, a devout member of the Baptist congregation, was the architect.

Fresh from the Field

A London correspondent of The Churchman of New York writes: "When two English bishops on one Sunday preach in Non-Conformist chapels we may say that we are making progress along the road of reunion—although the progress is slow." The Bishop of Chelmsford preached in Wesley's Chapel, boldly saying on the subject of union, "He did not like the idea of federation, he wanted something closer, a living organic union," even "the vision of a worldwide church." Bishop Welldon, Dean of Durham, preached in Dr. Jowett's Westminster Chapel, returning a visit Dr. Jowett had made to his cathedral,

The Chinese national flag is composed of five colors whose combination characterizes it as "The Rainbow." Each of the five colors represents one race of the Chinese Republic: Red for the Chinese; yellow for the Manchurians; blue for the Mongolians; white for the Turkestans; black for the Tibetans. Before the Chinese Republic was founded, the national flag of China was a dragon with the yellow of the Manchus in the background.

Dr. Arthur J. Brown, prominent Presbyterian board secretary and author of books on the Far East, says that at less than the cost of a single battleship the evangelical churches of America last year carried on work in sixteen countries and 4,000 cities, through 24,000 American and 109,000 native workers.

There have come to hand incomplete figures showing the growth of churches and Sunday schools in Seattle, Wash., during the last ten years. Baptists and Christians have made the most striking gains and four other denominations have gained in membership faster than the population. Of the 40,222 evangelical Protestant church members reported for the city, one-fourth are Presbyterians. There are in the city, however, 212,000 unchurched, that is, neither Protestant, Catholic or Jew, out of a total population of 315,652.

Teaching a group of children in New York City the twenty-third Psalm, Miss Martha Troeck, now the missionary faculty member of the Baptist Missionary Training School in Chicago, tried to make these city children understand the Shepherd and his work by telling of the policeman who helped them to cross the street. The next Sunday she asked them if they remembered the verse they had learned the week before. After some hesitation one little girl raised her hand. "What is it, dear?" asked Miss Troeck. "The Lord is my policeman—I should worry."

A Woman's Home Mission Society meeting held in the home of a Greek Catholic Roumanian with a missionary from India as the chief attraction on the program. A queer tangle, you say? No—simply an example of Christian Americanization! It is work such as is being done by Miss Alice W. S. Brimson, her secretaries and volunteers which tears down the hyphen and makes American citizens of the foreign born in our midst.

Rev. J. Hubbard Morton has resigned the pastorate of the Woodland Church of Philadelphia, and will enter on the pastorate of the First Church, Hillsboro, Ohio, near Cincinnati, Jan. 1. Mr. Morton has been very much interested in Sunday school and young people's work. He is especially interested in summer assemblies, and is a member of the Collegeville Assembly faculty. The Hillsboro Church has a beautiful modern church building, with gymnasium and social rooms, and fine quarters for the Bible school.

The preliminary report of the Census Bureau shows 1,842,161 illiterate foreign-born whites in 1920, which is a percentage of 13.1, and 1,763,740 Negroes, a percentage of 22.09. Foreign-born illiteracy has slightly increased in recent years, having been 12.7 per cent in 1910, 12.9 per cent in 1900 and 12 per cent in 1880. In 1890 it was 31.1 per cent. Thus our work among foreign-speaking people must grow apace. That the Home Mission Society recognizes this relative importance is evidenced by a proportionately large budget for this work. An encouraging feature is the awakening of the lay mind as to our responsibility to new Americans.

Rev. William Keech, our missionary to Salvador, recently has published some vigorous tracts on the subject of religious liberty and has sought to exert his influence in forming public sentiment while the new constitution of the republic has been under consideration. He was led to do this because of the propaganda of the predominating church to secure special favor and protection in the new Central American Union.

It is interesting to note that in the recent campaign put on in Washington to place that state in the front rank in the New World Movement, a very large percentage of churches which have received aid from the Home Mission Society and the state convention are recorded as among those which have splendidly met their allotments.

Solomon Did Not Know It All

We read that there is no new thing under the sun. Solomon never had the fun of being the editor of a denominational newspaper or he would have told another story. The latest suggestion comes to us from a good man who ends his letter with "What is the use of making suggestions anyway?" "Cut out all advertisements," he says. The editors would like to do it. There would be more space for "news" and "publicity" and we need it too. But—sad word—it would be necessary to add just $1 per year to each subscription. Brother, will you get us as good a list at $3.50?

Killam's Kollum

I Do Not Believe They Go

"THE BAPTIST without the Kollum would be like a banquet without a toastmaster. Before passing judgment on those who make the charge of 'undignified' I should like to sit behind them at a world's series game or a football game when their team is winning. I always read the Kollum first. Please continue it." E. J. Steinberg, president of the Wisconsin Baptist Convention.

Do You Go To Prayer Meeting?

Who would not find something to interest him in the church night as observed in some of our churches! Read the Elgin Plan in this issue. This leads us to remark that from our point of view some of the criticisms of this Kollum are the highest kind of commendations. For instance one man who is known from coast to coast objects to some of the material on the grounds that it is "school-boyish." Is this paper designed for deacons only? Or, do we expect our young people to be interested in precisely the same terms and expressions as old age? Where is there the boy or girl in high school or college who uses the language of old age? Much of the slang of yesterday is on the approved list in the dictionary of today. Cannot the new generation which is rapidly displacing us old heads have at least a bit of recognition in the paper? The management of THE BAPTIST proposes to give much more emphasis than heretofore to the things which interest our young folks. Watch for an epoch-making announcement.

An Erect Orthodoxy

"We recommend to the members of the church two of our religious papers, the Watchman-Examiner and THE BAPTIST. The former leans toward conservative orthodoxy and the latter toward liberal orthodoxy." This notice appears in one of the many church calendars which come to our desk. We appreciate the wide publicity given through the church calendars. It shows good business enterprise upon the part of the churches. We, however, venture a mild objection to the notice. We cannot speak authoritatively for our contemporary but we feel sure that Brother Laws will be surprised to find that his paper only leans toward conservatism. As for THE BAPTIST we say without any hesitation, it is orthodox through and through. We do lay emphasis upon the value of right doctrine but we deliberately major upon religious life and experience. We believe that it is our primary mission to help men and women to live a Christian life. We aim to inspire them to live for God and to serve their own day and generation according to his will.

Rev. Milton Fish, pastor of the First Church, San Bernardino, Cal., will on Dec. 18 begin his work as pastor of the Huntington Park Church, Los Angeles. During the four and a half years of his service with the church he is now leaving, the offerings have trebled and the annual membership increase has averaged ninety-five. With a band of life recruits encouraged by the recent departure of a member for missionary service in Japan, it is not surprising that this church is the recognized evangelistic leader in the city. The church has for publicity a declaration of faith of which the following is the preamble: "Inasmuch as the First Baptist Church of San Bernardino is seeking a pastor who is a man after God's own heart, we take this opportunity of stating clearly the convictions and fullness of gospel loyalty, for which we will look in one who comes to this pulpit and pastorate. We are the more careful to set forth our confession of faith in that some preachers use the terms of orthodoxy with unscriptural meanings. We deplore the fact that because some deem themselves competent to decide that a part of the Bible is not God's inerrant Word, they set forth another gospel, denying the sufficiency of Christ's shed blood, proclaiming a righteousness earned by self-culture, teaching that human nature can ever be made fit for heaven, questioning the virgin birth of Jesus Christ, toning down his claims to be God, doubting the personality of Satan, not fully believing that "the wrath to come" is conscious eternal suffering in hell, considering the Holy Spirit an impersonal divine influence, and ignoring the personal premillennial coming of our Lord."

The annual week of prayer for the churches is Jan. 1-7. As is its custom the Federal Council has sent out to all pastors a suggested list of subjects of prayer for this week as follows: Monday, thanksgiving and confession; Tuesday, the church universal; Wednesday, nations and their leaders; Thursday, foreign missions; Friday, Christian education and the Christian home; Saturday, home missions.

Rev. W. W. Wightman, a statement from whom appeared in the Nov. 5 issue, is pastor of the Sixth Avenue Church, Tacoma, Wash., and not of the church in Charleston, as indicated in that issue.

Referring to a recent visit of Dr. F. A. Agar to Louisville, Ky., Rev. John F. Fraser, pastor of the Fourth Avenue Church of that city, says: "He spoke at the chapel of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary every morning, where 500 young preachers and missionaries laughed and cried as they listened to his insistent plea for the tithe as the minimum fraction of Christian loyalty. Baptist preachers and laymen gathered in various and sundry audiences, at luncheons and central meetings where the missing link between the local church and the Seventy-Five Million was made quite obvious and somewhat striking. Always sweet-natured, but pungent and compelling, that genial and democratic Irishman left us all feeling that there are no geographical limits on fundamental orthodoxy. We hope you Northern Baptists will lend him to us again."

What the Baptist University pastor work means to 6,000 boys and girls from our Baptist homes, is illustrated by the following extract from a letter dated Nov. 29: "I have found a new interest. I might almost say a new life, since I came to Illinois, and that interest has come through the influence and inspiration of the services and work of the University Church, so lovingly and wisely directed by its pastor, the Rev. Martin S. Bryant and his lovely wife."

STEWARDSHIP is intimately interwoven with spiritual life. If a Christian does not acknowledge God as the owner of all he has and himself as a steward of all God has given to him, there is something at the heart of his Christian life that will prevent full and normal Christian influences and activities.

Last year Baptists gave $12,596,694.48 for benevolences, that counted on the New World Movement. We probably gave twice that much for benevolences that did not count on the New World Movement. But the total of these two items is over $12,000,000, less than a tithe of the Baptist income last year.

On Dec. 1, Rev. Forrest L. Fraser completed fifteen months as pastor of the First Church of Newark, Ohio. During this time 138 new members have been received, making the present membership 670. The Sunday school has doubled its average attendance, running now over the 300 mark. The prayer meetings are a special source of inspiration running many times over the 100 mark. The church debt has decreased from $18,500 to $5,100, of which more than half is underwritten. It is the purpose of the church to pay every cent of debt by next June. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel F. VanVoorhis recently gave $5,000 toward the purchase of a new parsonage and the church added enough more to buy a fine home on the main thoroughfare of the city. The church has just recently closed a two-weeks evangelistic effort. Seventy-two definite decisions were registered. Thirty of this number have been baptized and more than that number are now being prepared for baptism. Evangelists A. W. Littrell and D. L. Moody of Columbus assisted the pastor.

Almost every director of promotion has a copy of the stewardship lecture entitled "The New World Movement Goal—How to Reach It," and there is a set in the office at 276 Fifth Ave., New York City. There are thirty-one slides in the lecture including four slides with the hymn, "I gave my life for thee." This lecture should be in constant use during the next few weeks.

Rev. Homer J. Vosburgh of the First Church, Watertown, N. Y., has received an unexpected call to the pastorate of the First Church, Morgantown, W. Va., but has not yet announced his decision. The field is attractive because near the growing University of West Virginia. Many of the faculty are members of the church and several hundred students express a Baptist preference.

Evangelist J. N. Edmondson of Atwood, Ill., is now ready to book engagements for 1922. With small churches he leads his chorus and does his own solo work. A good chorus leader and personal worker is furnished when the church is willing to bear the expense.

If each one of 1,000,000 Baptists would give to the New World Movement the tithe of one dollar each day for 300 days, in one year the total would amount to $30,000,000.

A telegram has been received announcing the safe arrival of Rev. W. B. Lippard at Hamburg, Germany, on the Steamship Esthonia, on which the greater part of the supplies contributed by Northern Baptists for distribution in various European countries were shipped. Passengers and officers on vessels reaching New York recently have reported exceedingly rough weather on the North Atlantic at the time when the Steamship Esthonia was crossing. Mr. Lippard was expected to reach Latvia Dec. 8. In Latvia he will be very near the Russian border.

A cablegram has been received announcing that Secy. F. H. J. Lerrigo has sailed from West Africa, after completing his visit to the Congo Mission. He is expected to reach New York by Jan. 15.

A card from Rev. Joseph Clark says: "Those of your readers who met Rev. Chas. W. Padfield of the Congo-Balolo mission when he was in America participating in the African mission conference this spring will be saddened to hear that on the way back to his field he was called to his eternal home on Oct. 14. We were traveling together on the river steamer 'Ambleve.' We spent the evening at our Tchumbiri station. Next day he was not feeling well and the English mission doctor visited him when we were at Bolobo. At Lukolele another doctor saw him and seemed to expect quick recovery. But next day he was called hence and his body rests at Irebu. Pray for his wife and three little children in England. He had eighteen years of splendid mission service and will be much missed."

Judge Jesse A. Baldwin of Chicago died at his home just before midnight on Dec. 7 after an illness of two weeks. Funeral services were held on Dec. 10, and were conducted by Rev. T. G. Soares, Rev. Carl B. Case and Rev. Wm. E. Barton. Mr. Baldwin leaves a widow, three sons, one sister and three brothers, one of whom, Henry R., was a former law partner. He was born in 1854, studied at the University of Illinois, and was admitted to the bar in 1877. From 1877 to 1884 he served as assistant United States district attorney. He was elected twice to the circuit bench, serving from 1909-15 and from 1915-21. Judge Baldwin has given valuable service to many institutions, notable among which must be counted the Baptist interests of the city of Chicago. He has been a resident of Oak Park for thirty-two years and a member of the First Church there. A righteous man, loyal in all good works, is missed from among the ranks of his brethren.

Baptist Pastors Deserve Better Treatment

A BAPTIST church within the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention was without a pastor. A minister was invited to supply its pulpit on a given Sunday. His service that day was helpful and many expressed the hope that he might become their pastor. One of the deacons expressed the kindly sentiments of the people to him and asked him, "What would be the least he could live on in that community?" "THE LEAST!" It was later learned by this minister that the same question had been asked of two other ministers, and thus unconsciously they were forced to bid against one another.

It is well that we should provide a pension. If most of our ministers live on little—some on "least"—they will surely need it. The Ministers and Missionaries' Benefit Board urges your church to show its purpose to do its BEST for your pastor by providing as a Christmas present, at least the dues of the first year of membership in the Retiring Pension Fund.

Who Made the Crisis?

THE denomination faces a crisis. Where can you find a more heart-rending array of facts than the official statements of our societies and boards in this issue! The societies are all disappointed in their plans, hampered in their work and plunging more deeply into debt. Who is responsible for this sorry plight?

It should not be forgotten, in the first place, that we started out to do a really great piece of work for God and the world. We dreamed a great dream. We saw ourselves as one of the great Christian bodies measuring up to the call of the hour.

A survey indicated that $100,000,000 was needed for our work within a period of five years. At this staggering amount we did not hesitate. Of course it was not possible for us to count the cost of such an undertaking, for it was something entirely new. Its very daring challenged us. We launched out with courage and faith born in part at least of our experience in the great financial drives of the war period. We got a bad start. The troubles in which the Interchurch found itself became in a large measure our own. Our forces were for practical purposes divided; many churches and individuals held aloof from the New World Movement; some even openly antagonized it.

But why go back into ancient history? What is the sum total of the result? We find ourselves with a $100,000,000 plan and program on our hands with only one-half that amount even in pledges. It is perfectly clear that the $100,000,000 enterprise cannot be run on $50,000,000, mostly on paper. We have had recently little cash but large credit. We have used the credit. What else could we do? Our world-wide work required money and we used our credit to get the cash. The good name of our denomination, as reflected in the long and honorable dealing of our societies and boards, made possible the postponement of the crisis it could not cure. It was our credit which timed this shock.

It has cost a lot of money to run the business. We all know this is true. It has cost a lot of money to run the societies and boards; it has cost a lot of money to run the Board of Promotion; it has cost a lot of money to run the state conventions—more than ever before in their history. Because of their strategic position and splendid organization, the state conventions have gotten a larger portion of their money than many other societies and boards, probably on the principle that the husbandman should first be partaker of the fruits.

We have undertaken a big job. Every dollar of the $100,000,000 is necessary to complete it. It is costing us practically as much to run at half capacity as it would full tilt. Of the money pledged for the work, only about one-half of the amount now due has been paid. When we have only one-half of one-half of our necessary working capital, is it any wonder that we face a crisis?

Who made this crisis? We dare not blink at the fact that the men and the churches which failed to join hands in the great Kingdom enterprise made this crisis. The men and churches who, having made worthy pledges, have fallen behind in their payments—they made this crisis. The boards did not create it. The payment of the unpaid pledges which made necessary the borrowing of money and the consequent payment of vast sums of interest would at this minute bring a large measure of relief. It would save us from immediate disastrous retrenchment, and this is worth while.

Good news is coming of churches which are putting on the campaign for the first time. There are many of these and we trust that we shall soon feel the full relief which their financial strength makes possible. Other churches in the face of unfavorable industrial conditions are completing their allotments and the courage and faith of our women are present tokens of the better day about to dawn.

A call has gone out for prayer. Let all our churches pray first for the missionaries. Their hopes have been kindled by reports of activity at home. Their plans have been taking form. They went out not because they preferred to live in China, India or Japan, but because they wanted to serve there. Pray for the missionaries that the disappointment may not break their spirit, that the necessity for carrying double may not break their health. Pray for our administrative officers who sit over against the mail bag and know as no one else can know the full meaning of our failure to bring to full completion the great task. Pray for the pastors that in this crisis they may be men of faith, unselfish men, God's men; that the insidious suggestions of the pressing need at home may not swerve them from the plain path of duty. Pray for those who must because of our failure be left in darkness, perhaps to be shut out forever from the knowledge of Christ. Pray for yourself that you may not only pay what you have pledged, but that you may pledge all that you should pay as one of God's stewards.

The reputation of Northern Baptists is at stake. But even more is there involved the carrying forward of great missionary enterprises which have been built upon the love and sacrifice of men and women. The Word says that "the glory of fathers is their children." But what if we fail them? What if we fail our Lord whose work this is?

We do face a crisis. Our agents in the societies and boards have given to us the bitter facts. We can trust our folks to face the facts and meet the crisis which they so plainly indicate. Today let us begin anew to teach stewardship of life and time and money and continue until every man and woman who become members of our churches shall be active partners with Christ for the redemption of the world.

Where Generosity Is Found

ONCE upon a time there was an impression that entirely outside of the church there was a deposit of generosity which could be found and tapped, and that when this was done millions of dollars would be liberated for charitable and humane purposes. That was in the old days of men's ignorance. Nobody of any consequence believes that now. No man would want to try the experiment of financing any great movement from such sources. Experience has proved that practically all the people who can be depended upon to give money to good causes are found either within the churches or closely attached to them.

Why should it be otherwise? The standard of the world is based on getting; it is only the church which trains its people in the belief that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." The world acts according to its standard; and the church acts in far larger measure than is often charged according to the standard of Jesus. The Christian who has become one with his Master counts not his own life dear unto himself, but looks upon it as a trust of which he is to give account. Of his property also he is merely a steward, and it is all to be used for the glory of God.

Three of our national societies, the Foreign Mission Society, the Home Mission Society and the Woman's Home Mission Society are asking that the children of our Sunday schools make a special Christmas offering in behalf of relief work in Europe and for the children's work in connection with the Christian centers in the United States. They are confident of a response for the reason that our Sunday schools are looking for just such opportunities. Receiving presents on Christmas is a joyous experience for any boy or girl; but there is a finer flavor in the joy when there is the consciousness that something has been done for children whose needs are so much greater than their own. We appeal to our Sunday schools to give every pupil a chance this year to know what a wonderful experience it is to double joy by sharing it.

The Return of Reason

WAR is the substitution of force for reason. It is the method of a nation which backs an unreasonable cause or which, living in the midst of nations so governed, is compelled to defend itself. During its continuance all the restraints of civilization are removed and the red rule of tooth and claw prevails. The beastly and the combative instincts surge up in men's breasts and he is the best and the bravest man who can kill the most other men.

When war dies down, the return to reason is often slow. Upsetting conditions is easier than turning them right side up again. Passion feeds on its exercise and every war is therefore followed by individual and national actions which are based on the will to get and to do whatever one pleases, regardless of others.

Congratulations therefore are due the nations that at last there are indications of a return to reason. Suspicion and greed have dominated. We have been warned that enemies are forever lurking around the corner and that our only defense is to be forever armed and on the alert. We have been told that other nations have designs upon us and that the best defense is an attack. Especially have certain interests been trying to make it appear that Japan is a natural and inevitable enemy of the United States. They doubtless had their reasons, but these were not based on any real knowledge of the mind of the Japanese people.

The new quadrilateral agreement for the stabilization of peace in the Pacific, accepted by the delegates of the United States, Great Britain, Japan and France, should free us from all such bogies. This agreement provides for the recognition by the four powers of the status quo of their island possessions in the Pacific and for the initiation of mediation and arbitration of any disputes which may arise between two or more of the powers with respect to such possessions, and which are not settled by conference of the four parties to the pact.

Here we have first, conference. Then if conference fails, we have mediation and arbitration. There is no difficulty which may not be solved under such conditions. Limitations of armament are entirely possible when such agreements are made and loyally kept.

There has been much pooh poohing in certain diplomatic circles at the idealism of the churches. Note, however, that it is only as nations approximate the ideals and methods of Jesus that they make substantial progress. The United States is fortunate in having an administration influenced and guided by Christian ideals.

So, Lincoln Was a Baptist

PAPERS throughout the country are carrying a very interesting story about the family of Abraham Lincoln, thus:

"Rolling back the mists of a century and offering the deerskin-bound records of Little Pigeon Baptist Church as the missing link of Abraham Lincoln's religion Thomas B. McGregor, assistant attorney-general of the State of Kentucky, has given to an appreciative America substantial evidence that Abraham Lincoln was reared in the simple faith of the Baptist Church.

"After Thomas Lincoln had married Sally Bush Johnson he sent back to his Kentucky church and obtained his letter of fellowship and as the minutes on June 1, 1823, show, he united with the Pigeon Creek Church by this letter and his wife by experience. From that date until they moved to Illinois in 1830, their names appear frequently in the minutes of the church proceedings, Thomas being one of the pillars of the church, acting as moderator, on committees to investigate the conduct of brethren and sisters, and messenger to associations, bearing the letter of Pigeon Creek to her sister churches.

"The parents of Abraham Lincoln were well-to-do pioneers of their day; of sturdy ancestral stock, owned a farm, domestic animals, tools and a family Bible, neighborly, sacrificing and active church-going members.

"Pigeon Creek Church was founded on June 8, 1816, the year that Thomas Lincoln and his family moved from Kentucky and settled on Little Pigeon Creek in what was then Warrick County, Indiana Territory."

THE COMING OF AMERICAN FREEDOM

Irish extremists declare that the treaty between Great Britain and Ireland denies Ireland's fondest hopes and must not be ratified. Common opinion, however, is to the effect that it grants all that can possibly be expected at this time, and will therefore be ratified before these lines are read.

De Valera, hyphenated Spaniard, doctrinaire and extremist, must continue to assert to the end that nothing but complete independence will do. But the men who have fought the longest and suffered the most believe that a great victory has been won. Arthur Griffin says: "These proposals give Ireland the control of her own destinies and place our future in our own hands. They enable us to stand on our own feet and to develop our own civilization and national distinctiveness. They constitute a regainment of Irish liberty after a struggle of centuries."

The great majority of Americans probably believe that Ireland should have a similar form of government to that Canada enjoys and will therefore approve what has been done.

But most of all America may rejoice if Irish battles are no longer fought on American soil and if the Irish question may now disappear from American politics. Too long has this question been a disturbing element in our national life. The day has come at length when America can be free.

BAYLOR UNIVERSITY PURGED

The Associated Press, under date of Dec. 9, carried this announcement: "Because of charges that certain parts of a book of which he is the author are not in line with teachings of the Bible Prof. Grove Samuel Dow, head of the department of sociology at Baylor University, a Baptist institution at Waco, Texas, has tendered his resignation and it has been accepted." We understand that Prof. Dow believed in and taught evolution. The pressure against him was for the greater glory of God. We trust that our Lord is pleased.

THE REDISCOVERY OF THE BIBLE

An increasing number of newspapers in all parts of the country carry one or more verses of the Bible in a prominent position on the editorial page every day. These verses are sometimes chosen by a local minister and are sometimes indicated by a Bible organization which exists for this particular purpose. Editors are not accustomed to use good space for material in which their readers are not concerned; we may assume, therefore, that these Bible verses come within the category of "live stuff." Presumably also they are new enough to large numbers of readers so that there is an element of novelty in the reading.

During the last few weeks there have come under our notice paid advertisements of churches, some of them using as much as six inches, double column, the greater portion of which were made up of quotations from the Bible, with an announcement of church services in the lower part of the space. Only one reason can exist for such a method of advertising, and that is the belief that these verses from the Bible are likely to be effective in producing meditation on spiritual themes, perhaps even to the extent of arousing conscience, with the result that the readers will be inclined to seek the churches for the sacred ministry there rendered.

Close observers are asserting that the preaching of ministers is marked by a larger expository element than was the case a few years ago, indicating that there is a renewing interest on the part of congregations in the great messages of the Book.

No more hopeful state of things could be indicated. The rediscovery of the Bible has always resulted in revival. It may not be amiss to notice that the ingatherings in our churches of the last year are the largest for a long period of time and that the indications are that the present year is to surpass the record of last. God's Word does not return to him void. Faithfully and pungently preached it produces results.

Baptists have always claimed that they are the people of the Book. If so, there is additional reason for saying that this is their day. Happy is that man or woman who has the chance to open the Bible to a class of men or women, or boys or girls! Happy also is that preacher who knows how to preach the Word or who will take the time and trouble to learn! Expository preaching is not easy; it means mental sweat if it is to be done effectively; but unless all indications are wrong, it is calculated now, as at so many times in the past, to produce great results for the Kingdom of God.

NOT THE BOOK HE INTENDED

Mr. William T. Lougee confirms the story that, before Ben Hur was written, Gen. Lew Wallace had intended writing a novel exposing the falsity of the Bible story of Jesus. Years ago, when Mr. Lougee was a Y. M. C. A. secretary in New Bedford, Mass., Gen. Wallace told him in detail how he had been urged by Robert G. Ingersoll to help him in freeing the American people from what he called "the Christian superstition." Wallace promised to assist. But as he read the gospels, in preparing for his task, he came to the conviction that Jesus was a historical character. "But if he was a real person in history, may he not have been in the universe just what he said he was?" thought the student. The supposition became conviction and one night Gen. Wallace fell on his knees and cried to Christ for pardon. Ben Hur was the result. The word of God is quick and powerful and Wallace was not the first nor will he be the last to be convicted and converted when brought face to face with its message.

CHRISTMAS A RELIGIOUS HOLIDAY

Christmas is a religious holiday and is more enjoyed if a religious tone is given to the observance. In our rush to get shopping done and to see that nobody on our list is omitted, in our talk of Yule and of Santa Claus, this may sometimes slip from mind. The editors commend the reading of the story by Miss Applegarth which appears in the Chimney Corner in this issue. It has a valuable suggestion for parents and for young people who are only now setting up their new homes.

A Crisis in the Work of Northern Baptists

Unless present conditions are immediately relieved and a larger income is made available, retrenchment will become inevitable. Official statements from each national society.

By J. Y. AITCHISON

THE following official statements indicate the critical financial condition which our National Societies and Boards are facing. These distressing facts are due, in a large part, to the decrease in receipts from New World Movement pledges during the first six months of the current fiscal year or since May 1, 1921.

It is doubtless true that during the last fiscal year the receipts of every organization participating in the New World Movement were in excess of the receipts of any previous year. This is an occasion for deep gratitude to God. The increased cost of conducting our work has, for the most part, absorbed the increased income. Unless present conditions are immediately relieved and a larger income is made available, retrenchment will become inevitable.

We are confident that when the facts are known, our people will respond and furnish the funds needed.

A strenuous effort to collect what is due on pledges will be put forth during the next few weeks. We beseech all our churches and individual subscribers to respond heartily and promptly to this appeal.

Extensive efforts are being put forth also to increase the subscriptions to the New World Movement Fund by $30,000,000 between now and April 30, 1922. Of this $30,000,000 the subscribers will be asked to pay one-third during the current fiscal year and one-third during each of the remaining years of the New World Movement period.

The following statements should be read very carefully. They contain figures and statistics, but they represent life. Every reader will feel the necessity of giving these facts the widest publicity in his own church. They have to do with the training of young men and women for life's work, and with the support of our messengers in all lands. These, our representatives to a lost world, look to us for adequate backing. Christ and we must depend upon them for the winning of men, women and children to Him. He alone is able to save. Northern Baptists will not fail our Lord or our messengers in this crisis.

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSION SOCIETY

DISASTER threatens the foreign mission work of the denomination unless a solution is found for the financial problems confronting the two foreign mission societies in common with the other organizations participating in the New World Movement. If there is not a very large increase in receipts from today until April 30, 1922, the end of our fiscal year, the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society will be compelled to make drastic retrenchments that would greatly injure the work on all our fields in China, India, Japan, Africa, the Philippine Islands and Europe. A few figures will make the situation clear.

The authorized expenditures of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society for the regular work of the present year, including European Relief, are $1,928,287, the same total as for the preceding year. Toward this amount an income of $216,000 is practically assured from legacies, matured annuities and interest on invested funds, leaving $1,712,287 to be provided by contributions from churches and individuals. For the first six months of the year, May 1 to Oct. 31, the total receipts have amounted to $437,214; the receipts from denominational contributions have been $321,873 or about one-half of the amount received during the same period last year. If this ratio is not materially increased, the society instead of receiving $1,344,553 in contributions as was the case last year, will receive only about one-half that sum. The result would be a deficit in the year's accounts of from $500,000 to $700,000. This amount, added to the debt of $689,459.61 reported on April 30, 1921, would make a total debt of from $1,200,000 to $1,400,000.

Under such conditions the society would find it impossible to go on with the present work. If the outcome of the year even approached the figures suggested, the society would be compelled to begin at once heavy reductions in expenditures. This would be an extremely difficult task. The work and workers are many thousands of miles away. To bring missionaries home would cost more—in the immediate future—than to keep them on the field. To keep missionaries on the field and not give them the required financial support would completely dishearten them and render effective work impossible.

Disaster Threatens

Nevertheless, if contributions for the work are not very greatly increased over the present rate of receipts, radical reductions cannot be avoided. No ordinary measures would be sufficient. The missionary staff would have to be reduced. Schools that are supplying a trained leadership and an intelligent Christian community would have to be closed. Hospitals that are ministering in the spirit of the Great Physician to the physical and spiritual needs of the multitude of the sick and suffering could not continue in operation. Churches would be handicapped and crippled in their work for the surrounding non-Christian communities. The faithful staff of native Christian pastors, evangelists and teachers would be disorganized and scattered.

This is not a fanciful or extreme picture. We have simply stated in definite terms what a largely increased deficit and consequent reduction in our annual expenditure would mean. Reductions amounting to about $100,000 are already planned. Your board of managers has no right to continue to spend money for the work beyond the readiness of the denomination to furnish support.

Does some one ask why are we in such critical condition when subscriptions have been larger than ever before? Answers to this question will be found in an earlier statement, "Half Way Through." For the Foreign Mission Society it may be said that the increased receipts so far available have gone chiefly into the greatly increased cost of doing missionary work; for example, a little larger salary for the missionaries and native Christian workers because of the increased cost of living; higher costs of travel; advanced prices for building materials and labor, etc., etc. A moderate portion only of the increase in response to the denomination's call to advance has been used to send out some new missionaries to strengthen depleted forces, to furnish a few imperatively-needed buildings, and to give aid to our stricken brethren in war-devastated Europe.

What Will Be Your Answer?

Fellow Christians, lovers of Christ and of the souls of men, many of you have done all you can. We recognize and are grateful for your heroic and continued efforts. But many can do still more, and yet others have never really put themselves into the great endeavor. We lay this cause, which is the cause of Christ, on your hearts. We trust the Christ in you. We ask you to pray for the Kingdom in secret and together as never before. We can do no more except go on praying and working in hope and love and faith in God and in you.

Of course you recognize that this is only a part of our whole important task in which we are co-operating. We do not solicit gifts for our own society individually, but for the whole New World Movement. The success of all will be the success of each one.

By order of the Board of Managers:
FREDERICK L. ANDERSON, Chairman.
GEORGE B. HUNTINGTON, Treasurer.

THE WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSION SOCIETY

A { Cable
Call Cause
Conclusion

An unusual cable has recently been sent to each of the ten mission fields of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. This cable summons our missionaries and entire native Christian constituency to join in earnest, daily prayer that every dollar needed to carry on the year's work of our great foreign mission societies may be contributed before April 30, 1922. The cable also warns these self-sacrificing and hard working missionaries of the serious financial situation in which these two societies are placed and of the grave peril which threatens the work, if this condition continues.

A call is now being sent to every member in every Baptist church at home to join with the missionaries, the Christians in our churches abroad and the members of the two boards of managers, in earnest, daily prayer that every dollar needed for the regular annual work of the two societies will be given before the close of the year, April 30, 1922. Missionaries cannot remain at their present posts without the salaries which enable them to live; schools cannot be kept open, and teachers' salaries cannot be paid without money; pastors, Bible women and evangelists cannot continue to do their work without the pittance they receive for food and clothes, without Bibles, oxcart fare, etc.—all of which mean regular steady appropriations from our national foreign mission societies. Money can be sent only as it is received.

A cause exists for this call to prayer and for this appeal to our people for earnest daily consideration. The Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society closed the year, April 30, 1921, with an accumulated deficit of $226,122.18. It has needed for the first six months of this present year for its operating budget $334,884.63, toward which it has received from all joyce in automobiles, salaries of additional Bible women, etc., but these do not pay for the rice in a school or the jungle travel of pastor or missionary already authorized by the mission.

5. Not all of our Baptists have pledged to the New World Movement or to the work of any one or more of the societies and organizations; nor are all our people paying their pledges or making their new gifts promptly.

Conclusion: Discouragement for all our missionaries—opportunities lost to save souls for Jesus Christ—unless around the world hearts unite in common and continued supplication to God to whom “nothing shall be impossible.”

“Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble, and He delivered them out of their distresses.”

In behalf of the Executive Committee of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

A Serious Condition

THE budget for the American Baptist Home Mission Society for the current year is $931,839.00. This is substantially the same as that of the previous year, on which we received approximately 90 per cent of our expectations.

Our budget for the first six months this year would therefore be $465,920. Of this amount it was anticipated $363,420 would be received from churches and individuals and $102,500.00 from income from invested funds, matured annuities and legacies.

The actual receipts from churches and individuals for this period have been only $107,993.48 or $255,426.52 less than our expectations.

Our income from invested funds, etc., has been $119,160.18, or $16,660.18 more than expectations.

Our total receipts are therefore $238,766.34 less than the authorized budget to date.

Our total disbursements for the first six months were $388,008.57 or $77,910.43 less than the approved budget for this period.

Notwithstanding the increased income from invested funds, etc., and the savings thus far effected in our operating budget, our net deficit has increased from $98,162.97 on April 30, 1921, to $243,721.12 on October 31, 1921. This is the largest debt in the entire history of the society.

Unless receipts during the next six months improve materially, the sources $92,542. This leaves a shortage at the close of the first half of the year of $242,342, in addition to its deficit.

There are many reasons why the society has this large deficit, of which the most important are as follows:

1. It costs more to live in the Orient today, just as it does here at home and even more in some countries.

2. It has been absolutely imperative, during the last two years, to increase the salaries of the missionaries.

3. Salaries and wages paid to teachers, pastors, evangelists, Bible women, and even to the lowest coolie have been increased. Only in this way has it been possible to keep the work adequately staffed.

4. Many donors have designated their gifts to objects outside the operating expenses of the year. For instance, boards and missionaries re-society will be confronted with a staggering debt, and will be obliged to reduce its missionary forces and curtail its work in every direction.

Only by sacrificial giving can the threatened disaster be averted and the widespread labors of the Society be continued in our homeland, Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico and Central America.

THE WOMAN'S AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY

What is Your Answer? Shall We Retrench?

IF WE do, it will be the first time in the history of our society. Always we have faced forward. We cannot believe that today, when the needs are greater than ever and when the whole world looks to America for moral and spiritual leadership, our great denomination will permit us to withdraw workers from the field. This will be our only course unless there is immediate relief, since present receipts are far below the amount necessary for our current needs.

Home mission work is a sure foundation of a world-wide task. America must be saved if she is to do her part in helping to save the world. We implore the churches immediately to push the payment to date of pledges already made and to assure the completion of the $100,000,000 fund.

Shall it be Retrench or Go Forward?

Receipts, May to November, 1920 .....	$114,216.77
Receipts, May to November, 1921 .....	61,000.95
Decrease, 1921 over 1920 .....	53,215.82
Monthly receipts necessary to carry on operating budget .....	40,000.00
Average monthly receipts May to November, 1921 .....	10,000.00
Borrowed money to May 1, 1921 .....	228,552.23
Total borrowed money to November 15, 1921 ....	317,666.66

The item "Borrowed Money" on which we must pay interest, does not indicate that our disbursements have exceeded the budget allowed us by the Northern Baptist Convention. On the contrary the disbursements have been well within the budget. The proportion which the total amount borrowed, namely, $317,666.66 bears to the annual budget of $483,404, proves the desperate need of our society.

A survey of home mission opportunities reveal "fields white, already to harvest," but lacking the laborers who shall gather in the sheaves? Scores of trained women should be assigned at once to service among Italians, Mexicans, Negroes, cosmopolitan groups, the Slavic races and the neighboring multitudes in Central America. But there are no funds in our treasury.

Buildings too are needed: Christian Centers in great industrial and cosmopolitan communities, making intelligible to New Americans the love of God, the message of the Gospel. There is crying need of school buildings in Mexico, Central America, Cuba and Porto Rico. Nowhere else is our obligation to provide Christian education more imperative than among our Spanish-speaking neighbors. But there are no funds in our treasury.

New fields should be cultivated. The rewards attending our service among Japanese, Italians, Mexicans and Latin-Americans at home and to the South of our country kindle the desire to extend the work. But there are no funds in our treasury.

No favorable response is possible so long as the present financial condition continues. Not that only, the present condition of our Society indicates not merely standstill, but actual retrenchment.

What is Your Answer?

In behalf of the Board of Managers: MRS. GEORGE W. COLEMAN, President; MARY E. BLOOMER, Treasurer; KATHERINE S. WESTFALL, Executive Secretary.

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

Those Twenty-Seven Million Boys and Girls

Our greatest hope, our finest challenge, and our biggest opportunity are in the children of our land. Yet we are wasting our childhood resources. Twenty-seven million boys and girls in the United States do not attend Sunday school. Of the 20,500,000 children from six to twelve years of age in our land, only 5,350,000 are in our Sunday schools. We can save ourselves from becoming a nation of religious illiterates only by placing religion on a par with other interests in the education of the child.

Further Progress is Threatened

The Publication Society is the agent of Northern Baptists for the promotion of religious education among our people. Without educated Christians, trained for service, the work of the Kingdom cannot go forward. This work, the laying of the foundations upon which must be built the churches of tomorrow, has grown steadily, with most gratifying results during the last decade. But today its further progress is seriously threatened because of the serious shrinkage in our receipts.

An Alarming Situation

Last year, in the first six months, the Publication Society received from all sources $159,734.14. During the first six months of this year it has received only $91,510.09, or $78,224.05 less than the previous year for the same period.

Last year the expenditures of the society were, for the first six months, $172,427.19. This year the expenditures have been $168,052.48. The average monthly income last year was $26,622.36; the average this year has been only $15,251.68. The monthly expenditures last year were $28,737.86; this year they have been $28,008.75. Last year the average monthly deficit for the first six months was $2,115.50 or $12,693 for the period. This year the monthly deficit has averaged $12,757.07, and is $76,542.42 for the period—more than six times as great as that of last year. And yet the expenditures are less than 85% of the amount approved by the finance committee of the convention, and authorized by the convention itself.

The Society's Embarrassment

This extraordinary shrinkage in the expected receipts has produced a critical situation. The society has been obliged to borrow heavily to maintain its work even approximately at the level of last year. It has practiced economy wherever possible, even to the extent of not filling vacancies caused by resignation. It has had to tell several of the states whose directors of religious education have resigned that it cannot provide for the remainder of this fiscal year the necessary funds for the appointment of directors to take their places. Any lessening of our work for the churches in the field of religious education is a tragedy, in view of the general situation in our land.

The Bible

There is no missionary work of the denomination more fundamental than the distribution of God's word to those who have never had it. The Publication Society is the agent of the denomination for this work. The society keeps a stream of Bibles flowing out into the unchurched communities and homes of our land. We must not let this stream dry up! We should replenish its sources un-

A Primer of Theology

By A. H. STRONG

VII. UNION WITH CHRIST

THE degeneration of sin is to be overcome only by regeneration from above. The initial work of Christ's Spirit is fortunately instantaneous, though its consequences are lifelong and unspeakably blessed. We can turn over a new leaf in a moment; and, whatever may be our past, we can turn to God today if we will only hear his voice and harden not our hearts. God regenerates only by leading us to accept Christ as our Lord and Savior. Repentance and faith are the evidences in us that, having come to him, he has been faithful to his promise, and has not cast us out. Let us make sure that we know what is meant by faith. It is not simply an idea of the intellect or a stirring of the feelings. It is primarily an act of the will (Syst. Theol. 3:838, 839). If I stood upon an islet in the middle of a rushing river at flood-tide, when there was danger that a rise in the water might sweep me away, the sight of a boat near by would be a very pleasant one. But seeing the boat will not save me, nor will my deeply feeling its value as a means of deliverance. Only my getting into the boat will avail when the stream rises to wet my feet. So faith is not my intellectual belief that there is a Christ, nor any deep stirring of any emotions with regard to him, but only the act of my will in committing myself to him as my Lord and Savior. Obedience and reception, consecration and appropriation, giving and taking, are the essence of faith. In other words, faith is an act of the will more than it is an act of intellect or of emotion, and is the means of salvation, not because it is of any value in itself, but only because it joins us to Christ, our manifested God and Redeemer.

Many years ago a man who had lost a beautiful daughter wrote to me of an incident in her early life. The father was building a new house for himself and was inspecting its cellar. As yet there was no stairway, and he was there in the dark. He heard the patter of little feet over his head and he ran to the opening which the stairs were to fill. He heard a little voice ask: "Papa, are you there?" He answered: "Yes, Mary, I am here. Jump down and I will catch you." And the little child jumped down so quickly that if he had not sprung forward to receive her, she would have broken her limbs upon the floor below. It was a leap into the dark. But she knew her father's voice, and had faith in his word. Faith in Christ is, in like manner, a leap in the dark. But it is the most rational act of one's life; for it takes for granted that "as a father pities his children, so the Lord pities those who fear him" (Ps. 103: 13), and that, when we cast ourselves upon Christ for salvation, we shall find "the eternal God to be our refuge, and underneath us shall be the everlasting arms" (Deut. 33:27).

At the first World's Fair ever held in America there was exhibited a steam-engine all of whose working parts were made of glass. The steam came from without; but, being hot enough to move machinery, this steam was itself invisible, and there was presented the curious spectacle of an engine, transparent, moving, and doing important work, while yet no cause for this activity was perceptible. So the Christian, the church, humanity, the universe, are in constant and progressive movement; but the Christ, who moves them, and who furnishes all their power for the good, though not for the evil, is himself invisible. The merging of ourselves in Christ is therefore the first duty of man. "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent," says Christ (John 6:29); "for, apart from me, ye can do nothing" (15:5). But this merging of ourselves in Christ is not pantheistic, but rather the normal assertion of the human will and the only way to recover its freedom. For this reason all those interpretations of Paul and of John which make our relation to Christ to be one of mere pupilage or fellowship fail to get at the secret of the gospel, which is "Christ in you, the hope of glory" (Col. 1:27). Union with Christ is not a union of mere pupilage or fellowship. When Paul tells us that it is no longer he that lives, but that Christ lives in him (Gal. 2:20), when he speaks of "Christ who is our life" (Col. 3:4), when he says, "For me to live is Christ" (Phil. 1:21), he can only be understood as meaning that the life of the personal Redeemer subjugates and penetrates his own. And this is only what we might expect when we consider that he is already the natural life of all mankind, the incarnate head of the human race, "the root" as well as "the offspring of David" (Rev. 22:16), standing at the door of every human heart, and asking only its assent to enter in and dwell there forever (Rev. 3:20).

"Thou seemest human and divine,
The highest, holiest manhood,
thou;

Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours, to make them thine."

This union with Christ, as a method of salvation, shows its incomparable superiority to all other methods, by giving to the believer peace, purity and power. We call the making of peace with God by the name of justification. What no pretense of good works could do, the confession of sin and absolute trust in Christ does do, in restoring peace to the conscious sinner. I have One who has paid my debts and answered for me to the offended majesty of God, and since Christ is my very life, his answer is my own.

"From whence this fear and unbelief?

Hast thou, O Father, put to grief
Thy spotless Son for me?
And will the righteous Judge of men
Condemn me for that debt of sin
Which, Lord, was laid on thee?"

"Turn then, my soul, unto thy rest;
The merits of thy great High Priest
Speak peace and liberty;
Trust in his efficacious blood
Nor fear thy banishment from God
Since Jesus died for thee."

Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. But, besides justification, we have sanctification; by which we mean purification from inward evil, at least in its beginnings here, and certainly in its completeness hereafter. Union with Christ secures to the believer the continuously transforming and assimilating power of Christ's life—first, for the soul; secondly, for the body—consecrating it in the present, and in the future raising it up in the likeness of Christ's glorified body (Phil. 3:21). Here is the real truth of which so-called "Christian Science" has made so perverted a use—the influence of a converted soul on an enervated and sin-stained body. As Alexander McLaren has said: "If we are in Christ, we are like a diver in his crystal bell, and have a solid though invisible wall around us, which keeps all sea-monsters off us, and communicates with the upper air whence we draw the breath of calm life and can work in security though in the ocean depths."

Many have struggled against sin until they have admitted Christ into their hearts; then they could say: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith" (1 John 5:4).

Is this doctrine of union with Christ consistent with any belief in evolution? To this I reply that it is the only logical conclusion from the theory of theistic evolution. If it is consistent with evolution that the physical and natural life of the human race should be derived from a single source, then it is equally consistent with evolution that the moral and spiritual life of the race should be derived from a single source. Science is now tending toward belief in the origin of humanity in a single pair, and theology is equally drawn to belief in a single transgression as the explanation of man's universal tendencies to evil. Scripture is stating only scientific fact when it sets the second Adam, the head of redeemed humanity, over against the first Adam, the head of fallen humanity. We are told that evolution should give us many Christs. We reply that evolution has not given us many Adams. Evolution, as it assigns to the natural head of the race a supreme and unique position, must be consistent with itself and must assign a supreme and unique position to Jesus Christ, the spiritual head of the race. As there was one Adam from whom all the natural life of the race was derived, so there can be but one Christ from whom all the spiritual life of the race is derived (Syst. Theol., 3:803).

Our union with Christ is often called a mystical union. It is indeed inscrutable, since we cannot fully understand any fact of life. It is mystical, however, not in the sense of being unintelligible to the Christian or beyond the reach of his experience, but only in the sense of surpassing in its intimacy and value any other union of souls that we know (Eph. 5:32; Col. 1:27). Dr. J. W. Alexander called this doctrine "the central truth of all theology and of all religion." The greatest teachers of the church in modern times, such as Calvin, Bunyan, Edwards, Fuller, have declared it to be their faith. I may well close my treatment of it with the rough but thrilling words of Luther: "By faith thou art so glued to Christ that of thee and him there becomes as it were one person, so that with confidence thou canst say: 'I am Christ—that is, Christ's righteousness, victory, etc. are mine'; and Christ in turn can say: 'I am that sinner—that is, his sins, his death, etc. are mine, because he clings to me and I to him, for we have been joined through faith into one flesh and bone.'" (Syst. Theol., 3:803, 808).

A Crisis in the Work

til it becomes a mighty river of blessing to the peoples of the earth.

The One Way Out

There is only one way out of this very critical situation that is worthy of us, and that can be pleasing to our Lord, that is, to pay our pledges in full, thus keeping faith with God. This will take care of present debts. It will enable us to maintain, with a measure of efficiency, our existing work.

The Complete Answer

However, the advance in all our work for which provision was made in the Survey, will be made possible only as we complete the $100,000,000 of the New World Movement.

GILBERT N. BRINK, Corresponding Secretary; GEORGE L. ESTABROOK, Treasurer.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION

THE Board of Education has received for the first six months of this year $18,474.53. The Board has expended during the same period $70,435.38. Who will suffer if the receipts are not greatly increased? If a halt must be called or a retreat ordered in the missionary education program or in the work for students, then every Baptist who feels the obligation to preach the Gospel to every creature must be deeply concerned.

Early impressions are lasting. The tens of thousands who are now members of the Children's World Crusade, when they have grown to manhood and womanhood will not need high-pressure methods to extract money for the extension of the Kingdom of Christ. The World Wide Guild has enlisted a great number of young women in mission study. Shall we retrench here? More than 50,000 of our Baptist people have registered in reading courses and church schools of missions. Can we afford to discontinue this sort of effort.

Retrenchment in the work of the Board of Education would mean the withdrawal also of pastors from our great universities. The boy and girl from the home and the home church will be to the professor a pupil, to the merchant just a customer. They are very dear to the home folks, but at college they are roomers and boarders. To most of the residents in the college town they are birds of passage. Who will care for their souls? The worth of the university pastor has been proven. Yet on the basis of present receipts some of these experts in friendship must be withdrawn. These men were chosen because of their divine love for young people, but unless receipts greatly increase, they cannot be supported. We know that the thirty-five men now at work are preventing great wreckage of faith and of life. We know that they are developing men and women for Christian leadership in the world of tomorrow. Shall any part of this work stop? The parents of these students must answer and the answer must come also from those who know where men are being trained for leadership.

EMORY W. HUNT, Acting Chairman of the Board; GEORGE R. BAKER, Acting Secretary of the Board.

Missionary Education Through Dramatics

By MRS. MILTON FISH

Teacher of Dramatics, M. E. M. California Conference

A minister was heard to question the wisdom of using dramatics in the church, regardless of the purpose behind such impersonations. Doubtless he was perfectly willing that his young people should dress up for Hallowe'en or George Washington parties; but when there was a definite purpose behind these impersonations, instead of just fun, they became wrong in his sight. Frequently young people who have been taking a course in missionary dramatics say, "Our pastor is opposed to our doing things of this kind," and a little feeling of resentment is shown because they can't do this lovely and worthwhile thing which they so much want to do. We always feel that if they can make their minister see the real purpose of the thing he will not say as one did, "I fear this will interest the young people in the theatres and movies and some may even get stage struck." Last year a writer in The Sunday School Times in an article on "The Young Christian and His Amusements," said, in effect, that college dramatics were an injury to the young Christian's spiritual life. Of course, if any one thinks it intrinsically wrong to impersonate or act, to such we have nothing to say. As a teacher of dramatics in a denominational college I know they can be made helpful and elevating and that teacher and pupil can pray after a rehearsal,—a thing especially denied in said article.

The Value of Visualization

After years of experience in directing young people's activities I have seen only good resulting from missionary dramatics. It is a wonderful help to visualize true and beautiful things. It has neither led them to be movie fans nor given any the craze for the stage. In fact, it has worked the other way, through this opportunity for self-expression in pageant and play. Do I need to say anything of the educational value in giving expression to that which has been impressed upon heart and mind?

One great purpose in missionary dramatics is to make missions a living reality.

It certainly broadens the sympathies of those representing peoples of other races, helping to overcome race prejudice. Many gifts of self and money have come from some who have become vitally interested when taking part in missionary plays. I can cite incident after incident of this nature. Learning to put yourself in the place of another, makes real his needs and sacrifices. It trains the imagination too. One cannot do impersonating successfully without entering sympathetically into the life of another. One taking the part of Mrs. Judson left the platform again and again with her cheeks wet with real tears. Ann Judson can never be a myth to that girl or to those who saw her in that part. So many lack imagination that only when a story is visualized does it reach their hearts. There is this double effect: first, developing the character of those actually in the play and often leading them to give their lives for service and, second, there is the effect on the audience. Perhaps there is no surer way of reaching the uninterested than this. There are dozens of people in every community who could not be dragged to hear a missionary and would run a mile from a missionary sermon. But give a play and they are there taking in an unlimited amount of missionary information. And these same people, who brag on never giving a dollar for missions, will fairly empty their purses after a thrilling missionary play. We Baptists have reason to be proud and thankful that we have such splendid plays as Miss Applegarth writes. They are a source of inspiration to every participant and spectator.

I admit that there is grave danger in the use of dramatics. They are damaging if not directed by a consecrated Christian who has at heart the best interests of the church and kingdom. She must be a spiritually minded leader who has a genuine vision, some artistic ability and a little common sense. There must be, also, a real message in the play that its purpose may so grip the cast that they absolutely shall forget themselves in putting the message across. Oh, how essential in the service which we render Christ and the church that we give our very best! Nothing is too good for His service. Half-hearted and half-finished performances do Him no honor. There must be no showing off, nor seeking personal glory. All, forgetting self, should work for one high purpose. And how wonderfully young people do respond to the highest ideals out of love for Jesus Christ!

Dramas for Every Need

In choosing a play, select one which meets your need and which appeals to you. There are missionary dramas illustrating nearly every phase of the work. Choose for the cast those who will catch the message of the play, and who are willing to work and pray to make it a success. The story, the action, the stage settings and the costumes should all serve your purpose. You can make a regular and thrilling mission study class out of a splendid missionary play. The three I's of success are INTEREST (select that which makes you eager to give attention); then it must INFORM (add something to the store of knowledge), and last, emphatically, it must INSPIRE. You will find that the ennobling of character and the widening of vision will more than compensate for the necessary hard work.

In a class studying missionary dramatics we learn what to select, how to dramatize, the uses of pageants, plays, and dialogues, costuming, stage settings, choosing and training the cast; what dramas are available, and how to leave highly spiritual impressions. A member of such a class has written: "Since introducing your simple dramatizations into our women's missionary meetings, our attendance has greatly increased, the interest is more vital, and altogether our meetings have taken on new life."

Samples

Such dramatizations as "Modern Virgins" and the "New Hallelujah Chorus" can be used successfully and with telling effect in the evening worship of the church. "Starting Right," a dramatization of "Money the Acid Test," is very appropriate in place of a sermon on "Stewardship," especially before the Every-Member Canvass. Short sketches are fitted for B. Y. P. U. monthly missionary meetings. A short dramatization adds interest to the woman's missionary circle. The little book "Making Missions Real" is especially good for Sunday-school use. There is no place where dramatics serve a more helpful purpose than in the school of missions. The school of missions has become an important part of our church life in California. Usually it covers six weeks, when the whole church, from the youngest to the oldest, meets weekly for an hour's study.

Teaching "World Friendship, Inc."

(The Young People's Study Book)

In many of the schools of missions all are assembled for a dramatization or popular presentation of the evening subject, then divided into the classes. Personally I like to use some dramatization in my class work as a definite part of the program. The following outline was used in the young people's class in World Friendship. Charts make a splendid basis for class discussion. In building the program for such a class I use dramatics, charts, solos, topics easy for discussion, a bit of reading in unison from the study book and for inspiration biographical story telling. The outside reading of biography has a most inspiring effect on the members of the class. As the class usually comprises the young people's society, the program cannot be very profound nor intensive but rather popular in nature. For a more thorough study see "Suggestions to Leaders of Study Classes," using "World Friendship, Inc.," by Ruth Seabury.

For World Friendship we used as class hymn "We've a Story to Tell," as the book deals with the various ways in which the missionaries tell the story. "A friend in need is a friend indeed" and we are forming world friendships by the service we are rendering the people of the world, in the time of their great need. We built two charts from week to week. The first was called "Forming World Friendships." Picture a Hospital Scene:

Medical work lightens the burden of disease.

Industrial Work lightens the burden of poverty.

Chart Nine—Not to be Ministered Unto But to Minister

Picture America, rich and prosperous, standing by a gate where throng people of all races. Write so all can see: "I was a stranger, did ye take me in?"

Our Junior Leader made some wonderful charts to use with "A Noble Army" and loaned them as they were in harmony with the biographies told in our class.

I use former study books with which the leader is familiar as the background for each lesson. With chapter one, "The Crusade of Compassion"; chapter two, "Ancient People at New Tasks"; chapters three and five, "The Kingdom and the Nations" and "The King's Highway"; chapter four, "Bible and Missions"; chapter six, "The Meaning of Service" (Fosdick); chapter seven, "A Better World" (Tyler Dennett). Use the foreign Survey for charts and statistics.

Before the school of missions opened we gave the "Elixir of Life" (printed in October number Southern California Baptist Convention News) to advertise the school and another evening, "Personally Conducted," a dramatization of the introduction to "World Friendship, Inc."

A Tour of Sight-Seeing in Canton "Personally Conducted"

The Director should tell of the wonderful trip soon to be taken; Canton, China, being but one of the many places to be visited. All that is required for taking the trip is a travel note-book, pencil and guide-book (World Friendship). Tickets (enrollment blanks) should be given out at the end of the play.

Characters:

MISS LOVELL, a young and enthusiastic missionary.

MRS. TRAVERS, a middle-aged woman, deeply interested in all phases of missionary work.

MR. TRAVERS, a successful business man, getting his first interest in missions.

YONG CHEW, the Chinese chauffeur.

Stage Properties:

A Ford, which can easily be constructed out of a few chairs, black boards, auto curtains and a couple of tires.

(A curtain is drawn showing Miss Lovell and Chew in the car; as Mr. and Mrs. Travers come on the platform Miss Lovell steps from the car and rushes to greet her old friends.)

MISS LOVELL: Here, Chew, come get these bags. Mr. and Mrs. Travers, this is Yong Chew, one of our students and our chauffeur. (They exchange greetings.)

Oh, I am so glad to see you, I hope you can make a good long visit.

MR. TRAVERS: I am sorry, but we only have a few hours to spend here. We hope to stop later, but we are anxious to see all that we can, today.

MISS LOVELL: Oh! that is too bad. Well, instead of going direct to the college, Chew will drive us around the city. (They get in as Chew cranks the car. They get a slight jolt as it starts.)

MRS. TRAVERS: Where do all these swarms and swarms of people come from?

MISS LOVELL: They all belong here.

MR. TRAVERS: I had heard there were four hundred million people in China but I didn't believe it until I came here and found them all waiting to welcome us on the Bund.

MISS LOVELL: It always seems more crowded to me than Broadway, the week before Christmas. Step on the gas, Chew, we haven't any time to lose. (All appear to jolt.)

MISS LOVELL: We'll stop here a minute. Isn't that a splendid building? That is the first hospital in China, founded eighty-five years ago by Peter Parker. It is a great institution. You must visit it when you come again. Just across there is Dr. Mary Miles' school for blind boys and girls. Oh! there is a heart-breaking number of blind in China. In the school they are taught trades in addition to their regular studies. By the way, you can just catch a glimpse of the only hospital for the insane in all China. Yet there is a larger proportion of the Chinese insane than there is of the people in the United States. The work was begun by Dr. Keer. Surely you must visit this later.

MRS. TRAVERS: What are those buildings on the other side of the hospital?

MISS LOVELL: That is the True Light Seminary—one of the first schools for girls. Once they almost had to hire the girls to come and now they cannot accommodate those who want to be in the school. That is typical of the way China is changing. But we mustn't stop here longer. Hurry along, Chew. (More motion and jolts.)

MR. TRAVERS: Well, well, will you look at the bookstore there?

MISS LOVELL: That is the Chinese Baptist Publication Society. It is a great institution. We couldn't get along without it. And that building over there is called the Missions Building, with headquarters for most of the missionary societies. I do wish there were time for you to go to the top floor, which is occupied by the Young Woman's Christian Association. It is a very live organization.

MR. TRAVERS: If all China is as well supplied with missionaries as Canton seems to be, you might send some to Christianize America.

MISS LOVELL: But we haven't enough here and as for the rest of China, you will find large sections utterly uncared for. We must hurry. (More jolts.)

MRS. TRAVERS: Home, Sweet Home! Look at that California style of mission building on the Bund.

MISS LOVELL: That is the Y. M. C. A. and it is a memorial to the first Protestant missionary, Robert Morrison. It is an absolutely up-to-date "Y." It has the largest auditorium in the city.

MR. TRAVERS: It must have the largest something to be Californian. Is there anything more worth seeing? Aren't there any churches?

MISS LOVELL: Yes, indeed! That was the Presbyterian Church right across from the hospital. Then you ought to see the Hackett Memorial College for Women; also the Union Normal School, and the Union Theological School. We are great for Union out here, but I must stop talking and take you to the show part of the city—Canton Christian College. It is great. It counts among its graduates many of China's leading men.

MR. TRAVERS: Say, are all missionaries as enthusiastic as you?

MISS LOVELL: Of course they are. We just can't help being. Really, we rather pity you people who can't work here. We know you all would like to.

MRS. TRAVERS: It has been a perfectly wonderful eye-opener to me. I never dreamed there was such a variety of missionary work. Oh! I am so glad to really see things for myself!

MR. TRAVERS: Hear her, when she has been going to missionary meetings for fifty years. Now we poor men have been terribly neglected, until recently when our church started its School of Missions. We have a fine big class for men. I am going to catch up with her yet. I'll just enjoy telling those men a thing or two when I get home.

MISS LOVELL: That's fine, but we must hurry. (Jolts.)

Chew, drive us down toward the Bund. We must get out and take a boat to reach the college. It has pre-medical, pre-theological and agricultural departments. It has even a sericulture laboratory and a splendid athletic field. This afternoon the field will be crowded with students playing different games. Well, we must get out here and board that motor-boat. (CURTAIN.)

Later issues of THE BAPTIST will contain, in continuation of this article, dramatizations of the various chapters of the study book.

The Washington Conference—A Pause That Puzzles

By WILLIAM AXLING

MARKING TIME OR MARCHING, WHICH?

THE speed and signal success which marked the opening weeks of the Conference aroused expectation to the Nth degree. To many it foreshadowed an early solution of all the problems on the agenda. So great was the expectation created that the spectators would brook no delay in seeing their highest hopes realized. In the face of these intense hopes came the present slack-up in the speed of the Conference's work. Both the people and the press are restive under the delay. Many Americans, with their mania for speed and the spectacular, are tempted to become impatient. Others are not slow to charge the slowing down process to "oriental diplomacy" and to the Orient's passion for bargaining.

Prophets of evil are painting pictures draped in black. Pessimists aplenty are saying, "I told you so." The yellow press is making the most of this its golden hour—the hour it has yearned and prayed for. The faint-hearted and faithless are borne down by a feeling of fear.

The Japanese delegates may not be free from the Oriental's age-long trait and taste for bargaining but far greater factors enter into the present situation.

A FEW FACTS TO FACE

1. The Orientals are not strong when it comes to the spectacular and the dramatic. Theirs is the prosaic way. Their minds move slowly. Deliberation is their forte. Speed is not a part of their program. Snap judgments and speedy actions are foreign to their minds and methods. The deeper their sincerity the more deliberate their action. Japan would not have been her own sincere native self had she rushed out into the arena and shouted an unreserved "Amen!" to all of Secretary Hughes' proposals. That could only have been an insincere playing to the galleries for the purpose of winning applause from the American people.

2. Atmosphere is everything in a conference of this character. Japan is almost 10,000 miles away from Washington. The proposal of the Conference can be transmitted across this distance by cable and by wireless, but not the warm, sincere, open-hearted atmosphere which pervades every nook and corner of our capitol city. Out in Japan they have nothing but the cold, bald facts and figures—made colder and balder because of the condensed form in which they have to be transmitted.

It is exceedingly significant that the hundreds of Japanese who are in Washington and are immersed in the atmosphere which prevails there, almost without exception are heart and soul in favor of accepting Secretary Hughes' proposals and sincerely regret that this delay had to be.

3. If this Conference were meeting in Tokyo instead of Washington and the proposals for navy limitation had been made by Baron Kato instead of Secretary Hughes, one wonders if the American delegation would have accepted them right off the bat and if the American people would have given them their unqualified approval without a most searching scrutiny as to their meaning and purport.

4. The Japanese delegation must carry its government and its people with it in any move that it makes. It not only seeks to secure their approval, but it wants their wholehearted enthusiastic approval. If in any way the impression is left on Japan's government and on her people that they were coerced into accepting Secretary Hughes' proposals and that America has succeeded in putting something across on Japan this Conference will create misunderstanding and ill-will rather than remove them.

The Japanese delegation does not want to enter into any empty agreements. It wants to find a solution which the government and the people of Japan can and will back up with all their heart and with all their soul. The Japanese have not forgotten that an American president and his delegation at Versailles entered into an agreement with the nations of the world which America's administrative government and the American people repudiated. They do not care to repeat that fiasco.

5. Comparatively speaking, Secretary Hughes is asking Japan to make by far the greatest sacrifice. The $150,000,000 of ships which Japan is asked to scrap constitutes one-twentieth of her total national wealth. While the $332,000,000 which America proposes to scrap represents only one two-hundredth of her national wealth. With Japan's paucity of raw materials, her industrial weakness, her lack of shipbuilding facilities and her comparative poverty that sum seems to her simply staggering. Looked at from her point of view it is utterly impossible for an American to appreciate how fearfully big that figure looks.

6. The Japanese delegation is not backed by a united constituency. Japan today is divided into two camps, the conservative and the liberal. The conservative wing is imperialistic and jingoistic and advocates the use of the mailed fist and menacing methods in blazing Japan's path into the future. The liberal wing advocates a policy of reasonable and legitimate economic and political expansion.

While Premier Hara was alive he was a past master at controlling this delicate situation and in spite of it worked out far-reaching reforms. Since his tragic removal Baron Kato has had to take up this difficult task and do it 10,000 miles from the center of things. From inside information I know that his heart rings true on this question and that he is pouring his life into the task of lining Japan up solidly and wholeheartedly behind a right and happy solution.

7. More than any other nation, with the exception of China, Japan's destiny is in the making these days. Her national mould is being cast. In the question of naval limitations and in the correlated questions of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, naval bases in the Pacific and the Chinese situation is bound up Japan's whole future as a nation. The solution of these problems arrived at in this Conference will affect Japan for weal or for woe years and years to come.

Let Baron Kato lay bare his heart on this matter. He says, "The question of limitation of naval armament involves issues which are of far-reaching effect upon the national and international life of Japan and on the policies of great powers for decades to come and perhaps permanently. These issues should be brought to the full knowledge and consideration of the Japanese government before definite action is taken. In any case I am, as I have always been, firmly convinced that the Conference should be able to agree upon plans of adjustment that will be fair to all parties and will incalculably benefit not only the nations concerned, but the whole world. No effort will be spared on my part or that of my colleagues to bring the various questions to the earliest possible conclusion consistent with wisdom and foresight."

8. Some of Japan's suggestions are positively constructive and in no sense can be looked upon as filibuster. Her contention that a ten-year holiday in the building of naval bases and fortifications in the Pacific is a logical part of a program of naval limitation and is hard to get around. Secretary Hughes said nothing about this in his proposals. The Japanese feel, however, that navies and naval bases are so interlinked that they should be considered together. They propose that the status quo be maintained by America in Hawaii, Guam and the Philippines and that Japan agree not to enlarge her fortifications on the Bonin group and on the other of her outlying islands in the Pacific. Where is the unreasonableness in this contention?

9. Delay in bringing the minds of nations into accord on great and complicated questions is not a sign of sinister development. The Japanese delegates are keenly alive to the fact that this delay is erecting question marks over Japan's attitude and putting her in an unfavorable light before the world public. They could lull the Conference and the nations represented here into a sense of security by smooth words and fair promises. But it would be a false security. They prefer to speak their convictions in plain words that every one can understand. Then when agreements are finally reached their meaning will be clear and back of them will stand a united Japanese people strong in the consciousness that they had a direct part in their making and are, therefore, directly responsible for their fulfillment.

Baron Kanda voiced the feeling of the Japanese delegation on this point when he said, "The apparent hitch in the main object of the Conference—limitation of naval armament—caused by the reservations of Baron Kato on the ratio of relative armament need cause no anxiety. Better to make a clean breast of it at the outset than a half-hearted co-operation afterward. We (Japanese) would see not merely a naval holiday for ten years, but a perpetuation of that blessed state for the world."

THE CHINESE SITUATION CLEARING

For three years China has consistently refused to negotiate with Japan regarding Shantung. A significant advance step was, therefore, taken in regard to this controversy when China and Japan both accepted the offer of the friendly offices of Secretary Hughes and Mr. Balfour, the heads of the American and British delegations. The arrangement being that they should meet, as advisors, with the Japanese and Chinese delegations as they take up this difficult question and endeavor to find a solution. England and France are lending a hand toward the settlement of this controversy which has shaken three continents. England is doing it by definitely pledging herself to give up Wei Hai Wei and France by pledging to relinquish Kwang Chowan, if

The Elgin Plan

Rev. A. D. McGlashan, at First Church, Elgin, Ill., wins battle against jazz and shows and saves prayer meeting

PRAYER meeting," as an institution, is not passing.

Midweek devotional services have not outlived their attractiveness for young people.

The sensuous dance, "jazz" music and the theatre cannot compete with the church that adapts itself to modern needs.

These conclusions have been inspired by an analysis of the results of two series of Wednesday night prayer meetings, the second of which closed recently, at the First Church, Elgin, Ill.

These prayer meetings, arranged and held under what has been named the "Elgin Plan," are said to have been the most remarkable of their kind ever held in the United States. Rev. A. D. McGlashan, author of the "Elgin Plan," refers to it as evidence that the church, in spite of an assumption in many quarters that it is losing its hold upon the youth of America, actually can increase its membership and, at the same time, develop co-operation in church work and interest in its services to an extent never before achieved.

200 Per Cent Increase

Fourteen meetings under the "Elgin Plan," covering two periods of eight and six weeks, respectively, have increased the attendance at Wednesday night prayer meetings at the First Church from about seventy-five persons to an average of about 225, or 200 per cent. This increase has been achieved in spite of the fact that the primary purpose of the "Elgin Plan" was not to increase attendance.

"I wanted to bring my people closer together," Mr. McGlashan says, "I wanted my people to feel that prayer meetings could be made popular, pleasant services but, at the same time, decorous.

The meeting is made up of activities designed to appeal to the physical, spiritual, intellectual, recreational and dramatic interests of persons of all ages, and these activities are arranged in such sequence as to produce the most impressive effect.

The meeting opens with a supper in the church parlor at 6 o'clock. The supper is served to adults at 25 cents each and to children for 15 cents.

At the conclusion of supper, while the room is being cleared of tables and chairs, everybody sings popular or humorous songs.

This continues until the room has been cleared, after which, at 6:40 o'clock, games are played. The games are so arranged as to produce the most mirth possible. At a recent meeting the chief attraction was a kiddie race between a school official and a lawyer. During the games in the parlor of the church, the children are taken to another room, where games are played and stories told.

At the conclusion of the games, usually about 7:10 o'clock, every one present gets his or her chair and sits around a curtained platform, upon which is presented what is called the "missionary dramatic half-hour." This consists of a play dealing with missionary work in the home or foreign field. During the series of meetings just closed, the home field was depicted.

At 7:45 o'clock, while the children are being entertained at a "story hour" upstairs, a hymn is sung in the church parlor, following which the prayer hour starts.

The chief feature of this activity is a discussion by the pastor of a chapter of one of the books of the Bible. When the prayer meetings are resumed in January, the pastor will talk on prayer.

The meeting closes at about 8:30 o'clock.

Few Leave Before Close

The meetings thus far have been noteworthy for the small numbers that have left the services before they are over. At all meetings of this kind there are a few who leave immediately after the supper, but the number is so small that the departures are hardly noticeable.

The remarkable interest shown in the meetings, and the large attendance, have been attributed largely to the thoroughness with which the organization plans of the meeting have been worked out. Each activity is in charge of a different committee, the members of which are charged, individually, with responsibility for the success of the meeting.

The first activity is administered by the reception committee, composed of about twenty men and women. It is the duty of this committee to see that every one who attends is provided with a tag, upon which he or she is supposed to write his or her name. Through the use of tags the necessity for formal introductions is eliminated. The committee members see to it that everybody gets acquainted.

Supper Prepared by Women

The supper served at 6 o'clock is prepared during the afternoon by a committee of women, usually about ten. The food is all prepared in the church kitchen, none of it being solicited.

The supper is served by members of the service committee, composed usually of twenty men. These men go to the church ahead of time and, with the women who prepare the food, eat first. They are then free to serve others. At the conclusion of supper these men clear the parlor of tables and chairs. The work is done with a celerity and quietness that is amazing.

The songs sung during the time the room is being cleared are provided by the song committee, the duty of which is to write, or get others to write humorous songs. These frequently are nursery rhymes adapted to the music of popular songs and contribute largely to the merriment of the early activities.

The games are arranged by a games committee, which aims solely to produce merriment. They must not be the ordinary play activities. Original, out-of-the-ordinary stunts are striven for.

Special Decorations

At each meeting a special effort is made to provide an "atmosphere" different from the preceding meeting. This duty is charged to the decorating committee. During the past two series of meetings some remarkably attractive decorative features have been provided.

The "missionary dramatic half hour" is in charge of a committee which strives each time to utilize a different church organization or group in the presentation of the dramatic feature. For example, a group of middle-aged men and women would be selected to present this week's play, a group of young married people for next week's, the Baptist Young People's Union for the following week's, and so on.

The organization plan succeeds in its purpose to enlist the interest of a large body of men and women for each meeting, and through this plan the enthusiasm is maintained at a high pitch throughout each series.

Attendance Estimated

The "Elgin Plan" has solved the problem of eliminating waste in church suppers in that it provides for an almost accurate estimate of the amount of food needed. This estimate is formed upon reports, made at church services on each Sunday preceding the Wednesday night prayer meeting, as to the number who desire to attend. Cards are distributed to every one by members of the card distribution committee. Each person desiring to attend must write his or her name on the card and file it with the committee. In this way the number to be provided for is ascertained, almost to a person.

The "Elgin Plan" eliminates all free suppers. Every person who attends, whether a worker or not, must pay the price quoted. When a guest is present, his or her supper must be paid for by the persons inviting him or her. Through this plan the supper committee has been able to serve meals for 15 or 25 cents consisting of choice meats, vegetables, bread and butter, coffee and dessert—at a profit for the series. The food is purchased by the committee, so that there is no soliciting, no donations and no superfluity of one kind of food and shortage of another.

The Washington Conference

Japan and China can come to an understanding about Shantung.

The Shantung question has now narrowed down to Japan's demand, as compensation for the money which she spent and the lives which she has lost in the campaign of ousting Germany from Shantung, that she be given Germany's half share in the railroad in Shantung and the German rights in mines in that province which she received through the Treaty of Versailles. She declares her willingness, however, to place these rights in mines in an international consortium made up of England, America, France and herself. She renounces every other of the many rights in Shantung which came to her from Germany. China's counter-demand is an unconditional unencumbered restoration of Shantung and everything connected therewith.

Contrary to all expectations Japan has declared her willingness to throw the "twenty-one demands" on China on the table and have the Conference investigate in what respect they violate the principles of the "open door" or infringe on China's sovereignty. The nine powers have passed resolutions pledging themselves to respect China's territorial integrity. They have also agreed to recognize China's neutrality in case of war in which China is not a party. They further agreed that foreign wireless stations on Chinese soil shall be used for official messages only.

The nations are not sparring, they are striking strong, steady strokes for peace and world brotherhood. History is in the making and the world stands in one of God's great creative hours.

Who's Who Among Baptists

A Review of Contemporary Denominational Biography

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

LEMUEL C. BARNES

It would be interesting to know whether any man in the Northern Baptist Convention has a wider denominational acquaintance than Lemuel C. Barnes. During his fourteen years of service as Field Secretary of the Home Mission Society he has traveled extensively in all sections of the United States; has studied all phases of home mission activity; has attended estate convention and has addressed hundreds of associations. There are relatively few Baptist pastors who do not know him personally. Another fact in Dr. Barnes' career merits special mention. He holds the distinction, rare in any denomination, of having had two pastorates with the same church. The first pastorate must not only be successful, but also acceptable to church and pastor in order to persuade both to enter upon the same relationship for the second time.

Dr. Barnes is a native of Ohio, a graduate of Kalamazoo College and of Newton Theological Institution. He began his ministry in 1878 with the First Church of St. Paul. From 1882 to 1887 he served the Fourth Church of Pittsburgh, and again from 1893 to 1902, having served the First Church of Newton Centre, Mass. in the interim. From his second Pittsburgh pastorate he went to Worcester, Mass., and in 1907 began his service with the Home Mission Society. His secretarial and administrative ability had long been recognized for as early as 1891 the Foreign Mission Society had elected him as Foreign Secretary, but was unable to persuade him to leave his happy Newton Centre pastorate.

During these years as pastor and secretary Dr. Barnes has been identified with many denominational and interdenominational activities, such as the Religious Education Association, the Federal Council of Churches, the General Convention of Baptists, the Northern Baptist Education Society and the Newton Theological Institution. From 1879 to 1907—nearly thirty years, he was a member of the board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society, at that time the American Baptist Missionary Union. He has written several books, the most widely known being "Two Thousand Years of Missions before Carey."

Dr. Barnes is blessed with a virile personality that perpetually generates optimism and radiates exuberant enthusiasm for the Kingdom. The closing greeting in all his letters is characteristic of the man—"Yours in cordial service."

Lord Jesus who didst put thine arms of love on the hard wood of the cross that all men might come within reach of thy saving embrace, clothe us in thy spirit that we stretching forth our hands in loving labor for others may bring those who know thee not to the knowledge and love of thee who with the Father and the Holy Ghost livest and reignest God.—Amen.

BISHOP C. H. BRENT.

CORNELIUS WOELFKIN

Because of unusual ability certain men are classified as "Masters." The world recognizes its master painters and its master singers. Cornelius Woelfkin is a master preacher. Since 1912 he has been pastor of the Fifth Avenue Church of New York, the great city in which he was born. Like other men who have achieved success, Dr. Woelfkin has climbed the ladder from the very bottom. After beginning as pastor of a small rural church in New York, he served two churches in New Jersey and in 1894 became pastor of the Greene Avenue Church of Brooklyn, N. Y., where for eleven years he ministered to a loyal and devoted people. Even in those early years he had acquired a reputation as a preacher. Members in the church today still recall his inspiring sermons and his helpful prayer meeting talks.

In 1905 the Home Mission Society appointed him as evangelist. For two years with the late Dr. E. E. Chivers he toured the country in a series of evangelistic meetings. The persuasive manner in which Dr. Woelfkin presented the claims of Christ on the lives of men was irresistible. Under the influence of his preaching thousands of men and women took their first step in the Christian life. From 1907 to 1912 he was professor of homiletics at Rochester Theological Seminary. Few professors anywhere are more popular with their student body than was Dr.

Woelfkin at Rochester. His home and his office were always open for a social hour, a game of chess, or a stimulating discussion of the great fundamentals of life.

Dr. Woelfkin holds a conspicuous record in his wider denominational ministry. He was the Convention preacher at Minneapolis, has served as president of the Foreign Mission Society, as a member of its board of managers as well as of several other boards. He has made a most important contribution as chairman of the Convention Commission on Faith and Order. As a New York pastor he occupies a prominent and influential place among religious leaders of the metropolis. Dr. Woelfkin is a prince among friends. Older men cherish him as a brother and younger men revere him as a father and as a counselor who takes deep personal interest in their problems. All over this land are men who count the friendship of Dr. Woelfkin one of life's greatest and most inspiring privileges.

What is the secret of his marvelous success? Unconsciously he has himself told us. Those who have read his recent articles in the Baptist, the one in which he pays such beautiful tribute to a sainted mother, who dedicated her boy to the service of Christ, and the other in which he describes his meeting place with God in the forest behind his little church, need inquire no further as to the underlying secret of this preacher's influence and power. His church in New York is now erecting an imposing new house of worship. How appropriate it is that a man who throughout his career has been building human monuments should now add to his achievements the erection of a great church which for years to come will serve to remind a materialistic modern Babylon that man does not live by bread alone.

The Chimney Corner

Instead of Keeping Christmas, Christmas Kept HER

THERE was a fireplace big enough for a whole cord of yule-logs, and while little Mrs. Knut Gudebrod sat demurely on the hearth-rug, she had the liveliest expectation of seeing nothing less than an entire ox roasted on some giant spit tomorrow.

"I expect it will be a very different Christmas from the kind we have in America," she said wistfully to young Mr. Knut Gudebrod. By the way, you pronounce him "Canute," in like fashion to the famous Dane for whom the waves of the seashore once obligingly receded in ancient Britain. Young Mr. Gudebrod was also a Dane, but nothing ever willingly receded when he approached! That was the reason there was this adorable young Mrs. Gudebrod sitting wistfully by a strange fireplace in a strange land. She had not been able to recede one inch when the great blond Viking had proposed all sorts of astonishing things. Weddings. And seafarings. And a year in an unknown spot on the map known as Denmark. She had accepted them all. But then, she was a darling. Young Mr. Gudebrod thought so. Indeed, old Mr. Gudebrod thought so, too; although there had been a time when over a pipe he had said to his crony Jansen (I may not quote him verbatim, since neither you nor I have mastered the Danish speech!), "Knut, my son, has made for himself a marriage with one of those Americans. It is a sadness to his mother and me, but it is what comes of letting him sail off to strange lands to earn his way. We like better these sturdy God-fearing maidens of ours, with capable hands, and a love for the fireside."

Now no one could have hugged the fireside closer than young Mrs. Gudebrod on her arrival in Denmark, but this may have been due to the peculiar penetration of the cold, and not from any innate domestic qualifications. Nevertheless, she was a darling! And looked exceedingly demure of an evening cuddled in the chimney corner with the firelight playing all over her: it is to be regretted that her silk-clad ankles were so singled out—those ankles and the wicked heels that supported them caused many a sigh on the lips of the Gudebrod daughters, Magnhild and Sigrid. "Ours are so thick!" they complained, looking down at their woolen hose and their broad square shoes.

"Thick, but sensible; and far more godly," commented their wise mother, bluntly.

But Mrs. Knut Gudebrod was such a complete darling that she even lived down her slim silk ankles—however, not till later! And this was Christmas Eve with the bride on the hearth, and her beautiful blond Viking leaning on the monstrous mantel-ledge, for all the world like a staged picture of the Hanging of the Crane.

"Yes," he answered, gently, "it will be a very different Christmas from the ones you have in America. Christmas in America always left me very cold."

"And we have furnaces," she murmured whimsically.

"Warmth is not a matter of so many shovelfuls of anthracite, Little Dearest," he said, "but you shall see what you shall see this evening."

All afternoon mysterious preparations went on in the house, and chunky parcels were got ready for needy families, spicy greens were hung here and there, and "our little new sister Bab" was led out into the great stone-flagged kitchen to ice the cakes and decorate them with bright candies. So completely lost was she in the capacious Gudebrod apron that Knut did not see her when he came out to superintend the job.

But neither aprons nor icings nor gifts had any significance for either of them a few hours later, when into the fire-lit living-room walked Father Gudebrod with patriarchal dignity, a Bible in one hand, a lighted candle in the other; after him filed Mother Gudebrod and her small blond sons, next Mr. and Mrs. Knut Gudebrod, also the twin Gudebrod sisters, with a respectful appendage of all the men-servants and maid-servants within their gates. Not so many of these, to be sure, but enough to thrill the American bride with the essential democracy of Christmas! For, hand in hand, they stood in an expectant circle while Father Gudebrod set his lighted candle on the table and opened his Bible at the second chapter of Luke. By the flickering light of his little flame he read the quaint old story of no room in the inn, of shepherds on a chilly hillside, of angel voices announcing good news for all mankind, of Mary pondering all these things in her heart. And while Bab listened, spellbound, her gaze fell on poor old Isak, the humble woodcarrier, a forlorn and friendless person whom Father Gudebrod had just taken on as pensioner. But surely no least forlorn or friendless thought dwelt in his heart that moment—something timeless in its glory had charmed his very soul up into his tired old eyes.

"Christmas is real! Real!" thought Bab, astonished; and the gentle cadences of Father Gudebrod's rich voice warmed all her being: "That blessed Child," she sighed—and listened. For was ever anything so gripping as this silent loving roomful of dear souls, bound each to each with ties of love and service, while all outdoors lay shoulder-deep in drifted snow, with distant sleighbells tinkling merrily along the highways?

The chapter ended in a solemn hush, then Magnhild's tender voice began the Christmas hymn, "O little town of Bethlehem," every word of which assumed new meaning as they all joined in with childish treble, soprano, bass or tenor, and the poor cracked efforts of old Isak, out of tune.

"You know, God likes old Isak's voice the very best of all," small Friedolf whispered to his brother's bride, graciously explanatory, lest she should note a wrongness here and there.

"I know He does!" she smiled, with sudden tears. Dear God, so this was Christmas! No maddened rush of some one's gift remembered at an eleventh hour, no shallow taudry fooling about Santa Claus, but this lovely thing of heart and spirit—with little boys grown gentle-wise, and cooks forgetful of their ovens and their pies.

Then all knelt down with reverent joy while Father Gudebrod prayed his Christmas prayer: "Come thou and dwell within our hearts, O Christ of Bethlehem; be born in us today. O thou who didst so love that thou didst give thyself, may we so love in turn that we may give ourselves.—in kinder lives, in sweeter service, nobler thoughts, help us to herald thy glad tidings to mankind before next Christmas Day. Amen."

A simple prayer so personal that Bab said to herself: "He prays those words for me, poor selfish heedless me, who never once gave up myself, a gift for God on Christmas!" And had she known it poor old Isak also thought: "'Tis of me the master says those words." No wonder they arose with love-lit faces and went through another family custom, quite as beautiful, for Father Gudebrod lifted up his candle and repeated reverently: "In him was life, and the life was the light of men."

Quietly Mother Gudebrod took from the table a small Christmas candle and, lighting it from Father Gudebrod's, repeated: "That was the true light that lighteth every man man who cometh into the world." Then one by one they each filed past to light small candles, repeating verses which revealed the Child as light: Mankind's First Christmas Candle! After which, in single file, they marched slowly through the darkened hallways, like wise men following the star of Father Gudebrod's candle flame, and singing softly: "Holy Night! Silent Night!"

Bab wondered where this journey was to end, but the last verses found them gathered outside the parlor door. They opened it, and there stood the tree, brave in tinsel, shining from reflections of their candles, which one by one they placed in holders on its branches. You might have thought the quick transition from mystery to merriment too quick, but in her heart Bab knew that each had carried over the great thought of that First Little Human Christmas Gift, the occasion of these dear material tokens in red ribbons. The fun was more fun, because of that; and before any one knew it, the cook had both left and returned to announce supper. Such a supper, too! We dare not name the menu, lest in desperation you rush out to raid your larder; for that is not the purpose of this story. We offer it to you because of what it did to Bab, that little bride who always had kept Christmas, oh yes!—kept it in a scurry of last-minute shopping; kept it in an exasperated spirit of "This will be plenty good enough for Ruth, she only gave me thus and so last year"; kept in this same old give-and-return that yearly brings to adult lips the sigh: "I don't know why it is, but Christmas isn't what it used to be to me! Perhaps I've outgrown it; perhaps it's only meant for children, anyhow."

But Bab learned differently when Christmas kept her; whereas the day used to leave her cold and tired and disillusioned, now it left her warm and blithe and visioning. And this, because there was a central source acknowledged as the cause of all the household's joy. Not a gift-bearing Santa Claus, materialist, shortly to be outgrown; but a twilight story retold from year to year about mankind's First Christmas Gift, with candles, carols, prayers to augment the sacred wonder of the day which sent them forth to spread his peace on earth, his good-will among all men.

"We will transplant this lovely custom," Bab whispered to her Viking.

"But, of course!" he smiled, "was it not for this we crossed the sea, dear heart?"

And although they went to live in a thing-called-a-flat, with coils of steam pipes for a fireplace and a maid who nearly died of astonished embarrassment, yet they transplanted the Christmas that is a Christmas; so that each successive year the new little maid-of-all-work would say to her steady, that evening: "What do you know about this? For there was I all of a tremble, not knowing whatever it could all be about, and there was them red candles burning soft, like in a church, and Mr. Gudebrod reading grand old words from out of the Bible; while Mrs. Gudebrod and the kids, they sung a carol, then we prayed; yes, sir, me too! Then we each lights us a little candle and sings some more, while we marches in to light the Christmas tree. And lissen, why couldn't you and me have doings like that when we get a little house to ourselves, and everything?"

For even he who runs may read the difference between merely keeping Christmas and letting Christmas keep you!

Character can only come to you as you wait upon God, the wellspring of all vitality; God who is made known to you, who came near to you in the flesh of His Son. America and the world are waiting for character, Christ-transmitted character.—SELECTED.

The Young Reserves

Winners in the S. C. Partner's Contest

ASIDE from the splendid winning compositions given here, the following Young Reserves certainly deserve honorable mention for their fine accounts: Audrey E. Cann, Marlboro, Mass.; Leona Bushnell, Hinckley, Ill.; Esther Thain, Divernon, Ill.; George Adams, Lincoln, Neb.; Bob Everts, Wilmington, Del.; Catherine MacKechnie, Chicago; Claire Jacobs, Salt Lake City. The thing to do now is to be the jolliest partner possible; do what Douglas did—ask your partner for the name of a shut-in or friendless person. Let's make it the merriest Christmas ever!

HOW I WAS SANTA CLAUS' PARTNER
By DOUGLAS SEEBACH, SAN FRANCISCO.

Prize Winner

LAST year in our Sunday school my mother was asked to tell a story called "Please Do Not Open Till Christmas," about how a class of boys and a class of girls adopted a lonely old lady for Christmas. Well, my mother said to me, "This would be something you boys could do." So my teacher said it was, and the boys chose me to ask our pastor if there were old ladies or anything in our church. He gave us nine names, and one of them was a sick old man so I chose him. Afterwards I wished I had a lady as you can give them easier things like washrags and hairpins, and other pins, which a man doesn't like as well. But I was bound to give him his best Christmas so I earned money and bought him a necktie and handkerchief. I earned the money by doing errands for a grocer near us. He got interested and gave me a pound of nuts besides the money, so I put the nuts in the toe of the red stocking. I forgot to say that our teacher sewed us each a big red stocking to fill. I had apples and oranges, too, and some all-day-suckers. I thought they wouldn't be hard on his teeth. At the 5 and 10-cent store I bought him half a dozen picture postals and father gave me six green stamps to put on them so the old man could mail them without trouble. I also got him a red pencil there and my sister tied a red bow on it for me. I got him a bottle of perfume. Some men like it very much when they are shut in. Mother gave me some cookies, so it was a full stocking when I filled it. On Christmas eve our teacher took all of us boys around to leave things with our nine shut-ins, and when we came to my old gentleman we sang him carols and he was very much tickled. He blew his nose as if he had cried, but he was really very glad to see us. I take him THE BAPTIST every week now, when we finish it at home, so I think any Young Reserve could easily be a Santa Claus' partner this way. My class is going to do it again this year of course. I like to read the Chimney Corner and these contests are fine although I never entered one before.

HOW I DREAMED I WAS SANTA CLAUS' PARTNER

By HELEN RIEL, NASHPORT, OHIO.

Prize Winner

ONE evening a few days before Christmas as I sat thinking of the present I would probably receive from my parents as well as from uncles and aunts and cousins, I went to sleep and this is what I dreamed. In one corner of the room was a large Christmas tree simply loaded down with small white packages, with larger presents on the floor around the tree. My brother came into the room and we opened the presents. I got everything that any girl could want. The things I prized most were a large doll and a heavy wool sweater with cap to match. While I was looking at them I thought I heard a voice saying, "Give and it shall be given unto you." My picture quickly changed into a small room where there were three small children. The father was a hard-working man and the poor mother was very ill. The children were talking of Santa Claus and the presents they wanted. One of them said, "Of course he won't

New Vacation Contest !!

More fun than ever, for in your 10 day Christmas vacation we hope that every single Young Reserve will compete in our Poem Contest. Oh, it really needn't be hard, for your parents will help you to get words that rhyme; we will print all verses and jingles received, and the prize for the best will be one year's subscription to "Everyland," that delightful magazine for boys and girls!! Think of something coming to you every month just because you made a little rhyme!

The poem must be about the six million dollars which Baptist women will soon raise among other Baptist women and among Baptist boys and girls. It is to be called "The Continuation Fund," to continue caring for Baptist churches, schools, hospitals and missionaries all around the world. So you can choose any phase of it you find easiest. (December "Missions" is full of suggestions.) Here is a poem that occurs to us, off-hand:

*There was a lady—Mrs. Taft—
Who thought Baptist women had gone daft!
"How can they raise six million dollars
From housewives and from youthful scholars?"
Give her the answer she deserves
In spicy poems, dear Young Reserves!*

Mail poems by Jan. 2nd to Chimney Corner.

The Adults' Chance in the Church School

BY OWEN C. BROWN

UP to the present generation men and women have thought their only chance to help in Sunday school work was to be a teacher or an officer. But during the past thirty-one years, since Marshall Hudson started the Baraca Movement in the First Baptist Church, Syracuse, N. Y., "the adult class for service" sentiment has been growing. Today these classes, which in the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention are more than 500,000 strong, are finding a great variety of Christian Service opening to them.

This fall's campaign to double adult attendance was not merely for members, although that is important. The purpose was to double the forces and to double the usefulness of the classes for the Kingdom of our Lord. Do not seek to add numbers to your class, or expect to hold them, until your class adopts a plan of study and of service that appeals to men and women as really worth while.

Here are four suggestions for a program leading up to next summer:

1. Make December and January months of prayer for world peace, centering around the Christmas message. Consider the Disarmament Conference and pray that God may guide the nations as they follow it up. Consider our missionaries, our mission fields and our own race sympathies or prejudices. Circulate leaflets on these subjects, have 5-minute talks and be sure that the spirit of prayer and the spirit of Christ dominate the thought of the class.

2. Make February stewardship month. Send to the nearest branch house of the Publication Society and get Ralph Cushman's little book, "The New Christian," price 25 cents, for each member of the class and give ten minutes each Sunday to discuss its chapters. Get other leaflets; appoint a committee to secure tithers.

3. Make March 1 to Easter the evangelistic season. Make a list of all the men and women who have any connection with your Sunday school or congregation. The list may also include young people whom adults might reach. Call a special meeting of all members of the class who are willing to help in this work. Discuss and assign the list of names in the wisest possible way. Form prayer groups that will meet as frequently as possible to pray for this evangelistic effort and to plan for their particular part of the work. Be definite and pointed in personal work, though never rude, remembering that the spiritual character and welfare of men and women is far more important than the way they vote or the kind of insurance policy they carry. In this work, as in all class work, co-operate heartily with the pastor and superintendent in their plans.

4. Make May a life work month. Millions of boys and girls will be graduating from the eighth grade, from high school or from college. Maybe your boy or girl is among them. What are they going to do with their lives? What can you do about it? Is there some one in your class who is your child's hero or heroine and who could help in this important decision? Make it a subject of class discussion and prayer. Enlist men and women who have rare tact in helping boys and girls with these serious questions without being rude or officious about it and learn from them.

While there are many other great objectives a class might set for itself, we would do well to unite on these four for the season immediately before us. It is of vital importance that each class be practical and specific in each goal that it sets and prayerful and persistent until it is reached.

The Adult Class Campaign

THE purpose of this campaign which began on Oct. 2 is to double membership and attendance of men and women in the Bible classes of the Northern Baptist Convention. The campaign closed Dec. 4. Report to your state director the gains you have made. Send the plans that work best in your class to the adult department of the American Baptist Publication Society, 1701-1703 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., also a picture of your class if possible that they may be published.

Be sure that the class does not lag after the campaign is over. Make plans that reach from Dec. 4 to Easter, plans that will challenge the members and will continue to increase the interest, the numbers and the usefulness of the class.

Here is the way one class increased in membership eight years ago and continues to grow in strength—The Brown Brotherhood, South Side Church, Elmira, N. Y.:

Early in 1913, eight men of this church school had visions of what an organized class could do. Hence they departed from the beaten path and formed their own organization under the name of "The Brown Brotherhood." By systematic, persistent work they doubled and redoubled their membership, but this was only the beginning. They followed up by making plans not only for the strength of their class, but for the service they could render to the entire school and church, and they are still continuing their good work. This past year they have worked in close cooperation with the pastor, meeting for many months with him every Sunday morning for prayer, laying special emphasis upon the spiritual work of the church. The officers in the order numbered are: D. G. Stevens, teacher; A. W. King, assistant-teacher; Herbert Crayton, president; H. D. Gawne, chaplain.

Young People's Work

Topic for January 1

BETTER BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNIONS
1 Cor. 15:57, 58. (Consecration Meeting)

"Earnestly seek to commend yourself to God as a servant who, because of his straightforward dealing with the word of truth, has no reason to feel any shame."
—II Timothy 2:15.

Suggestive materials: "B. Y. P. U. Handbook," 35 cents; "Our B. Y. P. U.," 75 cents; "Baptist Young People at Work," 75 cents; "Young People's Service," 60 cents per year. Order from American Baptist Publication Society, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., or any branch house.

1. Stock-taking time. Every up-to-date business establishment sets aside a certain time for inventory. Stock on hand, sales, expenses, etc., are taken into account. Balances are struck. In this way the management knows whether there is loss or gain. The young people's organization is in business for the Lord. What has the society accomplished in 1921? Has there been an increase in spiritual power? Has real constructive service been rendered? Has there been a spirit of co-operation with all other departments of the church? Has the society been going round and round in a circle, or has it launched out in the large Kingdom program of the denomination.

2. Some necessary factors. (1) A worth-while program. The union will greatly improve if it impresses the young people of the church as a whole with the worth-while-ness of the program. The topics presented in our "Baptist Young People's Service" are carefully planned. The denominational objectives demand the most thorough consideration by our Baptist young people. The "standard" of activities calls for real work. Serious consideration and adoption of certain outstanding objectives or goals, not merely for one month, but for the whole year will make for larger efficiency.

(2) A worth-while leadership. This leadership should come from within the young people's group. We are suffering in so many places from domination of older church membership. The leadership should be trained—intelligent and consecrated. This leadership must give much thought and a great deal of time to the development of the young Christians of the Church. For this leadership to plead ignorance is to confess something akin to criminality. If the young person does not know, there are numerous ways by which he can and must know, if he is too succeeded.

(3) A worth-while activity. There is no panacea for all the ills of a young people's organization. The best plans on earth will fail if the plans are not worked. The union stands for training in service. There is only one way to succeed. When the program is laid out, the young people must have a "mind to work." A brief hour on Sunday or through the week is not enough. The whole program of the society would undergo something akin to a revolution if every member of the society would give just as much time to the work of the union as it gives to social activities.

(4) Stick-to-it-iveness. When once lined up with the program, there must be sustained enthusiastic interest, even when things go wrong. A spurt now and then will defeat the whole program. Things done by halves are never done right. The runner who stops along the way or stops even to rest is not expected to reach the goal first, perhaps not at all. To win, he must keep at it until the goal line is reached.

SLOGAN FOR 1922:

Forward With Christ

TO OUR FELLOW BAPTISTS:

We learn with pleasure of the proposed visit to Europe of Mr. William B. Lippard of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. The great hosts of Baptist young people of North America, now numbering nearly one million, desire to take advantage of this opportunity to send greetings to our fellow-workers across the sea. We extend our hands and hearts in fellowship and goodwill to every young Baptist. In return we ask you to join with us in the spiritual reconstruction of the world. The young men and young women of today must prepare for leadership in all life's affairs. We ask you to join with us in making Jesus Christ the central figure in human, national, and international relationships. It is our earnest prayer to Almighty God that the principle of righteousness may reign supreme. We believe we can see the dawn of a new day of mutual understanding, goodwill and brotherhood. To the task of bringing in such an era in human affairs, we have set ourselves. We ask your co-operation and your prayers.

Plans are now being completed for the holding of a World's Baptist Young People's Convention in the city of Washington, D. C., during the summer of 1923. We extend a most cordial invitation to all Baptist young people's organizations to send representatives. Press announcements will appear the latter part of the year 1922 and early in 1923.

Very sincerely,

JAMES ASA WHITE, General Secretary.

ST. PAUL CONVENTION DATES

June 28 to July 2, 1922

At a very representative meeting of the board of managers of the Baptist Young People's Union of America held in Chicago, Ill., Dec. 2, serious consideration was given to the matter of dates. The board was face to face with the following problems:

1. A previous resolution of the board authorizing the setting of the dates after conference as to the dates of the Northern Baptist Convention.

2. A resolution at the Cincinnati Convention calling for the placing of the convention dates after July 7.

3. The dates of the Northern Baptist Convention beginning July 5 and closing the 11 or 12.

There was unanimous opinion that there should be no conflict with the dates of the Northern Baptist Convention. There was unanimous opinion that there should be no conflict with the assembly dates which begin immediately after the dates of the Northern Baptist Convention. There seemed, therefore, to be but one way out, namely, to place the dates of the St. Paul Convention before the meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention sufficient time in advance for speakers and delegates to get to Seattle, the meeting place of the Northern Baptist Convention. The board was well aware of the difficulty of many young people getting away for June 28-July 2. An earlier date in June would have seriously conflicted with the closing of the public schools and commencement in colleges. In the light of the above facts, after conference with the St. Paul people, the dates were fixed as above stated. As executive officer of the union I was authorized to furnish this statement to all parties concerned.

WHO WANTS THE ANNUAL?

THE annual of the Northern Baptist Convention has recently come to my desk. I believe there is very little demand indeed for such a publication. I think it was expressed from the platform at Denver that very few delegates had paid for the Annual to be sent to them; therefore the executive committee raised the cost of registration to include the Annual, thus compelling every delegate to have a copy. I never liked that spirit on the part of my brethren. It seemed contrary to Baptist principle and I have always resented it. I for one feel that the publication of the Annual is a needless expenditure of money. How do some of the other brethren feel about it?

AN IMPERATIVE LITERARY NEED FOR NORTHERN BAPTISTS

THE writer believes that one of the most important literary needs of Northern Baptists is two mission study textbooks; one covering the history, organization, scope, methods, fields and present work of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, and the other covering the same ground for the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the missionary work of the American Baptist Publication Society. In each of the books there should be supplementary chapters covering the missionary activities of the women's societies, the Southern Baptist Convention, and also of other North American Baptist organizations.

There are mission-study classes in our churches which take up various fields and phases of missionary work, but there are no concise and comprehensive books that give birds-eye views of the missionary activities of the Northern Baptists. We have given many snapshots of many outlooks, but do not have in interesting, condensed, complete and sufficiently cheap form books containing the facts which should be known by every preacher and every lay worker. I have between two and three hundred volumes in my missionary library, but do not have any single, concise and adequate volume that I can commend as a study book to the members of our churches and for the use of my students that in any way covers either of the above fields. When references are given, the inquirers are compelled to look up so many sources that they feel the trouble is not worth while, and they remain in ignorance.

I wish that these textbooks might be so well prepared that no future graduates of any of our theological seminaries or training schools, or that no pastor or missionary would be ordained, or that no secretary or field worker of any of our missionary societies, foreign, home or state would be finally appointed to this work

RULES FOR THIS PAGE

1. No article must exceed 400 words. The editors will cut copy to that limit in the interest of fair play to all.
2. No attacks upon persons, either directly or by implication, will be allowed.
3. Controversy as such will be avoided, but every man or woman who honestly believes that he has a vital message for the denomination will be given a hearing.
4. Articles which are merely repetitions of arguments previously published will not be used while there is new matter on hand.
5. The editors reserve the right to terminate any particular discussion whenever it seems to them wise to do so.

until he first had a thorough knowledge of these two books.

It might be well to include in the home mission textbook, glimpses of the work done in our state conventions, or it may be that one of our present well-known volumes by a little revision would cover that ground.

In conclusion, there is a vast amount of information that could be utilized in these textbooks, but at present it is not in an adequate, concise, complete, and usable shape. Dr. Howard B. Grose, editor of Missions, is remarkably well-qualified in every way to perform this needed task and the American Baptist Publication Society would add to its present large usefulness by issuing such books and selling them for as small a sum as that asked for the usual mission study textbook.

IS THIS A TRUE INDICTMENT?

(The rule of this column is to require the signature of the writer. The reasons why an exception is made in this case are perfectly obvious. Of course the writer's name is in the possession of THE BAPTIST.)

I have been reading what Mr. T. H. Alford had to say in the issue of Oct. 22 on the subject of "The Average Country Church."

I believe that he did not know or has never got very close to a country pastor or he would not have made much, if any, criticism of any of his actions. I have been a country pastor and am now serving a country church composed of rich farmers, and while I have only been here two months and do not know how long I will be allowed to stay I have found conditions that would make an angel weep and wing his way to a warmer climate.

These farmers have everything needful for their comfort and joy so far as this world is concerned. They also have lots of children and pigs, but think most of the pigs. They come to church regularly, but their faces show that their religion is hurting them. I have one thing to be thankful for and that is I have never baptized a convert yet that acted as if it hurt him and if I ever do I shall feel like doing it over again and try to drown him as, if the Lord taught any one thing, it was to be of good cheer. I never could understand how a man with a clear title to a mansion in the skies with golden streets and all that goes to make it pleasant should try to move heaven and earth to keep from going and taking possession of it, but such is the case with the average farmer and rural church member it seems.

I have at this church about seventy-five as fine young people as you would find anywhere, but cannot give them the service they need because the old people have all the money salted down out of reach of their children, and not only that, but they will not back up any plan I may suggest; neither will they suggest a plan of their own. Now, how in the world can a pastor be what he ought to be and could be? And this is not the only church, either. I believe if the Lord was to send down a large airship to take us all to glory at one time these people would seize it and use it to haul hogs to market. The last pastor was a fine man and is now holding the pastorate of a large church in a city and doing fine work. He spent two years here, or really wasted that much time here. So when I see a country pastor walking down the roads in sunshine and rain because he does not get enough money to ride and pay his bills, I am ready to take off my hat to him even if he is as full of faults as a cactus is of stickers, and if I can help him it is my great delight to do so.

FIELD WORKER.

DECADENT COUNTRY AND VILLAGE CHURCHES

I see in THE BAPTIST, articles about country churches. I know many decadent country and village churches. Some have hardly been opened for years. I know one that is a hay barn. A very large part of our rural population do not go to church. Have ball games and other sports on Sunday. Even country Sabbath schools are not common. Many foreigners have moved in and do not care for churches. Evidently something needs to be done.

My suggestion is that churches be formed into community centers. Take out all seats and put in chairs and tables. The people will pay the bills if made to understand what is wanted. Let the church trustees control the building. If not enough members to make a board of trustees, elect any good Christian men. This would prevent the church being used for morally objectionable purposes. Let the house be open and free for all proper public occasions: lectures, parties, even Hallowe'en parties, if proper kind; political meetings, debating societies, song services, town meetings. Let it be a resort

St. Louis Notes

By W. E. DARROW.

The Missouri State Sunday School Association held its fifty-sixth convention in the Third Church, Nov. 15-18. It was largely attended. The theme of the convention was "Evangelism." Wm. H. Danforth of this city presided. Dr. W. H. Gelstweit and Dr. Chas. W. Gilky were among the speakers. Prof. H. Augustine Smith of Boston directed the singing. He presented a pageant on "The Light of the World" that delighted all who saw it. The church was crowded to the doors. There were separate, divisional conference sessions in some of the other city churches. On Thursday afternoon of the convention, Hon. Arthur M. Hyde, governor of the state, delivered an address on "The Sunday School and Christian Citizenship." Miss Jessie Burrall of Columbia spoke on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Tower Grove, Euclid, King's Highway and other churches of St. Louis have just closed evangelistic meetings. Spiritual renewal and many additions to church membership are reported. Our City B. Y. P. U. held a rally at the Compton Heights Church on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 4. Their training school was held at the same church, Dec. 5-9. A good faculty was secured. Mr. E. E. Lee, B. Y. P. U. secretary, Sunday School Board; Mr. O. K. Armstrong, B. Y. P. U. secretary for Florida; Miss Nelle Lee Dorroh of Caruthersville, Mo.; Rev. L. R. Call of the Second Church, this city, and Mr. J. C. Hockett, Jr., B. Y. P. U. secretary for Missouri, taught. The writer, Dr. R. B. Whiteside and Rev. W. L. Nash are the program committee for the Baptist Ministers' Conference of the city, year 1922. Rev. H. C. Combs of the Compton Heights Church has been quite ill the past few weeks. The City B. Y. P. U. held its annual sunrise prayer meeting and breakfast at the Third Church on Thanksgiving morning at 7. Nearly 100 young people at the meeting. There were talks by the writer, Rev. P. G. Van Zandt, Rev. R. K. Kelly and others. A mass meeting, in the interest of Sunshine Mission, at the Third Church Sunday afternoon, Nov. 27. This mission engages in rescue mission work on Market St. with good results.

Things in New York

By FRANK M. GOODCHILD.

We have settled down to four more years of Tammany rule in the metropolis. Mayor Hylan was re-elected by the unprecedented plurality of over 400,000. In some districts his plurality exceeded all the votes cast for his opponents. Any one who had any political sagacity could have predicted the result. All over the country car fares had risen, but Mayor Hylan "sat tight" and refused to approve any increase, and kept the fares on all elevated, subway and surface lines at 5 cents. The masses have looked upon him therefore as their friend. On numerous occasions he has shown a sober good sense that has commended him to a good many. Unfortunately, too, reform has always been expensive in New York and so is out of favor with many taxpayers. It would be folly to sneer at any city and say that people prefer misrule. Of course they do not. There is a reason for such a political landslide as we have had. Those who hope to win hereafter would do well to study the reasons. Among the men recently elected is Joab H. Banton, who becomes district attorney for New York County. He is a good man, tried and true, a member of the Central Church of the Disciples, and so if not a Baptist, very nearly so. The district attorney has the same salary as the mayor, $15,000 a year. Expositions of various sorts have been the order of the day here for some time. One of the most notable was "The Making of America," which ran for several weeks in the armory of the 71st regiment, and attracted many thousands of visitors. It showed by exhibits and impressive pageants what has been contributed to American civilization by the nations across the seas. In every way it was a great success. Mr. Albert R. Rogers, the business manager of it, is a member of the Central Church, where your correspondent is pastor. Miss Comstock of the Woman's Home Mission Society, working with our City Mission Society in its Americanization department, is giving a series of exhibitions having the same purpose in view, that is, to show to the people in general how much we are indebted to the various nationalities for the human contribution they have made to America. Italian night was held at the Mariners' Temple, one of our city mission churches. Hereafter the exhibitions will be taken to the stronger churches of the city, with a view to informing their congregations. The next one planned is "Czecho-Slovak night" and will be given at the Central Church.

We are still in the midst of the dance craze. It has invaded the churches of various denominations. It is making itself felt in our educational institutions. It is used for diversion, and is being more and more used to raise money. Teachers' College, affiliated with Columbia University, is raising funds for a library. The parents' association and the faculty of the well-known Horace Mann School, which is conducted by Teachers' College, have undertaken to help, and they have arranged a bridge whist party, with dancing, for the afternoon and evening of December 3. There will also be a moving picture exhibition in the evening. The "bridge" tables are $5 in the afternoon, $6 in the evening. The moving pictures show costs $1.50 and there is the same price for admission to the dancing floor in the gymnasium. There will at the same time be a sale of cakes and candy and cigarettes. On the reception committee are Dr. and Mrs. Nicholas Murray Butler, and Dean and Mrs. James Earl Russell. What will our educators be expected to do next?

At the great Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church in Brooklyn, where they have nearly 4,000 members, and a Sunday school of nearly 2,000, "A Black and White Jamboree" is widely announced. It is a minstrel show, and lasts two evenings. The young people of the church give it. The announcement says, "There will be a chorus of thirty trained voices, six end men, soloists and specialties. Dancing will follow both performances." Of course all this is done in the name of Jesus Christ and with a view of bringing the people into the church. What would Christ do if he should appear at this "jamboree" and what would the people who were present do?

The Fifth Avenue Church expects to enter its new building at Easter. It is a beautiful edifice. It will be the Park Avenue Church from that date, the new meeting-house being on the corner of Park Avenue and East 64th Street.

The Baptist Old Peoples' Home

THE AUNT LIZZIE AIKEN MEMORIAL SECTION,
316 FOURTH ST., MAYWOOD, ILL.

This is the only home owned and controlled by Baptists in the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention west of Ohio, for English-speaking aged men and women.

It has property valued at $51,800, free from debt, and has been in actual service for twelve years. A beautiful and deserved ministry to those who after many years trying to serve our Master and promote his kingdom come to need this care.

The home has accommodations for forty members and can take no more of the worthy waiting ones except as some of the present members pass on to their heavenly home or until others add sufficient to the $10,000, given by one generous person, to enable us to build another section.

Do we not owe something to those from whom we have asked, expected and received much, if they come to need this help? Shall the Christian church provide for their aged as well as fraternal organizations do?

Make a Christmas gift in cash or pledge to the building fund of our Baptist Old Peoples' Home. It will be a permanent blessing.

Under recent arrangement made by the General Board of Promotion gifts designated to the Baptist Old Peoples' Home may also be credited to your church on its allotment to the New World Movement.

Send either to your state promotion director or to the treasurer of the home, Laurin H. Turner, 226 W. Adams Street, Chicago. For further particulars address the field secretary, Mrs. A. W. Runyan, 5742 Maryland Ave., Chicago.

North Orange Church in New Jersey. All his ministerial brethren will regret this. He has been invited by the Home Mission Society to make a tour of its Latin American field, in Central America, Mexico, Cuba and Porto Rico.

BY ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

As elsewhere the churches here have been mightily exercised over the disarmament question. Under the leadership of the Federation of Churches, Sunday, Nov. 6, was used throughout the entire city for special messages. Armistice Day saw union services with thronged churches. It was inspiring to think of similar meetings all over the nation. Every one in his own place, we are building a wall together. By the way, is not Armistice Day that is rapidly becoming a great world memorial day the natural time for our November meeting and festival of prayer and thanksgiving? Why not merge the days?

Mrs. Montgomery

On Nov. 28, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, addressed the Ministers' Conference. In direct fashion she dealt with vital Baptist problems, the need of education without which a democracy cannot endure, the convention and Board of Promotion by which a scattered and individualistic folk are coming together into a common work, the future filled with great possibility. What a woman she is, an Esther and Deborah in one, who has come to the kingdom for such a time as this, and is calling us to the help of the Lord against the mighty! The feeling here is one of deep thankfulness that she is our president today. We must go along the path she is pointing out.

Anniversaries

Central Baptist Church of Woodbury, N. J., G. H. Swift pastor, has celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary. The record shows the debt cancelled, a new pipe organ, church redecorated. The full week of celebration revealed a happy, united people with large plans for the future.

North Frankford Church, Horace H. Hunt, pastor, a nephew of Dr. Emory W. Hunt, has also celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary. With the great opportunities in the industrial center of Philadelphia and the near completion of the elevated in sight, the prosperity of this church deserves mention. In the celebration a mortgage of $15,000 was burned and further improvements in the building are being considered. It will be a long time before Bro. Hunt has to worry about a disappearing membership as do downtown pastors.

Grace Temple is always celebrating. Just now it is the fortieth anniversary of Dr. Conwell's pastorate. It was a serious error for your correspondent to omit his name from the list of long pastorates. He stands second in that full list. He celebrated this anniversary by baptizing forty candidates.

Tioga Church gave a reception on December 1 in honor of Ray Hudson, the enthusiastic president of our Baptist Union and recently elected president of the state convention. Bro. Hudson is one of our laymen who gives much time and energy to the Kingdom work. Philadelphia Baptists have great confidence in him and are glad to see him honored by the convention.

Among the changes of pastorate are the coming of H. Lloyd Parkinson from Salsbury, Md., to the Angora Church and the recent resignation of J. Hubbard Morton at Woodland Avenue to go to Hillsboro, Ohio. Rev. E. S. Kunkel of West Chester has resigned to become director of promotion in New York City.

Mid-week Programs

The varied expressions of the educational purpose are always interesting. I wish I could get fuller particulars. The few before me are as follows:

The Eleventh Church has a Baptist Institute each Wednesday at 7 o'clock with four classes and fifty enrolled. Prayer meeting at 8 and an institute of church music at 9 o'clock completes a full evening.

Memorial Church has three classes of young people during the week at different hours. One hundred are enrolled.

Mantua has a fellowship supper each Wednesday and concentrates church activities and appointments to that evening. A recent Wednesday saw 133 present.

The First Church has had the fellowship supper for years and makes much of the social opportunity then and through the evening to the prayer meeting hour. Its attendance is large.

Chestnut Street has a church open house each Wednesday and a concentration of church activities to that day. After the supper hour is a lecture hour for speakers from without. Dr. Henry Edward Tralle has been giving a series of talks, on applied psychology to a class of ninety. The prayer-meeting hour follows.

Conference on Fundamentals

Blockley announces a conference on the afternoon and evening of Dec. 8, too late for this letter to give particulars. Floyd Adams of Brooklyn, George W. Swope of the Fifth Church, and James A. Maxwell are the speakers.

A Triumphant Luncheon

The luncheon was in fact a brilliant beginning of a triumph yet to come. It completely filled Ford Hall with "elect ladies" from all the evangelical churches in the region. It made an inspiring company for the speakers and they were duly inspired by it. It was in the interest of the women's union Christian colleges in the Orient. It held so intensely to its purpose that we were able to think of nothing else for two hours, and were fully convinced of its strong and urgent appeal. The whole occasion wore the hall-mark of our ladies. It was perfectly prepared for; had pith, point, pace, and impact—never boring you for a moment and completely uttering its appeal in just two hours from grace at the table, to benediction, when we all went away thrilled with the cause and loaded with the responsibility.

COLORADO

MEXICAN CHURCH, PUEBLO, Rev. A. Jimenez, pastor, is anticipating a good winter's work. American Baptists of the city, co-operating with the state convention and home mission societies, are purchasing a building and two lots for work of the Baptist Christian center and Mexican church. An attempt, thought to be the work of fanatical Catholics, was made to destroy the building and $500 worth of damage done. The effect of the gospel is seen in three Mexicans discharged in Mexico because of viciousness, drifting to Pueblo, converted in our mission, and now back in Mexico, one a prosperous merchant, the other two employed by the same railroad from which they were discharged, holding responsible positions. At Rocky Ford, Nov. 27, the Mexican Church held its first meeting in the new adobe chapel furnished by its own labor and the members of the First Church. At La Junta that evening Mexicans gathered in the new brick building provided by the First Church, led by Dr. Bowling, aided by the state convention. The building is well built, with a furnace and a study. Rev. Juan Rodriguez baptized four. There is a demand for Bibles among the 75,000 Mexicans in the state which it is impossible for our pastors to supply.

ARIZONA

REV. JUDSON ELLIOTT, pioneer in Baptist work in Arizona, recently died in Phoenix.

Bro. Elliott was a good man and full of the Holy Spirit. He has served as president of Arizona Convention and was chairman of the board of managers of the Arizona Convention for several years. His genial personality, his splendid optimism, his broad missionary vision, his whole-hearted devotion to his Master made him a tower of strength to the weak mission churches, more than half of which he organized himself or assisted in the organization. Bro. Elliott will be missed not only in the circles of his home, but in the councils of the denomination of the state.

THE SECOND CHURCH HOUSE, colored, of Globe, was badly damaged recently by the floods.

JOY REIGNS in the homes of two of our Mexican workers. A boy was born into the homes each of Brother Vargas, Mexican pastor in Glendale, and Brother Villanueva, Bible worker in Phoenix. Congratulations and best wishes!

REDLANDS FIRST CHURCH, S. Fraser Langford, pastor, closed its year with an annual supper Nov. 10, Mr. F. K. Arthur presiding. There have been 123 additions to the membership, forty by baptism, seventy-one by letter, nine by experience, one by affiliation. The membership now stands at 696. The church debt has been paid. $12,608 given to the New World Movement and $8,349 raised for current expenses during the year. A warm tribute was paid Dea. E. S. Foote and Trustee Isaac

Ford, in continuous service since the church's foundation thirty-four years ago. The Sunday school reported an average attendance of 392, the largest attendance being 696, the total 20,313. Mrs. H. Springson, two daily vacation community schools with total attendance of 400, seventeen denominations represented, and the fifth session of a school of missions with an average attendance of 335, total 2009. #### KANSAS

PASTOR WRIGHT OF THE ONAGA CHURCH, has finished a series of meetings without any outside help. Thirty-three professed conversion.

MINNESOTA

THE TWIN CITY BAPTISTS filled nearly a freight car with clothing, etc., for the European sufferers, thus helping to "fill the ship in fellowship." C. C. Stetson of Woodland Park Church, St. Paul, and H. H. Chamberlain of the First Church, Minneapolis, took charge of the goods in the warehouse and had them put upon the freight car without expense. Mrs. Dr.

Robt. Earl of St. Paul, the chairman of the White Cross Department of the women's organization, was in charge of the whole enterprise.

THREE PERSONS were recently baptized at the Swedish Church at Virginia, Minn.

REV. I. D. ALVORD has just closed an evangelistic meeting of three weeks at Campbell. The attendance was excellent and good results were achieved. Pastor E. L. True has already baptized three and others are waiting the ordinance. Mr. Alvord's next meeting will be at Minnesota beginning Nov. 13.

WISCONSIN

DR. HENRY CLARKE, First Church, Racine, has resigned from the pastorate after a service of eleven years. He has also announced his intention of retiring from active work. In the forty years of Dr. Clarke's ministry he has held but three pastorates—at Stonington and Bristol, Conn., besides Racine. It was in connection with his work at Racine that Gorton Hall was erected at a cost of $100,000, with its excellent equipment for young people's and institutional work.

ILLINOIS

BELDEN AVE. CHURCH, Chicago, Rev. J. W. Hoyt, pastor, has received forty into fellowship from Sept. 1 to Dec. 4.

ORION CHURCH closed two weeks successful evangelist campaign held under the direction of A. H. Lovett and Miss Stockton, on Nov. 27. On Nov. 22 the ladies served supper to the men's class and guests, eighty men being present. The present membership is fifty-two men with a goal of one hundred by Christmas.

THE STANDING COUNCIL of the Bloomfield Association met in the First Church of Danville Dec. 2, 1921, and examined J. A. Hertel, pastor of the Calvary Church of Danville, with reference to his qualifications for gospel ministry. The council was highly pleased with the examination and recommended that the church proceed at once with the ordination. Rev. C. C. Long was moderator and Rev. L. E. Ellison, secretary.

INDIANA

DECISION DAY in Garrett Church brought an attendance of 175, ten new members and three babies consecrated.

Since Rev. W. Thurston Gibbs came on June 30, twenty-nine have united by baptism. Every department of the church is thoroughly alive. Macedonia is looking forward to the dedication of its new house of worship.

FIRST CHURCH OF FRANKLIN is moving steadily onward under the leadership of Pastor H. R. MacMillan. Last Sunday the Lord's Supper was observed and the hand of fellowship extended to eleven new members. A large bulletin board, with movable letters and figures, has been given by the men of the church; by this means the pastor plans to do effective advertising.

EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN of Hamburg First Church, Elmer Kirkpatrick, pastor, closed Nov. 25. Mr. and Mrs. John Imrie of Akron, Ky., led the singing. The pastor preached. There were twelve additions, nine of them by baptism. The work in Hamburg goes forward.

OHIO

THE AFTERNOON OF Nov. 27 is one of blessed history to the North Dayton Church, when was laid the cornerstone of the $45,000 new church building. This work was started thirty years ago by Rev. J. W. Icenbarger, then pastor of Central Church. Two years later it came under the care of Dr. H. F. Colby, pastor of First Church, who took a vital interest in it until his death. His son, F. G. Colby, is chairman of the committee of First Church which is financing the new construction, the liberal gifts of her members making possible this larger work. It has also received a few thousand from the denomination. The first house was erected and dedicated in 1893. The program on Nov. 27 consisted of music by the church band; congregational singing led by Harry Stout, who led the music when the work was organized; prayer by Rev. M. F. Bagby, of Colorado Avenue Church; an anthem by a chorus of twenty-five voices; words of greeting by Rev. W. R. Sloman, of Third Street Church; Rev. T. J. Smith, of Zion Church (colored); Rev. Irwin Deer, representative of the council of churches; Rev. O. E. Hale, Summit Street Church, read a letter from the first pastor, Rev. J. E. Thomas, now of Portland, Ore., who served the church for seventeen years. Mr. Edward Canby spoke of the joy of our faith in Jesus; Rev. J. C. MacFarlane, of Memorial Church, read Scriptures arranged for the occasion; Rev. J. B. Slocum, of First Church, gave an address on "Seven Fundamental Stones of Faith." Rev. Philip Bauer, pastor, read names of committees, data of Baptist history and articles placed in cornerstone, and with the assistance of the brick mason laid the cornerstone in the name of the Lord Jesus. Rev. G. W. Johnson, of Linden Avenue, offered prayer and the exercises concluded with singing the doxology.

MEMORIAL CHURCH, Dayton, will immediately undergo improvements, which will include the installation of a new pipe organ, rearrangement of the basement that larger and more convenient room may be had for Sunday school work, and the redecoration of the church auditorium and lecture rooms. The improvements will cost approximately $10,000.

MISSOURI

DR. RAY PALMER, PORTLAND, ORE., conducted meetings at Mexico, Mo., Nov. 6-27, with fifty-four additions to the church. Interference was encountered, but interest in the meetings never flagged. Some teachers at Hardin College have placed their letters in the church for the school year. Rev. J. H. Hughes, pastor, has welcomed over 400 members during his pastorate of less than four years. The membership now totals over 900. Members are added Sunday by Sunday, sole reliance never being placed on revival services. The singing was in charge of the associate pastor, John E. Turner. Nov. 29 Dr. Palmer gave his address on "The Red Dragon" and the hand of fellowship was extended to new members.

NEW EDIFICE OF THE NORTH DAYTON CHURCH

PATEE PARK CHURCH, ST. JOSEPH, closed a three-weeks' revival campaign Dec. 4. Pastor Cox, of Hannibal, Mo., preached. Mr. C. Berneking led the singing with a large chorus. Warren Adams, B. Y. P. U. president, led his newly organized orchestra. Thirty-five were added to the church. This has been a great meeting, more because of the spirit promoted than because of the membership additions.

PROBABLY NO COMMUNITY MOVEMENT has created more interest in the towns of Bristol and Middlebury than the contest which has been carried on for six weeks between the men's classes of the First Church of Bristol and the Ilsley Memorial Church of Middlebury. On the closing day of the contest, Nov. 27, more than 975 men were in these two classes. The pastors of these churches, Rev. J. J. Fowler of Bristol, and Rev. H. L. Howard of Middlebury, are to be congratulated upon the splendid results of this contest.

ON SUNDAY, NOV. 27, Rev. E. C. Weeks, formerly at Hartford, N. Y., began his pastorate with the North Springfield Church, as successor to Rev. B. A. Fisher, who was greatly beloved by all the people and who did a splendid work.

Rev. G. E. CONGDON has just completed his fifth year with the Grafton Church. During this time he has received thirteen into church membership by baptism. About two years ago the Congregationalists and Baptists united in work and worship, with Mr. Congdon as pastor of the united church. During this time the united people have been greatly blessed.

ON NOV. 6, Rev. KENDRICK HACKETT began his second year with the South Newfane Church. During the year just closed Pastor Hackett has seen splendid results from his aggressive leadership.

THE CHURCH AT NORTH TROY feels itself fortunate in having secured Rev. George Webber Church of York, Pa., as pastor. Mr. Church began his work on Nov. 1, and already eight have been received into the church by baptism.

THE ANNUAL PARISH SUPPER of the Enosburg Falls Church, held on Thursday evening, Nov. 17, proved to be a most enjoyable and profitable gathering. Addresses were given by Mr. E. J. Tyler a prominent citizen of the town, by Prin. Sinclair of the local high school, and by Rev. A. C. Berrie, pastor of the St. Albans Church. For the Sunday evening services during November the pastor, Rev. E. E. Scates, preached a series of sermons on "Statesmen and Generals," in which he compared some of the Old Testament heroes with modern leaders.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF CHESTER is anticipating the coming of its new pastor, Rev. Oswald H. Rankin, who is to begin his work Jan. 1. Mr. Rankin comes to Vermont after a successful pastorate at Pawtucket, R. I.

THE COMMUNITY CHURCH AT COLCHESTER has received the acceptance of its call to Rev. D. G. Donnocker of Hopewell Junction, N. Y., who began his work on Dec. 11.

Rev. I. M. THOMPSON, pastor of the churches at Hardwick and East Hardwick, deserves much credit for the splendid community Armistice-Sunday service which he arranged for the evening of Nov. 13 and which was largely attended. There was a chorus of thirty voices, and the pastors of the Hardwick and East Hardwick churches were all on the platform. Mr. Thompson delivered an interesting and helpful address on "Real Freedom."

Rev. WILLIAM FREDERICK WILSON, pastor of the First Church, Burlington, has tendered his resignation and closed his labors Dec. 4 in order to become associate pastor, having charge of the religious educational work of the First Church of Fall River, Mass., a work for which he is eminently fitted both by training and experience. The Burlington Church, at a largely attended meeting on Nov. 25, unwillingly accepted the resignation, realizing that they were losing a pastor of exceptional pulpit ability who presents the gospel in an interesting, powerful and scholarly manner. All rejoice for Mr. Wilson's clean, consecrated life and regret losing him from the church and community where he had already gained many friends and was exerting a strong influence. As he goes from them all will pray God's richest blessing upon him and his family, feeling sure that his devotion, Christian experience and all-round ability will make him a great success in the Master's work. The church and congregation tendered Pastor Wilson and family a farewell reception on Friday evening, Dec. 2, which was largely attended not only by his own people but by the pastors and members of other congregations and friends from the University of Vermont.

CONNECTICUT

THE STATE BOARD OF PROMOTION met in annual session Nov. 29 in the Y. M. C. A., Hartford. Officers elected to serve another year: President, Rev. J. N. Lackey; vice-president, Rev. A. D. Carpenter; secretary, Rev. Horace B. Sloat. To fill vacancies on the state board of promotion the following were elected: Rev. D. P. Gaines, Waterbury; Rev. D. A. Pitt, Norwich; Rev. D. B. MacQueen, Bridgeport. The Connecticut women's share in the continuation campaign was discussed by Miss Mary L. Howard, president of the state united organization, and Mrs. J. D. Rough of the General Board of Promotion spoke for the national women's organization. The financial report was presented by Dr. A. B. Coats showing an unusual record in collections for the past year, and a decided increase at the present time in collections for the current year. Dwight Chapman, Hartford, Connecticut's live layman representative on the General Board of Promotion, reported on the findings of the Indianapolis meeting, and emphasized the proposed plan to organize the laymen of the denomination into a permanent force to assist in all lines of denominational work. A committee of nine was appointed to set up an organization and project a program of Christian stewardship. A committee of two was appointed to study the situation in the state with a view to setting up the laymen's organization.

A THREE WEEKS' SERIES of evangelistic meetings has just closed at the Grand Avenue Church, New Haven, Rev. P. L. Cosman, pastor. The attendance was good. Rev. Earl T. Pavro, Indiana, was the evangelist; soloist, Miss Nellie A. Dexter. Six have been baptized—others await the ordinance. Mr. Cosman is studying at Yale Divinity School.

Rev. R. MAPLEDSEN, financial agent of the Suffield School, has been engaged as stated supply at the First Church, Bristol.

THE MONTWESE CHURCH, Rev. F. P. Stevens, pastor, held the first annual layman's banquet Nov. 30. Colonel R. O. Eaton was toastmaster and in a most felicitous fashion introduced Rev. H. B. Sloat, Rev. J. D. Prigmore, pastor Center Congregational Church, New Haven; Rev. D. W. Lovett, Wallingford, and the pastor. Music was furnished by the choir of Immanuel Church, New Haven, Rev. J. B. Pharr, pastor. An unusual opportunity is opening before the Montweese Church. Great railway and electric developments are under way in this particular section. People are moving in. The church is alive to the possibilities.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE of the South Church, Hartford, are just completing a six-week study of the book "Playing Square with Tomorrow," under the leadership of Mrs. H. B. Sloat. After the study period the young people did White Cross work under the direction of Mrs. J. F. Barton. An interesting part of the general program was the debate on the subject, "Resolved, that mission work in Latin America presents a greater problem to our Home Mission Society than the Negro situation in the United States." The judges rendered a decision in favor of the affirmative.

AT THE OLD FIRST CHURCH, Hartford, Dr. J. H. White is for the thirteenth season conducting his popular Sunday-evening service with a house filled to overflowing. He is having many inquirers, and conversions are frequent. His hot-point talks on "The Voice from the Rock" are attracting wide attention. These talks of a descriptive and inspirational character are based on the Plymouth pageant of last summer and its significance to America. It was the growth of the Pilgrim spirit in England that led to their settlement in America. This spirit was due to and fostered by the translation of the Bible into the common tongue of England by Tyndale and Wycliff. The hot-point talk is always followed by a closing meditation on some spiritual theme. Dr. White has discovered that such a program, together with an excellent musical program, has completely solved the problem of the evening audience in a down-town church. The pastor is in constant demand as a speaker before such groups as the Knights of Malta and the Kiwanis Club. Recently he was made an honorary member of the latter club and will act as chaplain.

THINGS ARE HUMMING at the Central Church, Norwich, Rev. D. A. Pitt, pastor. A campaign in Christian stewardship has been under way for three weeks prior to the every member canvass Dec. 4. The Central Church has a strong men's class. Recently 120 men attended the annual banquet. A. M. Harris, treasurer of the M. and M. Board, was the principal speaker. A division has been made in the young people's work, and an intermediate group has been formed, greatly strengthening the work of the young people in the church. Dr. Pitt is working a unique plan in connection with his prayer meeting. A few weeks ago he invited all the members who were received into the church by his predecessor, Rev. A. F. Purkiss, to attend in a body and sit together in a section reserved for them. The following week all those received into the church by Dr. Joel B. Slocum were invited to be present; then those who came in during Dr. P. C. Wright's pastorage, and so on. It has meant increase in attendance and interest.

REV. F. S. CLARK, Rowayton, baptized seven candidates on the morning of Nov. 13, most men and women coming from pedit-Baptist communions. On the same date Rev. W. T. Thayer, director of religious education, spent the day with Mr. Clark, speaking at the morning service, Bible school, C. E. Society, and giving stereopticon in the evening.

REV. HERBERT JUDSON WHITE has been elected as a member of the board of the A. B. F. Society.

THE MEN OF THE FIRST CHURCH, Hartford, have voted to co-operate with the national laymen's organization in promoting the New World Movement.

MAINE

BATH HAS THREE live, efficient Baptist churches with several outstations which are cared for by the energetic city pastors. Pastor Holman at the First Church, is strongly carrying forward an important work. Two new deacons were ordained last Sunday and members received. Pastor West at People's Church, is keeping its work up to its name, preaching to many who otherwise would not go to church. Pastor Taylor at the south end of the city has a residential section to himself, a good congregation and a loyal band of workers.

INSTITUTES OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION: Under the leadership of Rev. Alexander Henderson, director of religious education, Maine has enjoyed three institutes that should give special impetus to this important work. Mr. Henderson had the assistance of Dr. Chalmers, Miss Brockway, Mr. Young, Dr. Roberts, Mr. Higginbotham and Mr. McGorrell. Sessions were held at Portland, Rockland and Waterville.

LIVERMORE FALLS: During the campaign Rev. F. P. Freeman, of Livermore Falls, instituted a reading contest on tithing and did good preaching on it. As a result a large Tithers' League was formed, the church went over the top in the New World Movement, raised the pastor's salary $400 and in several ways increased its local service. Then came a seven months' strike in the paper mill, the town's great industry. Strike breakers carried on a small business while the regular operatives remained idle for seven months. The church maintained its work and missionary contributions, proving that the gospel faithfully taught and earnestly lived is adequate to any difficult situation.

THE KENNEBEC VALLEY MINISTER'S ASSOCIATION at its recent session in Waterville had an essay by Rev. H. H. Brown, of Augusta, on "Increasing the Spiritual Efficiency of the Church." Mr. Brown illustrated his points from his pastoral experiences. His church at Augusta, since the Penney Memorial and the First united, is one of the largest in the state.

ORDINATION: At the recent meeting of the South Kennebec Ass'n, Mr. C. A. Watkins, a Bates graduate who has been pastor at Litchfield and Litchfield Plains, was ordained to the ministry. Rev. C. E. Young was moderator of the council, Rev. Charles Frederick, clerk. The sermon was preached by Rev. George G. Kincaid, band of fellowship by the moderator, charge to the candidate by Rev. Charles Frederick, charge to the church by Rev. Alexander Henderson.

MASSACHUSETTS

MAPLEWOOD CHURCH, MALDEN, celebrated its third anniversary Dec. 4. During the three-year period 109 have been added to the membership, sixty-three since January, 1921. The regular weekly schedule calls for three prayer meetings, two group meetings and the regular prayer service, which has passed the 100 mark in attendance. A large organized group of personal workers aid the pastor. The church has recently spent over $8,000 for renovation of its building.

FIRST BAPTIST, MELROSE, Rev. Philetus H. McDowell, pastor, has discovered a "gold mine" in the "tithing-intercession chapter," Hebrews 7, and is purposing to have its present work be the present work of its High Priest.

WINTER HILL CHURCH enjoyed a rare spiritual treat last month. Under the auspices of the Brotherhood, William Homer Leavitt, of L'Academie des Beaux Arts, Paris, exhibited his "Last Supper," a painting 22x15 feet. Each evening a delightful address was given by the artist. At the crowning service a large audience was held spellbound while Mr. Leavitt described events leading to the crucifixion. At the close 300 people partook of the Lord's Supper. Rev. Howard Douglas Pierce, pastor, is preaching a series of sermons on "The Fundamentals of Baptist Faith."

THIRD CALVINISTIC CHURCH, Middleborough, has become federated with Independent Congregationalist under the name of The Rock Village Church. Since the burning of the Baptist church building in 1918 these churches have worshipped together in Holiness Chapel, which has been enlarged to a commodious building for the community church. The cost was about $15,600, and all bills are paid. It was formally dedicated Nov. 13, with a large attendance and addresses by neighboring pastors. Rev. Chas. W. Allen, former pastor, made the principal address. The church is preparing for evangelistic services. Rev. M. F. Johnson is pastor of the federated church.

REV. W. J. B. CANNELL began his pastorate at Milford early in November. Brother Cannell has already held a successful pastorate with the Antrim Church for a period of nine years. On Nov. 1: the annual church rollcall was held by the Milford Church and it served every purpose of a welcome to the new pastor. The church was addressed on this occasion by the pastor and Rev. D. S. Jenks, secretary of the convention.

A HEARTY WELCOME was extended the new pastor, Rev. Charles P. MacGregor of the First Church, Manchester, Dec. 2. Governor Brown was introduced and very happily welcomed Mr. MacGregor to the state. Rev. D. S. Jenks, secretary of the state convention, conveyed the greetings of the 14,000 Baptist church members of the state. Rev. H. A. Jump of the local ministers' union spoke for that organization. Mr. Allan M. Wilson, speaking in behalf of the church, welcomed Mr. and Mrs. MacGregor and their three children and pledged the loyalty of the church. The new pastor gave a very happy response. This pastorate began Nov. 1 and has opened most auspiciously.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES have recently been held with the church at Amherst under the direction of Rev. H. R. Whitelock, pastor of the People's Church, Manchester. Mr. Whitelock was assisted by Mrs. Helen Pitt of Manchester, soloist, and during the second week by Rev. Edgar E. Davidson, evangelist. There were hopeful conversions. Rev. A. S. Buzzell is pastor here.

REV. C. T. REEKIE, who has previously held pastorates in New Hampshire, has accepted the call to the church in Hudson.

REV. J. K. MILLER, convention pastor-at-large, is spending three weeks with pastor E. M. Fuller of North Stratford in special visitation and evangelistic work. North Stratford has recently had a large increase in population on account of the establishing of a new industry.

IT IS WITH SADNESS we record the sudden death of the wife of Rev. P. A. Kilmister, pastor of the Curtis Memorial Church, Concord. Mr. Kilmister came to the Curtis Memorial Church a little more than a year ago and was married about a year ago. Mr. and Mrs. Kilmister came as young people to this, his first pastorate. They had won their way to the hearts of the people and the work was going well.

THE DEDICATION SERVICES of the new church home of the Swedish church, Concord, were held recently. This church some months ago purchased the mansion formerly owned by Franklin Pierce, once President of the United States. The lower floor has been remodeled for use by the church and serves the purpose most admirably. The two upper floors are rented as apartments. The church building heretofore occupied by the church has been sold and the mortgage to the Home Mission Society paid. The new location will greatly help the Swedish work at Concord. At the dedication services a sermon was preached by Rev. D. S. Jenks, and one in the Swedish language by a Swedish pastor from Boston. It is largely through the untiring efforts of the pastor, Rev. F. J. Liljegren, that this happy result of a new location has been brought to pass.

NEW YORK

FIRST CHURCH, Buffalo, has boosted the salary of its pastor, Rev. Sam'l. Russell, to $4,200, an increase of $600. At the same meeting the church voted to add $1,000 to its expense budget toward the salary of a missionary in Africa in whom many of the members are interested. This money will be paid out of the regular expense fund and will not affect the pledge made to the $100,000,000. During the past year more than $10,000 has been paid on the church mortgage and $3,000 has been spent on repairs.

THREE TONS OF FRESH vegetables and fruit and 3,152 packages of other eatables comprised the Thanksgiving offering of the Sunday school of the Hanson Place Church, Brooklyn. The Sunday before Thanksgiving is the biggest day of the year for this Sunday school. For fourteen years the scholars have contributed food or money that needy families might be helped and the larders of the Baptist Home and orphanages and hospitals be replenished. As the project grew it was decided that money should be brought instead of food, in order to facilitate handling and that wholesale prices might be obtained.

One thousand dollars' worth of food stuffs was the total contribution this year. The front of the church and the window sills were decorated with foliage, pumpkins and chrysanthemums. The foodstuffs were piled fifteen feet high on the platform. A series of moss-covered steps was built in the middle of the foodstuffs and over the moss trickled a stream of water.

The growth of this enterprise has been largely due to the tireless efforts of Mr. Harvey O. Dobson, superintendent of the Sunday school for sixteen years.

REV. CLARENCE HILL FRANK, First Church, Poughkeepsie, is preaching during December and January a series of sermons on "The Person and Work of Jesus."

REV. O. S. BANCROFT preached his farewell sermon to the Hannibal church Sunday, Nov. 27. The pastor also gave the hand of fellowship to eleven new members whom he baptized the former Sunday. This closes a successful pastorate of nearly three years. Mr. Bancroft has entered upon his work as pastor of another church. The Hannibal Church is without a pastor. E. T. Welling is chairman of pulpit committee.

THE HAMILTON CHURCH celebrated its one hundred twenty-fifth anniversary by a series of impressive services Dec. 4. Probably only one other Baptist church in America can be ranked ahead in historic significance, and that is First Church of Providence, R. I. Colgate University had its beginnings within Hamilton Church, and the Baptist Missionary Convention of the State of New York is a development of an organization founded by members of this body. Outstanding among the notable features of the celebration was the communion service at which the pastor, Rev. Franklin D. Elmer, welcomed a large company of new members—approximately 350 partook of communion. The number of new members received during the period of a little less than a year that Mr. Elmer has been at Hamilton is 132. Of these forty-one have come by baptism, twenty-six by letter, four by experience, five into associate membership, and fifty-six students in Colgate University as affiliate members. At this service the pastor preached; Dr. A. F. Brigham offered prayer; Dr. F. C. Ewart read the covenant, and Dr. W. M. Lawrence assisted in the communion service. These men are members of the Colgate University faculty. At the afternoon service the work of the various departments was outlined, and at the vesper service the University choir sang and there was a pageant by forty girls from the Sunday school. A supper was served in the vestry of the church at 6:30, after which there were group rallies of men, women, and young people. Prof. E. P. Sisson addressed the men; Mrs. A. E. Alton, president of the Women's Organization, addressed the women, and Dr. R. W. Moore spoke to the young people. At the meeting of men it was voted to organize a brotherhood. The anniversary celebration was closed with a rally at which the Sunday school orchestra played and the pastor gave a picture survey of the service of the denomination on this continent, entitled "From Alaska to the Antilles."

EVERYLAND Again!

My Little Brother Says:

Some people think missionary stories are stupid. That is because when they were boys and girls no one told them what exciting adventures missionaries have. Boys and girls who have read "Everyland" think missionary stories are the nicest stories in the world and they are glad way down to their stomachs because the magazine has waked up after its two-year nap. I wish some one would give me a subscription to "Everyland" for a Christmas present.

NEW JERSEY

MT. PLEASANT CHURCH OF NEWARK, Rev. Sidney W. Powell, pastor, held two weeks of evangelistic meetings. For the first week, Rev. Edmont P. Hains, cornetist and soloist, assisted. The attendance was encouraging. At the beginning the pastor preached to Christian people, and although the invitation was not given, several were converted. A bartender, drawn to the service by the sound of the cornet, left determined not to come back. The next night he was impelled to come again, and during that service was converted and gave up his work as bartender. He now has work, has heard from his wife, from whom he had been living apart, and expects soon to be reunited with his family. The Spirit has been working mightily, and nothing like it has been seen before in Mt. Pleasant. The church is praying for a continuance of this spirit as the evangelistic note will dominate the evening services during the year.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

FIRST CHURCH, NEWCASTLE, has been without a regular pastor for some time, owing to the broken health of the former pastor, Rev. F. B. McAllister. Rev. H. A. Lewis has been acting pastor. On Nov. 15 Rev. Percival H. Lynch took up the work here and the church is looking forward with great hopes.

THE CHURCH OF REYNOLDSVILLE is responding to the leadership of the Pastor J. S. Brownlee who came to the field October 1, 1921. The attendance at all services is increasing. Dec. 4 has a record of the largest attendance at morning service for years, and the largest attendance at Bible school in the history of the church. The Bible school has increased from 143 to 318—attendance Dec. 4—an increase of 175 in less than two months. All available room is taken and contract has been let for more room.

come, but I am going to hang my stocking up anyway." Just then I was given a sharp jerk and there was mother standing over me, saying, "You have been sleeping, my dear, I have called you several times."

All during that evening and the next day the Bible verse kept running through my mind. I got the presents I dreamed of and several more. It seemed that I just couldn't keep them all myself. The day before Christmas I told mother my dream and asked permission to give some of my gifts away. She consented, and while I was busy packing a basket of toys, mother packed a basket of groceries and clothing. There was a very poor family living close to us, so mother and I decided to give the basket to them, and after dark we slipped quietly up to the house and set them on the porch. Christmas morning, when the children saw the baskets, they declared that Santa Claus brought them. They were telling me about it afterward and I smiled when I listened for I knew who their Santa Claus was. I obeyed the command, "Give and it shall be given unto you," and received happiness in return.

Have church socials once a week or month according to season, or circumstances, where all refreshments are sold at prices that simply cover all costs, not to make money, but to get the people. Let girls in the neighborhood bake cakes, pies, etc., at bakers' prices; taking home unsold articles. Aim to get girls from foreign families to do this. Let there be Christian talks or readings when they can be properly worked in. Circumstances will develop leaders. Of course have a Sabbath school. Favor all religious work in the neighborhood. Libyan desert, and to this city this Englishwoman went with no help save that of native guides. No other white woman has ever visited these scenes and but few white men. The story was written from day to day in the midst of hardship and danger and once or twice chapters were completed in the face of what was thought imminent death. The whole reads like a romance. People who enjoy stories of travel in little-known places will certainly want this book, which is beautifully illustrated with pictures taken by the author.

This story is a further account of the career of "Smiles, a Rose of the Cumber-lands," and pictures the life of the people of our Southern Highlands. The story of life does not end with marriage, as do so many novels; indeed that event may be only the beginning of real romance. This book will give the reader some delightful hours among pleasant acquaintances.

In the Days Before Columbus, by Francis Rolt-Wheeler; New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

A history for young people, telling of the history of America and its people in the many centuries before any white men saw it. The beginning is in remote geological periods. Readers, both old and young, will be thrilled and instructed. Well illustrated.

The Quest of the Western World, by Francis Rolt-Wheeler; New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

No story is more romantic than that which tells of the events leading up to the discovery of America and the adventures of the early voyagers. Here it all is in readable form and with many illustrations. The old vikings will live again for the boy fortunate enough to possess this book.

Dante: Poet and Apostle, by Ernest Hatch Wilkins; University of Chicago Press. $1.25.

The three chapters in this book are lectures delivered recently at Columbia University and the University of Chicago and are designed to serve as an introduction to the study of the Divine Comedy. The first chapter covers the years of Dante's preparation; the second discusses Dante as apostle; and the last considers the Divine Comedy as poetry. Not only beginners, but students of Dante, will find these chapters suggestive. Especially interesting is the emphasis placed on the apostolic work which Dante had in view.

The Little Red Foot, by Robert W. Chambers; New York, George H. Doran Co.; $1.90 net.

Herein we have the Chambers of the earlier, healthier stage, before the obsession of the cheap "problem" novel, before the artist yielded to the commercial lure of suggestive sex-appeal and risqué situations. If Mr. Chambers could wipe off the slate all of his books since "Cardigan," and continue his opus list with this romantic tale, I, for one, would rank him in a much higher place in the list of American novelists. The scene of The Little Red Foot is laid in northern New York, in Revolutionary days, and has to do with the thrilling adventures of the gallant John Droque and his idyllic love-affair with the fascinating Penelope Grant. Against a vivid background of Indian fights, midnight raids, and hairbreadth escapes, are lined the massive figures of our Revolutionary War heroes; in addition to being a corking good tale, this volume is a powerful appeal for a more sacred and universal appreciation of the sacrifices and achievements of our forefathers.

him in a town about forty miles away but insisted that my friend and I should go up to see it before the deal was closed. It not being convenient for us to get away at any other time, we made the trip one Sunday afternoon and evening.

There was a revival meeting in progress at the time at our church which continued over without interruption until the following Wednesday evening. On this later date the preacher asked for an expression from the members as to whether he should continue longer. Being always eager to take my part in matters of this kind, I soon arose and said in substance: "Brother, I think the meeting should continue longer. We ought to run it anyway till we can have one good old-fashioned Baptist baptizing." At this point my wife who was sitting near reached over and jerked the tail of my coat. Feeling something was wrong I stammered a few more remarks and then sat down. She then spoiled everything by leaning over and saying in a stage whisper that carried to every part of the house: "Doctor, we had the baptizing the Sunday you fellows went out and bought the horse."

A colored lady who had been riding on the street car for several blocks approached the conductor and said:

"Mistah Con-ductah, will you all please postpone me at the next street?"

"Postpone you?" queried the conductor,

"what do you mean, postpone?"

"Ah gwan, you all can't fluscheate me —ah knows what postpone means—hit means put off, and you bettah postpone me gently, too."

Something or other reminded the Congregationalist of Roland Cotton Smith, D.D., once rector of the Episcopal church in Northampton, Mass. He was called upon to deliver a Memorial Day address. Introducing him, the commander of the local G. A. R. Post said: "We will now have an address from Dr. Smith, after which a volley will be fired over the dead." —Christian Register.

A story is told of a man in a back pew of a London church seen from the pulpit with his hat on.

The minister beckoned to a deacon, who went to the man and asked if he was aware that his hat was on.

"Thank God!" said the man. "I thought that would do it. I have attended this church for six months, and you are the first who has spoken to me." —Australian Christian World.

"It Is to Laugh"

When is a church service like an insane asylum? When the members are not all there.

Talking of embarrassing situations, the following true story comes to us from Dr. J. W. WILLIAM LESTER

WISDOM—OR OTHERWISE

For several months past I have dodged a problem. Three or four times I have sat down at my more or less trusty typewriter, fully intending to answer the questions propounded in the various letters which have come to me. And each time I have been discreet, and written about something else! But, today my desk is clear, and I have decided to put my foot in it with a vengeance. Here goes!

From Michigan, from California, and from Iowa (to specify only three particular instances), letters have come, each asking the same type of question: "What are the requirements and what are the potential rewards of the singing game? Is there any chance for success in the singing field for a singer with at least ordinary gifts, who may lack the financial backing that would lift the candidate above the problems of mundane living?" Such questions open such a wide range of possibilities that they cannot be honestly answered with a yes or no. And the whole matter is so bound up with the personal equation that the unfortunate hero who attempts squarely to face the problem is certain to get more brick-bats than bouquets. The present writer has been closely allied with this particular field for the past fifteen years, as concert accompanist, as church organist, as choral director, as teacher (coach), as composer and editor and critic. In addition, he has been in close co-operation with one of the greatest voice-builders now living. Some few students have won their way to success, both financial and artistic, many have lost heart and slipped by the wayside, and some have flatly failed. And this is a general resume of the field—not of the work of one teacher alone. What is the matter with voice-teaching today? Frankly, we must admit that many, too many, earnest students fail to realize anything but unnatural habits of voice-production and affected modes of song-interpretation from their study. Too often is it true that definite study ruins the ability of a gifted individual to so sing a simple church song that pleasure is given to an average audience, and this without giving the singer the artistic or vocal equipment to do convincingly more ambitious arias. A successful singer must be much more than a machine for the production of more or less pleasant tones, interspersed with guttural grunts for consonants. The artist must be able to deliver, unimpaired, a fluent, apparently effortless, beautiful stream of resonant tone, mentally colored to reflect and suggest the mood values of the song sung, together with a cultured, distinct and definite pronunciation and articulation of the various word elements comprehended in the text. Apparent must be a sympathetic personality and stage presence, the program presented must be of an artistic value and interest to merit attention, and the singer must have a personal message to be expressed in song. To put it very briefly, there must be voice, brains and knowledge. All three must be developed to a high degree; success is impossible without the balance between them. The woods are full of over-balanced freaks—phenomenal voices hitched up to unpleasant people; strange voices in the stranger company of beautiful persons; the pathetic grind, lacking the intrinsic vocal wealth, but determined to achieve success because of large repertoire or polished renditions; we all know the familiar types. Rarely do we find the artist—that balanced compound of beautiful voice, natural method of singing, interesting material to be sung, and a pleasing personality.

And how often do we find the young singer who has fallen into the hands of the vocal-fake; who, misled by the foolish lies of the mercenary quack, is expecting to be singing in "Grand Opera" when the poor victim cannot sing the simplest song or hymn with any degree of success! How often do we hear that familiar statement: "She sang better before she took a lesson!" There are plenty of excellent, honest, competent teachers who will give a pupil sane, usable methods and foundation, and place the pupil on the path to financial and artistic success. But there are too many quacks who will fill the minds of the trusting with fairy-tales, at so much per, and at the same time either halt proper progress because of their incapacity to produce results, or worse, will ignorantly wreck the voice tendered to their care. A teacher claiming to teach the vocal art should be subjected to one fundamental test: Does he produce singers? Nothing else matters! No promises of wonderful futures, no side-line lectures on psychology, classes in poetry or art, or any other diversions (no doubt valuable in themselves) should be allowed to becloud the main issue. How do the teacher's worst pupils sing? Do they improve? Never judge a teacher by any one pupil, either good or bad; strike an average. Then leave out all personal sentiment. I have known singers (potential) who have refused to study with a most excellent teacher because they did not happen to like a minor point of his personal appearance, who have turned around and been badly fooled by a very poor teacher who happens to have a plausible manner and ingratiating line of talk. Results are what count in singing as in any other art or business. Take little on faith, insist on proof. Singing is not such an Egyptian mystery that it cannot be made clear to the average intelligence. If the teacher cannot transmit his knowledge to the pupil, it is pretty safe to say that the matter is not clear in the mind of the teacher. During the next few months, I intend to run a series of articles taking up this problem from different angles—considering such matters as the requirements of church-solo singing, what quartet work needs, what amount of musicianship is requisite to success, what is a minimum stock of songs, what are the rewards open to the American student, and so on. Any suggestions, criticisms or comments will be very welcome; and space will be given to them wherever possible. No doubt, there will be exception taken to some of my statements—for any vocal point is a fruitful subject for disagreement—and I believe in calling a spade a spade; there has been too much of a smoke-screen thrown around this subject too long; let us see if we can find a sane, sensible, safe basis for our conclusions and suggestions.

The Program

Mrs. Everett O. Fisk presided and pushed along the program with tact, terseness, and a pleasant touch. Miss Marian Clapp, one of our gifted young ladies, sang two numbers. Mrs. Gertrude S. Martin, Nat. Secy. of the American Assn. of University Women, was the first speaker. She claimed that she spoke for intercollegiate, interdenominational, and international women; and that theirs was the greatest associate opportunity for world service. We are all properly full of limitation of armaments, but that only clears the way. Constructive work must follow it. Where and how? We fully answer the questions in our work for oriental women. That work will be done either with us or without us. Thousands of oriental women will either be turned away from Christian training for leadership, or else welcomed and educated for it. When we welcome and provide for them we find ourselves exchanging civilizations and their best gifts. We must get at the oriental homes with their mothers and girls, just as we do here.

Then our Baptist president, Mrs. Montgomery, was introduced and Baptists proudly know how she speaks. She described this as the supreme enterprise for Christian womanhood in America. Its foundation was laid over fifty years ago, when consecrated New England "school-ma'ams" went over to the Orient to pray and teach. In this work we are relating ourselves to two-thirds of the women of the world and are founding ten colleges on the foundations laid by missionary women long ago. Comically true was the appeal of one wise oriental woman: "Nothing but Christian education will ever deliver us from the intolerable tyranny of the men!" Some leaders are against it—even Alexander Duff was—but real leaders stand solidly in favor of it, and the great majority always come around to them at last. What is it but getting back again to Jesus, when He set a little child in the midst? Then He turned the old world on its hinges. Thus He opens the door which we must enter.

Mrs. Henry W. Peabody

Whenever you see Mrs. Montgomery instinctively you look for Mrs. Peabody, and vice versa. They are like two halves of a pair of beneficent shears, and they do some fine clipping in missions. Their addresses at this luncheon supplemented each other perfectly. Mrs. Peabody securely held all the implications of the other earnest addresses, and brought them home to each hearer with a quiet and compelling intensity. She instanced the chaos of India and declared that if you change that whole condition you must change their women, and you must do it now; it is an opportunity that will not last five years. Mrs. Peabody did not say "money" vocally, but in other impressive ways she said it loudly.

The women thus launch their effort to raise two million dollars, to secure the one million offered them by the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Fund, upon that condition. They will do it, with their mighty appeal and their driving purpose.

Other Banquets

It has been a week of banquets. Too many of them for good digestion, but not for wholesome and varied inspiration.

The first was that of the Newton alumni on Dec. 5 in Chipman Hall, Tremont Temple. About a hundred graduates gathered, and it proved to be one of the best of Newton's feasts. This was largely owing to Pastor Lockrow, who chose and managed the appetizing spread. He seemed glad to have so many of his brethren back in Chipman Hall, their old meeting-place. Pres. Arthur E. Harriman was toastmaster, and an unusually fine quartet of the students delighted the graduates. Dr. Horr spoke on the vision of Christ seen in his disciples; Prof. Berkeley on the marked development of religious education—the arrival of the child in our democracy; Rev. W. G. Goble on Newton's world work; Dr. Raphael C. Thomas, on Philippine progress; Prof. W. H. Allison on the unwarranted suspicion of our Baptist schools. This mid-year banquet is always a welcome rally of the "boys" between commencements.

Two Social Unions

The men's and the women's come on succeeding evenings. The subject of the first meeting was "The Far East." We crossed the Pacific, and seemed to hear oriental voices. Miss Janet Ho sang their songs, Miss Way Sheung Siu recited their poems, and Dr. Tehyi Hsieh delivered a vigorous and statesmanlike address on "Watch the Pacific!" Many of his hearers who are already doing that, were supplied with good reasons therefore.

A Quarter Centennial

The Woman's Social Union, under the presidency of Mrs. O. J. White, quite uniquely celebrated their twenty-fifth birthday, and the men had the privilege of filling the gallery and seeing them eat and celebrate, just as the women had in the gallery at old Tremont Temple in Dec., 1896. They had no outstanding orator, but filled the evening with features appropriate to their celebration.

Strengthening Things at Fall River

Under the leadership of Pastor Herrick at First Church, Fall River, they have had such expansion that an expansion in the pastorate became necessary. Rev. W. F. Wilson, formerly our state promoter, and latterly pastor of the First Church, Burlington, Vt., comes to be co-pastor with Dr. Herrick, Pastor Wilson taking charge of the home and branch schools, to make them modern in method, educational in purpose, and evangelical in achievement. Dr. Herrick's men's class enrolls 900; Mrs. Herrick's Philathea class, 300. Both classes have out-reaching social and practical programs, ministering to groups in the city, touching the various occupational circles of their members. Dr. Wilson's coming into the team makes a competent leadership. His past success, especially at the big West Somerville church for many years, awakens great expectations. It is an aggregation of strength and consecrated good sense. They will pull together unselfishly and busily, in honor preferring one another, and being wise to win men. Things are brighter than ever in that city.

Assure your heart, then, and always comfort your heart with this: that God's loving-kindness is above, and is behind, and is at the heart of all things that He sends or permits to be sent to you. What a blessedness it is to be absolutely sure that God's loving-kindness is wrapped up at the innermost heart of all His ordained and all His permitted providences!—ALEXANDER WHYTE.

The Last Rites for Dr. Strong

The account of the death of Dr. A. H. Strong, a sketch of his life, and an appreciation of him, appeared in THE BAPTIST of Dec. 10. The following items will be of further interest.

Dr. Strong's death occurred on Nov. 29 at Pasadena, Cal. Before Mrs. Strong started for Rochester with the body, a service conducted by the pastor, Dr. John M. Dean, was held in the First Church of Pasadena. An address was given by Dr. J. Whitcomb Brougher of Los Angeles, a former student of Dr. Strong's, and a prayer was offered by Dr. James A. Francis, a friend of many years. Owing to storms in the Southwest, the eastward journey was delayed several hours. Dr. John H. Strong met the party at Kansas City and they all reached Chicago Sunday afternoon. Several friends met them and relays of students from the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary acted as honorary guard while the body was in the city. Less than a month before, Dr. Strong had given his great valedictory to this seminary in a series of lectures, and on the day after his death, a memorial service had been held there.

The funeral party reached Rochester Monday morning, Dec. 5. The body lay in state in Alvah Strong Hall, guarded by students of the Rochester Seminary until the time for the afternoon service which was held in the First Church, for four generations the church home of the Strong's. His parents, his children, and his grandchildren have all been worshippers with this people. The large building was filled. After the family had been given their seats, the procession, headed by Pres. Clarence A. Barbour of Rochester Theological Seminary, and including the speakers, the honorary bearers, representatives of various bodies, friends, and the student body of Rochester Theological Seminary, entered the church. While doing so, Dr. Barbour read selections from the Scriptures, and Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar." Dr. James M. Dickinson, former pastor of First Church, read the Scriptures, and Dr. J. W. A. Stewart, another former pastor, who for years had been a co-worker of Dr. Strong's and the dean of the seminary offered on earnest prayer. The addresses were given by Dr. Barbour, Pres. Rush Rhee of the University of Rochester, and Dr. W. R. Taylor of the Brick Presbyterian Church. While they emphasized his scholarship, his writings, his industry, his hospitality, his leadership and the many things that inevitably come before the minds of those who knew Dr. Strong, they stressed especially his Christ-centered life, and the fact that he was a man of God. The only music was the organ and the singing of two hymns, one of which, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," was peculiarly typical of Dr. Strong's messages. In front of the pulpit stand, and above the casket, there was a large floral cross which was another fitting emblem of his ministry. His funeral was not mournful, but rather partook of the nature of a coronation. It was a celebration of the home-going after a well-rounded life, and everything could be summed up in the words of John, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them."

The final words were spoken by Drs. Dickinson and Stewart at the Mouth Hope Cemetery and Dr. Strong's body now reposes in the southern part of the city in which he was born and where he spent the greater part of his Christ-united life.

Fresh from the Field

Rev. Charles A. Carman has accepted a call to the First Church of Grinnell, Iowa, resigning his pastorate of the First Church of Shenandoah, Iowa, where he has been pastor for five years. The city of Grinnell is the seat of Grinnell College, the oldest educational institution west of the Mississippi, and one of the outstanding colleges of the country. There are many Baptist students enrolled there. Mr. Carman is specially qualified by education and previous experience for a college field such as Grinnell. He is a graduate of Denison University and of Newton Theological Seminary, and an M. A. of Brown University. His first pastorate was associated with the State Normal School of Nebraska, where he had noteworthy success with the student work. He is also one of the leaders in the activities of the daily vacation Bible schools in Iowa and in the summer of 1920 had charge for the International Sunday School Association of its vacation schools in Denver. He served overseas as chaplain and first lieutenant. He is the president of the Iowa Pastors Association.

Evangelist John M. Linden, Madison, Wis., has held eleven campaigns during 1921, closing the year in meetings at Centerville, Iowa, and Nebraska City, Neb. He opens the new year in Indiana at Owensville and Mentone.

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell of the Labrador Mission has arrived in Boston to spend the Christmas holidays. He returns in his hospital ship "Strathcona" after six months' service visiting every part of the Labrador coast and both shores of the northern peninsula of Newfoundland, ministering to the sick and destitute. The endowment campaign in behalf of the work in Labrador, in the interest of which Dr. Grenfell visited Boston last winter, has met with good response from the public, but the goal of $1,500,000 is still distant. After Christmas, Dr. Grenfell plans a trip to several cities in New York State and the Middle West which he was unable to visit last year.

A farewell reception was held in the Bellevue Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., on Wednesday evening, Dec. 7, in honor of Rev. and Mrs. Zo Brown who, with their two children, left New York on Dec. 15 to resume their work in India. Mr. Brown gave a stereopticon lecture describing his work in Kharagpur, his former station, and also showing scenes in Jamshedpur. "The Pittsburgh of India," where he and Mrs. Brown will be located upon their return. They were presented by the women's society of the church with $100 and with $90 from the B. Y. P. U. to help in their work of establishing a church in Jamshedpur.

Twelve years ago in a crisis of Baptist church work in Maryland, Dr. A. J. Fristoe of Virginia was secured as state evangelist. Through the generosity of a layman, the late Samuel G. B. Cook, who pledged $2,000 a year for five years towards Dr. Fristoe's salary and continued the same sum up to the time of his death, this important appointment was made. Dr. Fristoe much more than realized the hopes placed in him. His wise and stimulating labors have virtually changed the whole Baptist outlook in Maryland. In a state where our cause was far outdistanced by other denominations, Dr. Fristoe has won 5,000 converts, of whom five have entered the ministry at home, while the same number have gone to China as missionaries. Numbers of new fields have been opened and many old fields helped to independence and settled growth. Dr. Fristoe has recently resigned his position and will enter upon general evangelistic work among both Northern and Southern churches. It is understood that he will devote himself to helping individual churches. All who know of the great things he has done in the difficult field where he has labored unite in commending Dr. Fristoe to our pastors.

Prof. Erdmann Smith of William Jewell College supplied the pulpit of the Calvary Church, Kansas City, Mo., on Dec. 11 and will continue to do so through December.

Dr. O. S. C. Wallace concluded his ministry at Westmount, Montreal, on Nov. 27 and left on the following Wednesday evening for Baltimore. The farewells were numerous as was befitting a ministry like his which has reached so many people. During the more than eight years at Westmount 590 people have been received into fellowship, 299 of them by baptism. Among the tokens of appreciation given Dr. Wallace was a basket of sixty-five roses in honor of his birthday and the sum of $500 in money.

The First Church, Greenfield, Ohio, has called a council to meet at 2 p. m. on Dec. 28 to consider the ordination of Benj. D. Proffo, who is a junior of Colgate Seminary and a graduate of the Bible Institute, Pittsburgh. Dr. Hofmeister ministers to this church.

Rev. W. A. Stanton, pastor of the Shady Avenue Church, Pittsburgh, from 1890 to 1912, and who followed that with a pastorate of eight years with the First Church, Hightstown, N. J., became on Dec. 1 the executive secretary of the Baptist Orphanage and Home Society of Western Pennsylvania with headquarters in Pittsburgh. The institution has twelve acres of ground with two buildings, one for the aged and one for the orphans, beautifully located among the south hills of the city.

Self or Sacrifice

"WE FACE the tragedy of a dying world, and the peril of a nation, rich beyond all compare, called of God to service, and hesitating in her choice between a life of selfish indulgence and a life of sacrificial endeavor. This constitutes an emergency unparalleled in all the Christian centuries."

This notice is taken from the annual report of one of the large foreign missionary societies at a time when their contributions were in no wise large enough to meet the calls which they were receiving for immediate help. The same condition faces every Baptist missionary agency at the present time.

Stewardship is not a financier for every ill or evil that a church may face but neither a Christian nor a Christian church can hope to meet the situation which now confronts it and to measure up to the opportunities that are now open without giving consideration to the question of personal stewardship. This involves more than a man and his money but it also involves his money.

Another Page for Young People

WITH the coming of the great forward movements of the denomination, there has come an increased interest in, as well as a realization of the importance of, the young people. Throughout the whole country there is a growing interest on the part of young people themselves as to the importance of the local church as well as the world-wide enterprises of the denomination. This new interest has insistently clamored for expression through the denominational journals. It is with great pleasure, therefore, that we announce completion of arrangements with the management of "THE BAPTIST" whereby an additional page will be given over to the young people, with the second issue in January, 1922.

The present Young People's Page will be continued, with the possible inclusion of material for intermediate societies. The second page will carry the very latest news from the field of young people's society methods; ways of working; suggestive programs for monthly socials; assembly and convention news; organized class activities; field activities, etc.

All young people's organizations are requested to appoint a strong publicity committee to cooperate with us in making this the greatest and newest young people's page in existence.

Look out for the extra page on Jan. 14, 1922.
JAMES ASA WHITE, General Secretary.

He has resigned his office there to take effect Dec. 31 and will travel with Mrs. Stanton for some time, taking a much needed rest. He expects to make his future home in Southern California.

The outstanding feature of the life of Temple Church, Los Angeles, Cal., Rev. J. Whitcomb Brougher, pastor, is the campaign for 100 men in the Temple Men's Bible Class. This campaign started the last Sunday in October when the class had a total enrollment of eighty-one. These were divided into three teams of twenty-one each, with Walter T. Moore, William Handy and James Edmunds as captains. Every Sunday since then has seen a substantial increase, the enrollment on Dec. 11 reaching 812. The class expects to attain complete victory by Jan. 1, on which date the members propose to start a new campaign to secure an actual attendance of 1000 by May 1. Mr. Chas. J. Hall, Chautauqua lecturer and seasoned campaigner in the movement which made America dry is the inspiring teacher of the class. The average attendance of the Temple Sunday school is now well beyond the 2000 mark.

Remember Russia

The European Relief Warehouse at 348 East 23rd Street, New York City, is still open to receive and bale supplies of clothing, shoes, blankets and soap for shipment to Russia through the American Relief Administration, Mr. Herbert Hoover, chairman. Churches and individuals, which have been late in sending in their gifts, should ship them not later than Jan. 1, so as to make sure of having them reach New York before the warehouse is closed. Everything intended for shipment to Russia should be received at New York not later than Jan. 15. Soon after that date the warehouse will be closed. The reports from Russia indicate that it would be impossible to do too much to meet the needs of the suffering people of that country.

Commoners Understand It

"Since when does a fact have to become dignified to be true? Why masquerade truth under a black funereal cloak? Why not say what you have got to say in language that we commoners can understand? I'm for you." C. H. Hamilton, Detroit, Mich. In this Kollum we want to say things so that everybody will understand. THE BAPTIST belongs to the Baptists and it's mighty bad business for Baptists to pick their own pockets. Your failure to pay promptly your subscription when due tends to put you into the class of denominational highway men. Baptists seem to sense this situation for our collections are great.

Killam's Kollum

Makes Some Men Uncomfortable

"Keep up Killam's Kollum. It made me uncomfortable each week because I was in arrears. It performs a good work and can afford to be lacking in proper dignity." E. F. Hallock, Pittsburg, Kan. Mr. Hallock sent with the above a sure cure for that "uncomfortable" feeling. Kind reader, how do you feel when you look at your date label? You need not feel ashamed or uncomfortable long. A check will bring joy to thee and me.

357—326—31

These are not foot ball signals. The first means that 357 letters and postcards were received in the referendum. The second tells the number of votes to keep the Kollum and the 31 represent those who think the Kollum should be killed or made to live more worthily. These letters represent more than 357 votes for some carried the names of several individuals, families, Sunday-school classes, young people's societies, woman's circles, etc. We had no way of counting these votes accurately so we have counted each letter as one vote. This seemed to us a fair method especially since no vote against the Kollum represented more than one person. We have had the surprise of our life. We should like to print the names of those who have voted. You would recognize at once the names of college presidents, professors in our schools, seminaries, high schools and business colleges, pastors, general workers. The greater number, however, are from our laymen and young people. If these names were before you it would be clear that the votes represent fairly our constituency. THE BAPTIST belongs to the Baptists. In this referendum 357 votes were cast, 326 of which favor the continuance of the publisher's page. Thank you one and all. We found ourselves in accord with most of those who wanted the Kollum killed. They are right. It is undignified, unscholarly, and will never be classed with the literary productions of our denomination. Crooked spelling bothers a number but sad to say about forty of the votes were afflicted with the "k" habit. Poor humans, we make so many mistakes that even these become a habit with most of us.

The Washington Conference—One of History's High Hours

By WILLIAM AXLING

The Fourth Act

TO EVERY friend of humanity and lover of peace Dec. 10, 1921, will stand out as a red letter day. In the years yet unborn it will mark a milestone along the path of peace. The future historian will place this day side by side with Nov. 11—Armistice Day.

The setting of the fourth plenary session was full of the dramatic. A lull had come in the work of this highly sped-up Conference. The press and the people were eagerly waiting for Japan's answer to Secretary Hughes' proposals on naval limitation. Even among the delegates and advisors there were evidences of restiveness. The air was full of rumors and counter rumors.

On the morning of Dec. 10 Washington awoke and found that overnight Secretary Hughes had sprung another surprise by suddenly calling a plenary session. Holders of the precious little cardboard which admits them to these sessions rushed to Continental Hall. Inside the hall the atmosphere was electric with expectation. Even the delegates were on hand long before the appointed hour. Handshaking, animated conversation, laughter and cordial good fellowship gave to the gathering the appearance of an international levee.

China's Charter

Secretary Hughes opened the session by laying before the Conference the four big principles, drawn up by Mr. Root, pledging the powers represented to respect the sovereignty, independence and administrative integrity of China, and to observe among themselves the policy of fair and equal opportunities throughout that nation.

The spokesmen of the different delegations arose in order and cast the vote of their nation in favor of this new charter of rights for China. It was a climactic moment when Secretary Hughes turned to the Chinese delegation and invited China's assent to these principles. Thus was relegated to a day that is past, the age-long habit on the part of the powers, of making international agreements concerning China without consulting China herself or seeking her approval.

Then in quick succession Secretary Hughes brought before the Conference the resolutions passed by the far eastern committee growing out of the application of these principles to a portion of China's ten specific demands. In each case China threw her vote with the rest of the nations represented.

A Peace-Pact for the Pacific

Senator Lodge's introduction to the Conference was the thrill-time of the session. He was greeted by protracted applause which was followed by a death-like silence. Then, as those present listened with bated breath, Senator Lodge read the draft of a peace pact for the Pacific between America, England, France and Japan.

This four-power treaty pledges these nations "to respect their insular possessions and dominions in the region of the Pacific, and if any controversy should arise as to such rights, all the parties shall be invited to a joint conference looking to an adjustment. They agree to take similar action in cases of aggression by any other power upon these insular possessions or dominions. The agreement is to remain in force for ten years." When ratified by each of the four contracting powers the Anglo-Japanese treaty shall automatically terminate.

This is one of the most potent international agreements for peace ever drafted. The Pacific was fast coming to be a pregnant breeding place for misunderstanding and for war. This pact virtually removes the possibility of war from this dangerous section for the next decade, and establishes peace in one of the vastest regions of the world.

This pact is not offensive in motive nor aggressive in outlook. Conquest and aggrandizement are entirely foreign to its words and spirit. It is a "guaranty of stabilization and non-aggression."

Force has no place in it. It does not look to guns and ships for enforcement but to the "honest intentions and good faith" of the four nations concerned. It stands not on man-force but on moral force. It substitutes friendly conference for brutal force in the settling of problems between these four powers.

Between America and England, it removes the Anglo-Japanese alliance which of late years has stood as a barrier between these two nations, and opens the way for complete fusion of spirit and purpose in the Far East of the two chief branches of the English-speaking world.

Between America and Japan it sweeps away apprehensions on both sides of the Pacific and makes it possible for these two nations to wipe differences off of the slate and come to an understanding on such questions as the 5-5-3 ratio, naval bases and fortifications in the Pacific, China, the Asiatic mainland and other matters that during the past years have been the source of misunderstanding and ill-feeling.

More than that, it is big with promise for the future of international relations. The example set by these four nations will prove contagious. Other nations will take up the challenge. Eventually they will be drawn into it and there will come world-wide co-operation in the building of a world where peace and good-will and brotherhood shall prevail.

It breaks down America's self-centered, complaisant isolation and brings her out once more into co-operative relations with a wasted, weary world, waiting for her leadership and succor. It recovers for America her place among the nations where her words will be heard and heeded and her influence will be felt.

In words that glowed with passion and earnestness, the leaders of the four delegations directly concerned, hailed the birth of this pact and pledged their nations to its faithful fulfillment.

Speaking for America, Senator Lodge said: "The surest way to prevent war is to remove the cause of war. This is an attempt to remove the cause of war over a great area of the globe's surface by the reliance upon the good faith and honest intentions of the nations which sign the treaty, solving all differences through the processes of diplomacy and joint consideration and conciliation."

Mr. Balfour, speaking in behalf of the British delegation said: "Deep is my satisfaction when I see the four great powers putting their names to a treaty which for all times will lead to peace in the territory where the treaty breathes."

Mr. Viviani, in behalf of the French delegation said: "Thanks to those who have worked so cordially, so hard, this conference has been a success and the people of mankind at last can believe in the progress of civilization. France will assume all the obligations that fall upon her in this treaty."

Representing Japan, Prince Tokugawa said: "All Japan will approve the consummation of this work and will rejoice in this pledge of peace upon the Pacific Ocean."

Then Senator Schanzer for Italy, Mr. Von Karnbeck for Holland, Minister Sze for China, Baron de Cartier for Belgium and Viscount d'Alte for Portugal, joined in the chorus of rejoicing and vowed the sympathetic co-operation of their respective nations.

Secretary Hughes summed up the session's work in the following words: "We have been dealing with a very simple paper. Probably you would not be able to find an international document couched in more simple or briefer terms, but we are again reminded that the great things are the simple ones. I firmly believe that when this agreement takes effect, we shall have gone further in the direction of securing an enduring peace, than anything that has yet been done."

But let us stop here and shed one tear. The professional war-with-Japan agitators are facing a fearful fate—ten long years without a job. And those who have been sitting in the scorners' seat, cynically trying to discredit the Conference's work are covered with consternation and confusion.

Some Side-Lights

This conference is characterized by a minimum of red tape and a maximum of purpose to accomplish results. The four-power peace pact was not on the agenda. It was, however, germane to the Conference's great goal and so was given the right of way.

Here frankness and straightforwardness are outwitting subterfuges and evasions. Openness and publicity have put intrigue and secrecy to flight.

People's diplomacy has come. Measures many have been adopted to keep the world-public informed of every outstanding move and feature of the Conference and in more than any other international gathering public opinion is shaping the work which is being done.

Here is fulfilled the dream of a "parliament of man." This is the sensation which sweeps across one's soul as he watches statesmen, diplomats, advisors, experts and leaders of world renown earnestly tackling together the task of ushering in an age of world peace.

The conscience of the world is reasserting itself. The souls of nations are in the day of their re-birth. International justice and righteousness are no longer empty terms but vital living realities. God is still on the throne. Humanity is still the object of His love and the world is still the arena of his wonder working.

Christ and the Crisis

ANGELS sang over Bethlehem; they ministered in the desert; they wept over Calvary; they shone resplendent and triumphant by the empty tomb.

Christmas is the beginning of which Calvary and the resurrection and a redeemed humanity are the conclusion.

The manger in Bethlehem is the symbol to men that God's struggle for the kingdom of love on earth has begun, not to be abandoned until its perfect end has been attained.

The child is the center of the human home. Without him the world would be a sad and piteous place. It is he who is the unwitting foe of greed and selfishness. And God, when he wished men to lift their eyes to the heavens, placed a child in their midst. Yet a child is a beginning and not an end. A child is adorable but it is not a child-Christ the world adores. The Christ to whom men turn is he in whose person the loving God came among his children that they might be saved from their sins.

Humanity is old in wretchedness and woe. The world has ever been aged under its burden of care. It has always been true that the innocent suffered for the guilty. But it is a glorious thing that always men have been willing to die to save others. And it is wonderful beyond thought that the Incomparable One should be willing to enter into human wretchedness and to die in order that God's struggling children might find the way to life.

Christmas is the visible sign that at length a redeeming God is in the world and that every entrenched wrong, that cruelty and injustice and dishonor, must tilt with him before they can claim victory. Men are no longer lifting blind hands into the darkness but are touching hands in the light with a God who tabernacles in human flesh, to whom no human problem is foreign and who fights side by side with men the battles they have to face.

Ancient wrong yet lifts its head. Evil has not finally been overthrown. But at this Christmas time the vision of peace stands before men as it has not since the armistice, even though they know that old wars may be followed by new. For they know also that whenever men are willing to walk the way of love and of sacrifice, there is the promise of the ending of the kingdom of darkness.

Wherever men and women are stirred to live truly, unselfishly, sacrificially, there the Christ is entering in, waiting only for his complete triumph until men shall pray him, "Cast out our sin and enter in; be born in us today."

NORTHERN Baptists are talking about a crisis. And well they may. The shadow of possible defeat has rested upon them. They are wondering if there is a way out. Bethlehem—and Calvary—have the answer. The Son of man humbled himself and was found in fashion as a man and, being so, was obedient even unto the death of the cross.

The disciple shall not be above his Lord. The valley of humiliation stands in the way to the beautiful city. Sacrificial love is the price of spiritual victory. If men and women are ready to follow in the footsteps of Jesus all the way from Bethlehem to Calvary, nothing shall be impossible to them.

Our fathers climbed the steep ascent of heaven through peril, toil and pain; shall their children follow their footsteps?

The child of Bethlehem calls us to an advancing love; the Christ of Calvary summons us to self-sacrificing giving; the risen Lord comes into view from that hill-top alone.

If we will now with one accord go to Bethlehem and there leave our treasures, all will be well. Our crisis will end in triumph. And this will be in our own lives, in our homes and in our churches one of the happiest Christmases we have ever known.

A BOOK OF SPIRITUAL BLESSING

A note from Dr. Frederick L. Anderson says: "I have this hour finished a book which has powerfully impressed me and which, I am sure, will be full of blessing to all who read it. It is an old book which I ought to have read long ago, Uncle John Vassar, published by our own Publication Society. Uncle John was a tireless personal evangelist, full of the Holy Spirit and of power, the most laborious and the most useful layman of his age. He had the courage of faith and the wisdom of love. The book is one of the most inspirational and soul quickening of spiritual biographies. The preface by Dr. A. J. Gordon is itself well worth the price of the book. Spurgeon said of it: 'Few books which have crossed the Atlantic will command a larger number of grateful and admiring readers.' I wish that every pastor and every Christian worker could nourish his soul with this wonderful story of apostolic zeal." A popular edition of such a book which could be put into the hands of all our pastors would be a good thing.

JAPANESE WHO ARE GOOD AMERICANS

Members of the Society of Americans of Japanese Ancestry in the Hawaiian Islands are indignant over assertions made by publicists that their race is unassimilable and incapable of assuming the responsibilities of American citizenship. They point to the record made by those of their number who served in the American army during the war and call attention also to the pledge which every member on admittance to the society has sworn to fulfill. It reads:

"I, realizing my obligations to America, the land of my birth, and appreciating the privileges of American citizenship and desiring publicly to declare my undivided and whole-hearted allegiance to the United States of America and her government, and to renounce publicly any allegiance to Japan, do now solemnly swear that I will uphold the constitution of the United States of America and respect her flag, will in all cases prefer America to Japan, will countenance no dual citizenship and will do all in my power to make the American citizens of Japanese ancestry 100 per cent Americans"

There are members of other national groups who might profitably take such a pledge and then heartily keep it.

YANKEE EFFICIENCY IN MOSCOW

If there is any agency through which Americans working abroad can please their compatriots in these days it is the American relief organization. Pleasure must be taken therefore in the reports coming from Moscow of the speed which the relief workers in Moscow transformed the big building turned over to them as headquarters into attractive and usable offices from which the work of relief can be carried on most expeditiously. An interesting sidelight on conditions is found in the statement that among the Russian girls applying for jobs were many former princesses.

"We had a little trouble breaking in the princesses," said one of the department heads, who was an officer of the famous Irish regiment, the "Fighting Fifty-seventh." "A lot of them seemed to come with the idea in their heads of capturing an American husband and ending their poverty. We had to teach them that they were expected to work. Now they are getting the right idea. But for efficiency I wouldn't trade one American girl for a dozen beautiful Russian countesses."

To demonstrate efficiency in goodwill means much more in Russia just now than efficiency in either warfare or business. God is good to American Christians in giving them a part in such service.

YAP PACT FAVORS SCHOOLS

One of the results of the Versailles treaty, as applied to the island of Yap has been the practical closing of missionary schools as fast as Japanese government schools could be opened. The new agreement entered into between the United States and Japan says, "Missionaries shall be free to open schools throughout the territory," a sentence which probably means life to more than one hundred schools in the scattered Japanese mandate. The red tape which has made it practically impossible for missionaries or any other persons, except Japanese to travel between the different groups of islands is also removed. Who would not favor revision when such results can be obtained?

THE "EXTRA" DEMANDED OF THE CHURCHES

To the opening session of the annual meeting of the Federal Council of churches, held in Chicago on Dec. 14, Arthur J. Balfour, head of the British delegation at the disarmament conference, sent this message: "I regret the necessity that keeps me in Washington because I hold the work of the disarmament conference intimately bound up with the work of the churches. It is not that I desire to see the churches take any corporate share in current political controversy; for such intervention has often injured religion, but barely advantaged politics. The churches have a higher mission; for it is their supreme duty to raise the ideals of the community which they serve and create the atmosphere in which these ideals can flourish. It would be vain for statesman to diminish armaments and contrive treaties of conciliation in a world determined to fight. More is required and that 'more' is what the churches must help to provide."

In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus demanded of his followers an "extra" goodness. Balfour asks of the churches an "extra" something which can come into society and into statesmanship through no other channels.

INDIA LIKES PROHIBITION

Reports from India are to the effect that William E. Johnson, American prohibition leader, has had an enthusiastic reception in India. Representatives of all groups and religions seem equally friendly. He has throughout taken the attitude that he was not there to give them advice, but merely to report, at the invitation of Indians, on the progress and success of prohibition in the United States. He has a great theme. National prohibition was once laughed at; world prohibition is now getting serious consideration from men who are interested in the liquor business and are fearful of events.

"The Angel Song the Music of the World"

By CHARLES T. HOLMAN

Luke 2:14, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill." Ephesians 2:4, "For He is our peace."

WE are catching anew the wondrous strains of that angel song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, goodwill among men," and find it still the inspiration and music of the world. Almost it had been drowned by the terrific roar of the guns, the clash of swords, the shriek of shells, and the hoarse cries of bitter hate. But as the glory and the music burst through the cloud-rifts over Bethlehem, so again it bursts through the black clouds of fratricidal strife, and heaven bends near to earth this blessed Christmas season.

The Music Still Jangled

It is twenty centuries since the startled shepherds heard the song that first Christmas night. Twenty long centuries, and the song has not yet found fulfilment; the music is still jangled, hearts are heavy, and eyes tear-stained. The bitter and hateful strife of man against his fellow, of class against class, and nation against nation, still goes on. In the simple, personal relationships of every-day life there is much pettiness and mean self-seeking; in the field of industry, capital and labor are at war; and in international affairs we are slowly and with infinite pains crawling up out of the abyssal horror into which our dearly achieved civilization fell in 1914. Three years ago the armistice was signed, but the wild, agonized cry of the war-sufferer still rends the air. Even in our favored country military hospitals are crowded and unemployment is widespread, Russia is racked with delirium and starvation, southeastern Europe hangs perilously and feebly on the brink of utmost disaster, Armenia is nailed to a cross of woe, and the blood-drenched earth counts her wounds. Nearly 20,000,000 of the best and bravest of her youth lie in shallow graves or their bodies have disintegrated in the sunshine and storm, and nearly 90,000,000 who might have been living today are not. Our painfully earned and carefully gathered treasure has been dissipated; nations are on the verge of bankruptcy or entirely over the brink, and the almost despairing cry goes up, "How long, O Lord! How long!"

But though torn, broken, and bleeding from many wounds, the paralyzing fear creeps over us that the end is not yet. There are those who still talk glibly of "the next war." But no one with human feelings can contemplate the possibility of the next war without standing aghast at the horrors which, if it does come, it certainly will bring. For, beyond doubt, there will be not only the terrors with which the world became so unhappily familiar during the last war—the lurking submarine watching for its prey in the darkness of night at sea, the air-raid over the defenceless cities with its screeching bombs and baby-murders, the blockade with its slow starvation of millions, and the thousand other piled-up forms of hideousness—not only these, but new forms of frightfulness which are now in preparation or fully prepared.

Paralyzing Fear of War

There will be gas so deadly that military authorities are certain that they will be able to wipe out every vestige of life in any of the world's great capitals in a few hours; there will be bomb-carrying planes controlled by wireless, thus providing the equivalent of guns of hitherto unimagined range and power; it is almost certain that bacilli will be used to spread horrible plagues and diseases everywhere throughout enemy soldier and civilian populations, and what other secret terrors the laboratories of Europe, America and Asia hold, who can tell? And, further, the next war will see the complete realization of that which the last war initiated, the conscription of the entire population, men, women, and children, and of all material resources for the tasks of war. All this means that the next war will bring such deterioration of human stock, such overburdening with debt of a world already staggering feebly beneath a load scarcely to be borne, such disrupting of the already terribly disordered industrial organization, such violent rending by poisonous propaganda of the sense of brotherhood which is the spiritual foundation upon which alone the superstructure of human well-being can be built, as to bring before our eyes a spectre that will not down, the imminent danger of reversion to barbarism by the human family!

Is it any wonder that the icy hand of fear—fear not for himself but for the race—clutches at the bravest heart! The words of Gen. Pershing ought to give pause to the wildest swashbuckler, "Unless some move is made we may well ask ourselves whether we are doomed to go headlong down through destructive war and darkness into barbarism." There are those who seriously ask if we are not drawing near to the end of our western civilization, if we have not raised up a monster that will slay us. Is the fate of other mighty peoples now swiftly and surely overtaking us? Wander today across Egypt and you will see just peeping above the desert sands the ruins of a civilization as proud and powerful in its day as in our own! And excavators in many lands bring to light relics of other equally mighty and even more ancient civilizations; now they are gone, with all their pomp and glory of war, with all their pride and folly and sin! Our sobered hearts may well echo Kipling's words:

"Far-called our navies melt away—
On dune and headland sink the fire—
Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
Judge of the Nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!"

For heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tube and iron shard—
All valiant dust that builds on dust,
And guarding calls not Thee to guard;
For frantic boast and foolish word,
Thy mercy on Thy people, Lord!"

An Empty Dream, Then?

What does it mean? Are we to believe that the failure of twenty centuries culminating in the black tragedy of 1914, and the grim outlook for the future, indicate that the angel song was only an empty dream? Is the hope of the triumph of love and the reign of the Prince of Peace too beautiful and good to find fulfilment in our rude world? Is the heavenly music, though once heard, too refined to be listened to by the sons of men? No! It is this rather. We have not listened to its full-toned harmonies. Sweet strains of it, snatches of melody of wondrous beauty, we have caught; but the noises of our strife, or our poor appreciations, have kept from our ears the sweep and range and blending harmonies of that heavenly chorus. We have heard, perhaps, the opening "Glory to God!" but have missed the closing "Peace on earth, good-will among men!" And religion has become a thing apart, an exercise of the soul empty of service to a suffering world. In such a mood men have desired to build tabernacles on some glorious mount of transfiguration, and there abide, neglecting the agonized call to the task in the valley. They have retired to lonely haunts and hermit lives in order that they might make the Unseen Presence a living reality in their souls, while the strifes, and hatreds, and oppressions of men called in vain for the ministry of God's children, His peacemakers. Religion for them has become a thing of prayer and holy desire with no day's labor in the scorching field of the world's life. Others have heard only the "Peace on earth, good-will among men," and religion has become a concern for the physical and material comfort and well-being of humankind, with no aspiration toward God and the enrichment of life which only He can bring. It has been a visiting of the fatherless and the widow in their affliction, but without thought of him who is the Father of the fatherless and the husband of the widow. It has sought to bring peace on earth by the adjustment of relations between nations, by developing understandings, and counseling good-will, but without the compulsion of the divine motive. There can be no lasting good-will among men which does not give glory to God. We must attune our ears to the full-toned harmony of the angel song before its message can find fulfilment.

Song is Heard Again

But that angel song is indeed being heard again. The heavenly choir is breaking through our lowering skies; on our ears there sounds a song sweeter than earthly music; and, as never before, we are learning to interpret that swelling chorus. "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good-will!" Men of all classes and races find stirring within them the Christmas hope; more widely than ever are men coming to believe in the supremacy of the Christian motive—love! And the war-weary world strains its tear-dimmed eyes, and its cannon-deafened ears, to see the glory and to hear the song!

Is it not just this hope and faith, this heart-awakening, that is the compelling power behind the Washington Conference? It is not so much the fear of bankruptcy, nor even the dread prospect of unprecedented human sacrifice, the prospect of a world drenched to saturation in its own blood, should another war come, that is the driving force

In the Light of Bethlehem's Star

BY MRS. E. C. CRONK.

Do you sigh to have been with the shepherds on that first Christmas night? Do you wish your eyes might have seen the glory light of Bethlehem's star? Do you think with wondering pity of the keeper of that inn, which had "no room" for the Great Guest it might have entertained?

Do you wish you might have had the opportunity to publish throughout sleeping, uncomprehending Bethlehem, the glad tidings of great joy?

Do you covet the opportunity of the Wise Men, privileged to lay gold, frankincense and myrrh, right at the feet of the infant Jesus?

* * * *

Know, then, that no shepherd of Bethlehem's plain ever witnessed the Christmas vision which might be yours;

That the brightness of Bethlehem's star shines greater now by two thousand years of glory;

That your own heart is in danger, in its empty fullness of things, of offering "no room" to the Great Guest, who could dwell therein;

That, alongside Bethlehem, lies a world in darkness, a thousand millions of souls who have never seen the light of the star, nor heard the message of the angels;

That the Saviour hath more need today, than then, of your gold, and frankincense and myrrh.

Look into your heart this day and see that He is enthroned there over all. Then look out with Him upon the world of men, full of suffering and sin, crying out for help and love and light and catch the commission, which comes to you in the angel's message, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."

deep down in the hearts of men back of the Conference. Rather it is, surely, the positive desire to achieve brotherhood, to bring in the era of cooperative good-will, to build a world in which men shall have beaten their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks, and shall have turned the talents and strength hitherto devoted to war to the constructive tasks of peace, and shall have learned to live together as a great family in the presence of the Father-God of all. And all of this under the constraining of the love of God which passeth knowledge.

And it is He, and He only, who came from the highest to our earth, and was born on Christmas day, that can bring this thing to pass. "Peace on earth" sang the angels. "He is our peace, who hath made one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition" said the apostle. It is not political programs, nor the inter-relations of finance, nor treaties, nor alliances, nor any schemes for associations or leagues of nations, that will really determine the issues of international life, of peace and war. These, or some of them, will be absolutely necessary as the agencies of operation. But if the effort is made to make them stand alone they will fall to the ground. Something much more fundamental must come first as the spiritual bearer of the whole process. We must have the method and the mind of Christ. It will only be by making the law of Christ the law of life, the nature of Christ the nature of the men and women of our world, that we shall attain unto that ideal which has been envisaged by the seer, is the hope of the practical worker, and shall be the fulfilment of the angel song. He, and He alone, is our peace, who hath made one, French and German, Briton and Russian, American and Japanese, and hath broken down the middle wall of prejudice, suspicion, bitterness, and fear, between us.

God's Glory Lights Sky

This is a day to thank God for. Dark as have been the skies the light of God's glory is breaking through; jangled, clamorous, hateful, as have been the wild noises that have filled the earth and are not yet silenced, the music of angel choirs is heard far-off and heavenly sweet. May He who is our peace be so born in us today—born in the hearts of men and nations—that our lives, in the secret place of thought, motive and desire, and in the open street of business and politics, shall become true-toned notes of that great symphony when the angel song shall become the music of the world, and this redeemed and reconciled earth shall become a fit habitation for Him who was born on Christmas Day, and whose coming the heavenly choirs announced with their chorus, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will among men!"

A Primer of Theology

VIII. THREE IMPUTATIONS

I HAVE reserved until now my treatment of what I regard as the point in theology which most needs explanation, and which I conceive that I have been the first to explain. My explanation is so bound up with my personal experience, that I could not easily give it without mention of the steps by which I reached it. I have hope that, as I tell of my own way of coming to the knowledge of the truth, others may be led to follow me.

Three imputations are declared in Scripture as essential to evangelical doctrine. They are, first, the imputation of Adam's sin to the whole human race; second, the imputation of all human sin to Christ; and, third, the imputation of Christ's merits and righteousness to the believer. Each one of these imputations seems at first sight to involve a sort of legal fiction—the crediting to one party of what belongs exclusively to another, an arbitrary treatment of wholly moral issues, an external transfer, either of guilt or of righteousness. When the federal theology explained all this upon the ground of God's covenant with Adam and with Christ, it seemed to involve God in a merely forensic process, to make him a God of expedients, to reduce divine justice to bookkeeping, to ignore all truth and reality in God. I was brought up in that system of thought. The preaching to which I listened when a child, and the instruction of the theological seminary which I afterward received, emphasized the doctrine of the covenant, and answered objections by referring the objector to the unsearchable wisdom or sovereignty of God.

My conversion did not awaken doubts, since it ignored all doctrine, except the doctrines of sin and salvation. If ever there was a purely Arminian or Pelagian Conversion, mine was such an one. I was one of a rather brilliant and hilarious set of students at Yale. We were not openly vicious but we were selfishly ambitious, and on the verge of a moral precipice. The timely word of a classmate set me thinking. I saw that I must change or die. During a college vacation, at my own home, I found myself at a revival meeting, under the eagle eye of Charles G. Finney, the evangelist. He seemed to speak directly to me, when he said: "If there is any one here who sees that he ought to forsake his sins and to serve God, let him rise and go into the inquiry room, and some one will tell him what to do." So I arose and went out. A minister of the gospel met me, and asked me if I would begin from that hour to serve God, looking to him to show me the way. After much hesitation, I told him that I would, and I went home in the dark, thinking all the way that I was very foolish, yet determined to begin a new life from that day. I began to read my Bible; I began to pray. But though I sought God, I did not find him until, some weeks after returning to college, bowed down with a new sense of sin and need, I read the verse in 2 Cor. 6:17, 18 "Wherefore come ye out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father to you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty". Then I said to myself: "That is I; God is my father and friend." And for the first time in my life I felt that there was a tie that bound me to God. I looked out through the elms to the stars that shone that evening, and I knew that when those stars should grow pale and die, the eternal God would be my refuge, and underneath me would be the everlasting arms.

I have narrated this experience not as cause of self-gratulation, but to show how meagre an apprehension of truth may consist with a real turning to God. For if ever I was converted, that decision marked my conversion. The peculiarity of it was, that in it I had absolutely no sense that the change in me was in any way due to the influence of the Holy Spirit, or had been made possible by the work of Christ. Except for the fact that I had a sort of traditional and theoretical belief in these things, in the background of my consciousness, my conversion might have been a purely Unitarian or agnostic reliance upon the love and truth of God. This fact makes me tolerant of Unitarian Christianity, though I now recognize that as an infantile faith, like that of Peter, James and John on the banks of the Jordan, when they followed Jesus, without knowing anything about his deity or his atonement. But the faith of my conversion did not suffice for my subsequent life and ministry, and I must tell of a second stage in my experience. I entered the theological seminary and there encountered the full strain upon my faith in the federal theology. I was docile and determined to believe but I suspended judgment, and waited for further light. I was accepted by an ordaining council and admitted to the ministry. I could preach about sin, and I could say that God would forgive the penitent, but the way of salvation I knew little of. I found Jordan a hard road to travel. I was conscientious, and I worked myself almost to death. But the more I worked, the weaker and more helpless I seemed. A universe of evil influences seemed to be fighting against me. People were converted, but I was constantly losing strength and heart. I began to think myself past feeling, and that God had taken His Holy Spirit from me. Was I indeed a Christian at all? And had I not been deceived in thinking I had ever turned to God? In utter despair of myself, I determined to devote my whole summer vacation to learning where I stood before God, to read nothing but the Bible, and to give up the ministry if I did not find peace.

Then God revealed his Son in me, as he did in the apostle Paul (Gal. 1:16). I read in the Acts that the early Christians were filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit. I read the closing chapters of John's gospel, and I learned the secret of their strength and gladness, even the mystery of the gospel, "which is Christ in-you, the hope of glory" (Col. 1:27). My conversion had been, all unconsciously to myself, the entrance of Christ into my soul, and only now did I learn that he had joined himself to me in a union which death could not part, and had taken me to be his partner in his work of men's salvation. I had only to abide in him, and have him abiding in me, and I should be able to do great things in his name (John 15:4). The God to whom I had surrendered at my conversion proved to be Christ my Savior; and since in him was all the fulness of the Godhead, all things were practically mine (Col. 2:9, 1 Cor. 3:22). Instead of facing a universe of evil influences, I had all the powers of heaven and earth to back me up, and to make me "mighty through God" to bring to naught fortresses of evil (2 Cor: 10:4). No least effort of mine should be in vain (1 Cor. 15:58). I went back to my church as a conqueror. I preached on union with Christ, as the central thought of all theology and of all religion. Christians came to me saying with tears: "We never heard this before." There followed in that congregation many conversions, almost as wonderful as that of Saul on the way to Damascus. And I learned my first lesson in the matter of imputations. My federalism was succeeded by a realistic theology.

Imputation is grounded in union, not union in imputation. Because I am one with Christ, and Christ's life has become my life, God can attribute to me whatever Christ is, and whatever Christ has done. The relation is biological, rather than forensic. I can, on my part, share in all Christ's suffering, and in all Christ's victory, I am lifted up into his eternity, and can take advantage of his acts as fully as if they were my own. So that old tract, "The Seven Togethers," can be justified, as a simple repetition of the teaching of the apostle Paul: I am

1. Crucified together with Christ, (Gal. 2:20);
2. Dead together with Christ, (Col. 2:29);
3. Buried together with Christ, (Rom. 6:4);
4. Quickened together with Christ, (Eph. 2:5);
5. Raised together with Christ, (Col. 3:1);
6. Sufferers together with Christ, (Rom. 8:17);
7. Glorified together with Christ, (Rom. 8:17).

Since Christ is my very life (Col. 3:4), all charge of legal fiction on the part of God disappears, and all charge of immoral appropriation on my own part disappears also, since union with Christ gives me not only his moral status, but also his moral power.

I make no claim to originality in this discovery, for many so called "mystics" have made it before me. But it transformed my theology none the less, by turning it from a theology of technicalities into a theology of life. It was not long before I saw my way to apply the same general principle to the interpretation of the relation of the race to its first father. In this matter I was helped by the reading of an old book by Baird, entitled "The Elohim Revealed," in which God's imputation of Adam's sin to all his descendants was explained as a simple recognition of their natural inheritance from him of an enfeebled and perverse will. Here I have only added the idea of subliminal tendencies constantly working against the good, tendencies which can be overcome only by God's regenerating Spirit, and have also added the conception of an act in God's eternity which summed up and judged the whole race of man as one. These two imputations,—that of Christ's righteousness to the believer and that of Adam's sin to the race,—I thought I had solved many years ago. There remained a third instance of imputation which only in late years I have been able to explain. It is the most difficult of all. To me it has been the greatest problem of theology, how to explain God's imputation to Christ of the sins of the whole race. Here I could find no light in any past work of theology. When I privately consulted Dr. Shedd, he could only call it a mystery of God. I was not satisfied. I wanted to find some union of Christ with humanity which would make this imputation also realistic and biological. I have found it, and have expounded it, in my book entitled "Christ in Creation." It is my chief contribution to scientific theology, and though I claim to have thrown new light on the doctrine of God's law, and of union with Christ, it is by my explanation of God's imputation of all human sin to Christ that my theology must stand or fall.

In the earlier chapters of this Primer I have shown that God is expressed and known only in Christ; that Christ is the life of humanity as well as the life of nature; that the solidarity of the race, no less than the harmony of the universe, is due to his constant volition; that he is the source of all good, while our wills are the source of all evil; that he has taken upon himself the burden of our sins by suffering in us all our guilt and misery; that in him God has condemned sin by bearing in himself its consequences; that union with the human race in Christ has made God the greatest sufferer in the universe; that this vindication of justice was due to his moral character of holiness, and indispensable to human salvation; that love has paid the penalty of sin by himself enduring that penalty; that all this was done in that one "act of righteousness" when the heart of God was broken on the cross for our salvation. Dr. Forsyth uttered a great truth, when he said that "God laid a world-sin upon a world-soul." But I have gone more nearly to the heart of the truth, in showing how Christ becomes the world-soul by being the one and only manifestation of God in nature and in humanity. Here are the reason and the necessity of the atonement: He who gives himself to a sinful humanity, if he be holy, must suffer; and the suffering of the holy God on account of sin is the essence of the atonement. Bronson Alcott, the school-teacher, held out his own hand to be ferruled by the boy who had broken the rules of the school. So the cross of Christ is a symbolic declaration, that without suffering there could be no remission, but that it was also possible that the blood of the son of God could atone for the sins of the world. Alcott's illustration, however, lacks the element of universality that belongs to the imputation of our sins to Christ, for it is God's own blood that was shed upon the Cross,

"When Christ the Mighty Maker died

For man the creature's sin."

Those who dislike the term "blood atonement," need to remember that a lower thing is often the preparation and symbol of a higher. We do not think it degrading to eat our lamb-chop of a morning, because it comes from the shambles. When we hear Christ saying: "This cup is the new covenant in my blood" (1 Cor. 11:25), we look forward to the glory that is to be revealed, forgetting the shame by which it was purchased. That blood was the symbol of Christ's life—the life with which he had endowed us at our creation—but which by regeneration and sanctification he has changed into moral life and power. Shall we not praise him who so shared his life with us as to begin, a microscopic point in the womb of the Virgin, and from that low beginning grows till he "fills all in all." (Eph. 1:22)? Shall we not make his shed blood the theme of our earthly song, as they do who surround "the throne of God and of the Lamb that hath been slain" (Rev. 5:12)? We read of "the church of God which he purchased with his own blood" (Acts 20:28), and when we speak of "blood-atonement" we are only declaring the merits of him "who is over all, God blessed forever" (Rom. 9:5), but who "for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame" (Heb. 2:10), in order that he "might bring many sons into glory" (Heb. 2:10). May we, in virtue of God's third instance of imputation, "overcome through the blood of the Lamb"! (Rev. 12:11).

The Story of Christmas

When did Christmas begin? Pagan customs adopted. Celebrations in different countries and centuries. The origin of the tree. Are we now at Christmas "thinking more of other people and less of ourselves"?

By RALPH M. JONES

I HAVE been unable to find a real story of Christmas anywhere, though I presume one exists. Even the Encyclopedia Britannica gives only a few bare data that are rather confusing than informing to the ordinary person. So I have tried to piece this together as best I could, with many gaps in the record and with wide jumps from one century to another.

Christmas goes back, of course, for its origin to the rather indefinite statement in Matthew's Gospel that "Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judaea, in the days of Herod the King." That, as a matter of fact, is about all we know about it. The year of Christ's birth has been determined with reasonable certainty, but we know neither the day nor the month when the Master of men first saw the light of the terrestrial sun. Speculation has been rife on this interesting subject, but no accurate data can be secured. We must, therefore, satisfy ourselves with the picture of the event so delightfully given us in two of the four Gospels, and as so many Christmas singers of long ago have repeated it to us in their own quaint fashion:

"And there was Messire St. Joseph,
And Mary the mother lay,
And the Holy Child in swaddling clothes,

All on a cushion of hay."

It follows, then, that Christmas Day, so-called, is not the birthday of Christ. It is merely the day on which we have chosen to celebrate the birth of Christ. Away back in the olden times when men first began to have a Christmas (though no one knows just when it began) it was celebrated variously in the months of December, January and April. The Eastern Church generally observed it on the sixth of January. Many Christian communities fixed other dates. Only in the West was there any general recognition of the twenty-fifth of December as the date of Christmas. Even to this day as you may know, the Mormons have their Christmas in April.

The Date Fixed

In the year 386 A. D. Pope Julian resolved to put an end to this confusion, and he asked St. Cyril to make a careful investigation as to the exact date of Christmas. Cyril reported that in the western churches December 25 was held to be the proper time. Pope Julian, therefore, issued a papal decree fixing December 25 as the day on which to observe Christmas in the city of the Cæsars; and before the fourth century ended the date set by the pope's authority had been quite generally adopted. Since then we have almost stopped discussing the matter, and most people, nowadays, take it for granted that Christ was actually born on the twenty-fifth of December. There is, of course, the barest chance that this surmise is correct, but there is nothing to build upon. Christmas arose out of a universal desire on the part of Christians to celebrate the birth of the world's Redeemer, and no mere question of dates has been allowed to interfere.

Pagan Customs Adopted

In regard to the manner of celebrating Christmas, it must be acknowledged that many of our best-loved Christmas customs have a pagan origin. This period of the year (the solstice) was a time when all the pagan peoples were accustomed to hold celebrations. It was natural, therefore, that the early Christians, in seeking for a mode of observance, should turn to these heathen festivals which already existed and adopt many of their forms. So the carol is a survival of the Roman Saturnalia, an ancient orgie of the worst sort. The holly and mistletoe, so agreeably used to decorate our homes, are reminiscent of the old Druidical worship in the savage forests of early Britain. Even our Christmas dinner is a lineal descendant of the ancient feasts given in honor of the Gods and Goddesses. And so one might go on. The early Christians took these polluted things and, having cleansed them, gave them to the Master; for Christianity can turn a Roman Saturnalia into a Christmas just as surely as it can make a bad heart over into a good one. That is the mission of the Christ of Christmas: To change things that are bad into things that are good.

Early Follies

It must be confessed, however (and this is the sad part of it), that the early attempts to separate these pagan rites from the pagan spirit that originally inhabited them was not altogether nor at once successful. Many of the early Christmas celebrations that we read about were only a little better than the heathen orgies they pretended to supplant. The natural badness of men's hearts ran away with them, and made the sacred birthday of Christ into a scene of shame and riot on which the dear Lord himself must have looked with great abhorrence. It went from bad to worse. Finally some learned doctors in Europe devised the "Feast of Fools," so-called, which was to form a part of the Christmas celebration, and where "the natural folly that is born in us (as they explained it) might exhale once a year," and so be got rid of. In what style it was got rid of I will not shock your ears by telling. Even the clergy gave themselves up to the spirit of universal intoxication. The revel grew until all thought of Christ was lost. Finally the matter of the abuse of Christmas was seriously taken up at the Council of Auxerre and very thoroughly considered. A Flemish divine arose in the council and declared that the festival of Christmas was "an excellent thing and quite as acceptable to God as the immaculate conception." He was loudly applauded by his like-minded brethren. Then up rose Gerson, the leading theologian of the day, and asserted vigorously that "if all the devils in hell had put their heads together to devise a feast that should utterly scandalize Christianity, they could not have improved on this one." Such expressions show us to what a depth of infamy the Christmas festival had sunk by the beginning of the fifth century, in France and Europe. It crops out in many of the books of that period.

In Early England

You and I, however, who are of Saxon stock are more interested in Christmas as it was celebrated in England and as it comes to us through English sources.

Back in Elizabethan England we find Englishmen wishing each other "a merry Christmas" just as we do now. It is an old expression, and the word "merry" did not mean in those times just what it has come to mean nowadays. As we now use it, it means hilarious, jolly. Then it meant "happy." So the English of the Tudors speak of "merrie England," meaning a contented and happy England. In the same manner they spoke also of a "happy merrie mean," meaning a happy medium or a moderate course. This may help us to understand a phrase that is on every lip at this season of the year.

More Hilarious Than Happy

It is only fair to admit, however, that the old English celebration of Christmas was rather hilarious than happy. It was "merry" in the best modern acceptance of the word. It began, in a preliminary way, on December 16, and did not end until January 6. All this period was given over, in those leisurely times, to holiday and merry-making. The English country gentleman of the day kept open house. With day-break on Christmas morning all the tenants and neighbors flocked into the great hall. Mine host met them at the door and made them welcome. Torches flamed about the walls. The great yule-log, blazing in the capacious fireplace, threw its flickering shadows about the great rough room; it had been carried in the day before by the oldest and youngest members of the household, who typified in their respective ages the year that was going out and the year that was coming in. After church (it is good to know that they were not wholly indifferent to the religious claims of the day) they returned home and the real fun began. The immense oak table was bare, except for a carpet at one end where sat mine host. The boar's head was brought in, the great wassail-bowl was filled to the brim, cakes, pastries and salads were loaded on the board in a careless profusion that might well have offended the taste of a more delicate generation, and then the fun and laughter and songs, stimulated not a little by the contents of the wassail-bowl, were in full swing! Much rough horse-play was indulged in. But it was for the most part fine, lusty, hearty fun. There was little of that nastiness about it that characterized the continental Christmas.

Thus, in brief, was merrie Christmas celebrated in the rude houses of our Saxon forebears. They were not a bad sort, but it may be said of them that they showed scant appreciation of the more sacred implications of the day. One who looked in on them would hardly suppose that they were keeping, in such rough and lawless fashion, the birthday of the gentle Saviour.

Christmas flourished in England until the Puritan conscience began to assert itself. There is reason to believe that, under the easy administration of the Stuarts, it had become somewhat corrupt, along with society in general. The feeling against Christmas culminated in 1643 when the Roundhead Parliament abolished Christmas together with Easter and Whitsuntide. King Charles, who was really on his last legs, protested in vain. Rioters in London expressed the indignation of the populace. But Parliament was obdurate, and the festival was put down with a stern hand. Oliver Cromwell, as might be expected, continued the enactment of prohibition, for he regarded all such merry-making as a device of Satan. Christmas, thus so rudely abolished, was not restored in England until the accession of the Second Charles, when it came back with greater license than ever.

Attempts to Abolish Christmas

Perhaps it was not known to most of us that Christmas was ever, at any time, abolished. Possibly we did not know that even in our own country it was at one time threatened with extinction, and on the same grounds, and by the same sort of people, as in England. Puritan prejudice came over on the May-flower, and, from the very first, Christmas was frowned upon by Governor Bradford. As early as 1621 Bradford felt called upon to rebuke certain "lusty yonge men" who had come over on the ship "Fortune," because on Christmas Day, he found them "tossing the bar, some at stool-ball, and other such sports." It was eventually enacted in Massachusetts in 1659 that "anybody who is found observing, by abstinence from labor, feasting, or in any other way, any such day as Xmas, shall pay for every such offence five shillings." This statute was not repealed till 1681. Over twenty years in Massachusetts without a Christmas! It seems hardly credible to us today. But so it was.

The Victorian Christmas

And now another big jump: this time into the early part of the last century, when Dickens and Thackeray were beginning to write their inimitable stories. A much sweeter, better, finer, friendlier Christmas, this, than any we have yet come upon. Who that has read it can ever forget that delightful description of Mr. Pickwick's Christmas at Dingley Dell? If you never have read it go and read it straightway; it will help to sweeten your heart and get you ready for your own Christmas. What charming visions of Christmas come to us out of the books and pictures of the period to which this genial soul belonged! Stage coaches with their capering horses, driving up to mine host's door, with crack of the whip and merry shouting; portly gentlemen with capes on their coats, and a red in their cheeks that was partly weather, and partly something else; Victorian ladies in their wide skirts; mine host himself, straddling before the roaring log in the great fireplace, with a coat-tail over either arm; the maiden standing demurely under the treacherous mistletoe with no thought at all of the young man who is loitering near; such a variety of waist-coats; such jolly laughter; such sumptuous fare; and alas! a little too much of that which cheers but also inebriates. Oh, they were fine old days!

The Christmas Tree

And now what of the Christmas Tree? It fills so important a part in our own Christmas celebration that we rather wonder why we have not yet heard anything about it. But we find it not in the house of the Elizabethan host, neither do we hear it mentioned in the pages of the incomparable Pickwick.

Legend traces the Christmas Tree back to the days of St. Boniface. We are told that, when the priest was about to sacrifice a child to the great god Thor, Boniface suddenly appeared under the sacred oak, and, after snatching the child away, demolished the oak with repeated blows of an ax. Then, pointing to a fir-tree which stood just behind the shattered oak, thrusting its green spire upward, he cried to the assembled people: "See! here is the living tree with no trace of blood upon it. See how it points to the sky. Let us call it the tree of the Christ-child. Take it up and carry it to the chieftain's hall, for this is the birthday of the White Christ. You shall go no more into the shadows of the forest to keep your feasts with secret rites of shame. You shall keep them at home with laughter and song and rites of love."

Beautiful indeed is the legend, and I wish I might assure you of its truth, though this, to be sure, is not the only legend of the Christmas Tree. That the tree originated in Germany, however, is beyond dispute. During the Middle Ages it appeared quite suddenly in Strassburg. For two hundred years the custom

Please Do Not Open Till Christmas

By MARGARET T. APPLEGARTH

ONCE upon a time there was a Little Old Lady from Holland. And once upon the same time there was a Sunday-school class,—in fact, two of them. As for the time itself, it was the day before Christmas, with fluffy flakes of snow in the air, and the klinkle-klank of sleigh bells. There was the spicy smell of Christmas trees and the terrible bustling of worried people who had foolishly forgotten to do their shopping early. And the Little Old Lady was provoked at them.

"It's even worse this year than usual," she said to the Minister's Daughter when she came to the handkerchief counter to make the very last purchase on her list.

"We're a shameless, thoughtless lot of Christians," sighed the Minister's Daughter, "and I do hope we won't tire you out so you can't enjoy your Christmas tomorrow."

The Little Old Lady handed the package over the counter as she answered: "Oh, as for Christmas, I pretend there isn't any such day anymore."

"No such day as Christmas? Why, you sound like a heathen," gasped the Minister's Daughter; "what do you mean?"

Darkness Helps

"Well, for one thing, I'm always clean tucked out by Christmas Eve. You see I'm getting old, my dear, and then somehow—well—my boys aren't living any more, and Christmas isn't Christmas in a flat with no family and no presents. So tonight I'll probably do what I did last year, just creep home when the store closes at half-past nine and crawl into bed in the dark. It's easier to pretend things are like they used to be when the lights aren't on!"

The Minister's Daughter leaned over the counter and laid her hand on the Little Old Lady's. "Oh, I'm so sorry, so very, very sorry!" she said, and wanted to cry dreadfully.

When she reached home she sat down and telephoned to so many persons that finally the Girl-at-Central "listened in" on one conversation,—and smiled all the rest of the day. So you may be sure she approved of the scheme she overheard.

Christmas Eve the snow was fluffier than ever, and the Minister decided all of it had been tramped into his front hall by those jolly laughing boys and girls. But he loved it, because there was Christmas in the air, and Christmas in their hearts.

Then the Minister's Daughter suddenly looked at her watch. "Oh, my dears, it's high time we were off," she called; "remember she leaves the store at half-past nine. Come on!" So they hurried away, each with a chunky parcel.

And the fairy story began.

It was a dingy little room, but they did things to it, working fast as fairies must before mortals can burst in and find them busy. Then they turned out the gas, tiptoed out, and scampered across the street to a drug store for hot chocolate. Just the Minister's Daughter and the Deacon's Son paced up and down outside, trying to look each time as if they were arriving anew, instead of killing time.

The Fairy Story

Presently the Little Old Lady from Holland came into view, so tired that she shuffled her poor Dutch feet through the snow. And right at her own doorstep who should she see coming towards her but her nice Minister's nice daughter, recently engaged to the Deacon's Son.

"Imagine seeing you twice in one day, my dear," she said.

The Deacon's Son nudged the Minister's Daughter, for the scheme had worked! The dear old soul evidently thought it had all just happened, so the Minister's Daughter said: "As long as we have met, I'm going to give you a good-night kiss," and she popped it right on the Old Lady's cheek where the snow drops were melting.

"Oh, thank you! Thank you!" she cried happily; and although that was all that the Minister's Daughter had waited outside for, the Deacon's Son had an extra idea of his own.

"I've a good mind to give you a kiss myself," he exclaimed. So he did! On the other cheek.

"Bless me!" sighed the Little Old Lady, "I'm all aflutter. I'll surely sleep well this night, my dears. God bless you both and make you happy. Good-night—and a merry Christmas."

When the front door had shut the Minister's Daughter said, "Oh, I do hope she won't light the gas!"

The Deacon's Son fairly glued his eyes on the second-story window: "I'm pretty sure she won't, she doesn't usually; and if she hasn't been kissing anybody in a long time, she'll surely want to think about it in the dark."

The Minister's Daughter wanted to laugh because he sounded so wondrous wise, but she sighed instead and said: "Oh, Peter dear, I do hope you'll never be a lonely old man!"

"I hope not, dear," he answered reverently, for you will remember that they were planning to live together forever and ever.

They stood quietly watching the Old Lady's window; it remained dark; and presently it was raised a few inches, so they knew she had undressed and was ready for bed.

"I'll get the children," he said, and ran over to the drug store.

"Come along, Herald Angels," he called, "if you swallow any more hot chocolate you won't be able to warble properly!" So they wrapped themselves in mufflers and trooped out into the scrunchy snow.

"Quiet now!" ordered the Deacon's Son, "remember you're angels and are to sing that tired old Darling to sleep."

So they tiptoed across to her house, and through the open crack of her window there floated: "Holy Night, Silent Night," sounding as it only can sound when sixteen young hearts are brimming over with Christmas love for somebody else.

The Angels Sing

The Little Old Lady lay in bed and loved it. "Am I dreaming, or is it real?" she wondered,—and seemed to feel those two warm kisses on her cheeks all over again. But by the third verse she had actually snoozed right off into a dream of Holland, so the rest of their carols interested only neighbors, who smiled to hear some of the Herald Angels break down forlornly on the high notes of their fifth hymn.

"Perhaps we'd better go now," said the Minister's Daughter. And the angels one and all agreed, for they were getting chilly and sleepy. But they liked it for Christmas was in the air.

Presently the Minister's Daughter had kissed all her angels good-night, and the Deacon's Son had slapped all his angels on the back. And the wise old Man in the Moon chuckled to himself, for Christmas comes only once in a year, and he liked what they had been up to!

The sun liked it, too, and was really impatient at the Little Old Lady the next morning—was she never going to wake up? Finally he sent a sunbeam to dance on her eyelids, whereat she sighed and half woke up. "It's funny," she thought to herself, "but I never pretended to smell pine boughs so plainly before. I'm getting good at pretending!" But the sunbeam kept on dancing until she squinted through her eyelashes, and was presently sitting bolt upright in bed.

"But, of course, it's just a dream," she cautioned herself wisely. Yet there was her table loaded down with giddy red packages, every single one of which was plainly labelled: "Please Do Not Open Till Christmas."

"Well, it's Christmas this very minute, and I'd better open them quick before I wake up altogether"; so she snipped the string off the first package. Well! well! oranges—how very long it was since she had had any! And dear me, what a lovely padded jacket to go under her thin winter coat—oh, if only that jacket would not vanish into thin air when she actually woke up! And my! my! what a beautiful work-bag; oh, how nice! two balls of red yarn inside, also some knitting needles, with this note: "Johnnie Tucker needs some mittens. He is seven years old. You'll know what size to knit him."

"I'd best cast on twenty stitches," she decided at once, thinking how odd it was to receive dream notes that crinkled like real paper.

She had a marvellous half hour; for there was a box of hard candies, the kind that last a long time because you're only supposed to suck and suck on them; there were two books, and a dainty lace collar; there was a pound of tea and a nice little cup and saucer to drink it out of; there was a tiny Christmas tree with all sorts of cute presents dangling from every bough—a tiny pencil, a candy cane, a package of silvery wire hairpins (to match white hair!), a small calendar, a little bottle of cologne, a crocheted wash-cloth—oh, ever so many other things, and among them a handkerchief which had actually come off her very own counter at the store. She remembered selling one yesterday.

It was that handkerchief which made her pinch herself to see if she was awake. And she was! So she began putting two and two together: the handkerchief and the Minister's Daughter; the Deacon's Son and the good-night kisses; the Christmas carols and all these surprisingly real presents. Certainly nothing like this had ever happened before.

"The sweet young things!" she smiled. "Dear God, how very good you are to me!"

So it was a wonderful morning; and in the afternoon they came. They found her sucking pleasantly on a hard candy and knitting Johnnie Tucker's mittens. They played quaint old games with her.—Twenty Questions and Hide the Thimble; and they admired her presents one by one as if they had never seen them before.

"It's been my merriest Christmas," she whispered to each of them as they kissed her good-bye. Whereupon every single one of them answered "Why, it's been my happiest Christmas, too!"

And I can't resist telling you that there's a lonely old Lady in your church. I'm sure you want to have the merriest Christmas possible, so I'm hinting to you how you can find it:—tuck it inside her package and label it: "Please Do Not Open Till Christmas!"

lingered on the Rhine, and then, quite suddenly again, it spread all over Germany, and fifty years later had conquered Christendom. It was the marriage of Queen Victoria to a German prince that brought the tree into England. That explains why they had no Christmas tree at Dingley Dell. That explains why

A Christmas Prayer

SWEET child of peace, across the ancient strife
Bringing glad melody of angel psalm,
Our hearts are restless with the care of life—
O bring to us thy calm!

Dear Lord of Love, the world is waiting still
The high achievement of thy gracious plan;
O grant us thine all-conquering good will,
Thy loving faith in man!

Master of Death, thy greatest gift is yet—
To know thy sacrifice, to share thy loss,
Lest in the mirth of Christmas we forget
The glory of the cross.

—Anna Louise Strong.

we do have a Christmas tree now. According to another legend it is the same tree from which Mother Eve took the forbidden fruit. Disconsolate with the memory of that sin it remains always sombre and fruitless, except on Christmas Eve when, in honor of the Christ, it blossoms into light and beauty. If you like that legend better than the other about St. Boniface, you may have it instead. They are equally authentic and equally delightful.

And now, having rambled so far, we come to our own Christmas, what we may call, for lack of a better designation, the Christmas-tree Dynasty, or The Era of Giving. We may as well stop here. It need only be remarked, as a graceful closing word, that we of the Christmas Tree

Dynasty keep Christmas in a better and more unselfish fashion than any of those who went before us. Our examination into the past has established that much. There are indeed some things, like the Christmas carols, that have been too generally abandoned. Perhaps our joy is more tempered than the jollity of those grown-up children of the long-ago, or even of Mr. Pickwick's generation. But take it all in all, we are giving Christ a larger place in our Christmas festivities than he has ever had, since the Wise Men came and dropped their gifts into his manger-bed. We are thinking more of other people and less of ourselves. We are giving more to those who cannot give to us again in equal measure. This White Christmas idea, though it is originally grounded in the Legend of Cathay, is really and truly typical of the new and better times we are living in, when organized effort for the relief of poverty and suffering as opposed to personal caprice, is getting to be more and more the watchword of our Christmas giving.

A Merry Christmas!

Finally, we wish you all a Merry Christmas. Yes, a Merry Christmas: full of joy and glee; full of happiness and innocent mirth. God is no Roundhead that he should frown upon our merry-making. Nay, I do not think it would be irreverent, or any great reflection on the Master, if I should picture him, masquerading as Santa Claus, rosy-cheeked and fur-booted, going about doing good. There is no irreverence in a phantasy so kindly. But let positive reverence also mingle with your laughter. Let worship temper, even though it does not mitigate, your joy. Let no one pass this way without kneeling once at least before the manger-throne of Love.

Angels' Language

By JAMES M. STIFLER

EVERYONE can understand it. Most children understand and speak it almost without an accent; some grown-ups can make themselves understood in it pretty well, though they mispronounce a good many words. But it is the one universal language that doesn't need any lexicon because nearly everyone can understand some of it no matter what dialect he may use when asking for bread and butter or the way to the post office.

When I was a little boy and about Christmas time father, at family prayers, read the story of the angels that sang over Bethlehem I could see them and hear them just as plainly as if I had been there and I think that I felt just as glad as they did and it never occurred to me to wonder what language they used. I know now that most boys and girls understand angels' language whether they happen to use American or Swahili at other times.

When people become old many of them can't stoop down and peek under piles of rocks nor climb trees and look away off; they have grown too stiff. But boys and girls can do all such things easily and they like to; it's the rarest sort of fun for them to crawl around and investigate the most unlikely place or to climb away out where the branches sway most delightfully. They never worry about getting "cricks" in their backs, nor do they test the fibre of the tree if it will hold. They just climb up it and swing or look, and that is what trees were made for.

Grown people who have forgotten angels' language wonder why children do all the strange, useless things that they do. They do them, you know, just because they are useless, but those things that are useless in ordinary language are the things that are most useful in angels' language.

And for that same reason there are some people who don't understand why angels sing and except that angels look pretty on Christmas cards and give a different sort of theme for the anthems of choirs, they don't really know why the angels did sing and honestly they have very grave doubts as to whether there ever was any such music. They shake their heads and say that it is quite outside the realm of natural law, and that some devout soul just imagined it. It's quite certain that they never would have imagined it.

But the angels did sing. They sang just because they wanted to and because they knew that something most wonderfully beautiful was happening. It was something so wonderful that at first it takes your breath away. It is so unexpected, so undeserved, so imperial in its grandeur. In a great big way it makes you feel as you felt in a tiny way when you were at school and got all snarled up in an arithmetic problem and you were mad and scared and knew you'd fail and a lot of other disagreeable things and then suddenly some big person leaned over your shoulder, took your pencil and fingers and all and made a few marks on the paper—and there it all was!—all right! and you could see how it was done, and you'd never forget it, and recess was coming.

That's the way the angels felt, and that's why they sang. There was a terrible problem that snarled up the whole world and it looked hopeless, but the great Teacher leaned over and put a Baby in the manger and before very long the whole world knew that he was the right answer. It wasn't what was expected, nor what you might expect, and that's the reason why some people can't understand it. They think it's too good to be true. So they don't sing and don't understand angels' voices when they sing. But angels sing because they know it is true and all those who have become as little children understand why they sing, and they understand the language which hasn't any words, because they know that that Baby means that the things that are impossible to men are quite easy to God, and that there will come, really come, some day peace on earth.

Christmas in a Christian Center

By CONSTANCE JACKSON

WHICH Christian Center? Oh, just any one of the twenty odd through which the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society is bringing peace on earth, good-will to men at this Christmas season. All through the month of December the building rings with the voices of children singing carols or practicing for the cantata, "Ring out Happy Bells, Christ the Lord is born." Gracie's little voice floats up from the nursery, while the missionaries are opening boxes, sorting, wrapping and labeling gifts. The sweet Christmas message even penetrates to the emergency clinic room where a tired mother is resting on a white cot where she is slowly regaining the strength which she could not recover in her crowded little room at the back of a store. She has six children, none of whom would ever come to the house before. Now the ten-year-old girl carries drinking water from a fountain several blocks away, and can hardly wait for classes to begin.

The children are beginning to feel the importance of the approaching events. One small girl announces in a shrill treble at a rehearsal for the cantata, "I washed my neck yesterday, and I'm goin' to wash it again tonight!"

At last the great day arrives. Santa has come from all over the country, from California and New York, from Washington and Vermont, from country town and large city. The children gather around the Christmas tree, its red balls and white icicles gleaming against the green boughs. The room is bright with holly and poinsettia. Games are played, the Christmas story told to ever eager ears, and the rafters ring to the good old Christmas hymns. "It came upon the midnight clear" has barely died away when a chorus of voices demands "Away in a manger" and another pleads, "Silent night, holy night"—I just love that, teacher.

Jingle, jangle, jingle, jangle! Little bodies tremble with eagerness. For it is old Kris Kringle—none other—with his proverbial "little round belly." There is something about Santa which invites confidences and the children almost crowd him off the platform in their eagerness to shake hands and whisper secrets.

One family of five small tots whose father is in jail because he stabbed a man on Thanksgiving Day are thanking Santa over and over again for their dollies. They hadn't expected him to remember them this year.

Marguerite, a little Italian girl who is one of nine children, had been praying for weeks for a dolly which would "go to sleep." She had been looking in all the store windows, but she never dreamed one would come her way. Now she is clutching the beloved golden-haired baby in her arms. It cost a quarter, but Marguerite is richer than a millionaire.

Does it pay? Said one Italian woman to the missionary, "You work too hard for the church. You be sick tomorrow!" The missionary smiled and shook her head. "No, not for the church, Mrs. Rosetti, but for Jesus." The mother looked thoughtful and said slowly, "Yes, that is right—for Jesus. You not be sick. He give you strength."

Little six year old Eliot had been thoughtlessly threatened by teacher that if he played hooky she'd tell Santa. Cry? He pulled his cap over his diminutive face and sobbed as if his heart were broken in a hundred places. Poor little innocent Brownie! He was coaxed to the fire, warmed and comforted and promised that Santa would be positively ordered to bring him the boat he so much wanted.

Will you play Santa Claus to Eliot and Gracie and Marguerite? This Christmas of 1921 a part of the Christmas offering is to go to the work of Christian centers.

A White Christmas in China

By LOUISE CAMPBELL

SINCE writing my report at conference time we have had such an interesting Christmas that I wish to add a short account of it.

We had our first "White Gift Christmas" and it proved to be a very happy one. Each class in the Sunday school prepared its gift secretly and then produced it at the Christmas program as the roll of classes was called. The primary class proudly carried up a little banyan tree with bright dimes and five-cent pieces hanging like fruit from the branches, the women's class had a pair of large baskets filled with rice which they carried up with a pole, then the girls' class took up a little white lamb made of cotton. It was life-size, with a bell on a red ribbon around its neck. There was quite a mountain of white cotton besides for the lamb to stand on. The cotton was for comforters or wadded coats for poor folks. There were many other gifts in various forms. Twenty dollars of the money was sent to the famine sufferers in the north of China and the rest was used for the poor in Kaying.

We had such a good time at our own school Christmas! The girls showed such a helpful spirit. One group decorated, while another cooked a delicious meal of which over seventy of us partook that night; another group made the candy bags. The girls wore their new uniforms which were made with short skirts and they did look so neat and pretty! (The new fashions for their clothes are not nearly so pretty as the old style with the long jacket and loose trousers. The new style is to have very short jackets and very tight trousers, so all the girls' schools have adopted the skirt for public appearance though they still wear the trousers for every-day use in school and at home.) We had a beautiful tree, and the fire-crackers without which no function in China seems complete. There was an interesting program with the Christmas story, Christmas carols and the gifts from the folks at home who had sent boxes to make the girls' Christmas a happy one. There were dolls for thirteen of the little girls who had never had one in their lives before, a pencil and handkerchief for each of the others, with a bag of candy and peanuts for every one. I'm hoping that some day we'll have enough dolls so that every girl who has never had one in her life may be given one. One girl especially who has been in our school for six years, but has never owned a doll, said, "I wish I were one of the little ones so I would stand a chance of getting one too." Perhaps next year we had better change our custom and give to those who have been here longest instead of the smallest ones. I got a picture, though a poor one, of the girls with their dolls the next morning. That night was so clear and warm that the girls had a good play with blind man's buff and other games after the evening program, then they piled into bed four and six deep, for on that one night of all the year the day-pupils are the guests of the boarding pupils and since the day-pupils far outnumber the boarders they have lots of fun and little sleep. I made the rounds after all were in bed and laughed till my sides ached over the funny sight of a row of heads laughing over the edge of the big comforter in each bed as I parted the mosquito net curtains and peeped in.

A few days later we were invited to visit the girls' school of the Swiss mission four miles from here. We made an imposing procession, I assure you, as we strung single file along the narrow roads. We had quite a nice time. Their girls sang and recited for us, served tea, showed us their fine handwork, embroidery, knitting, crocheting and sewing. They then took us to visit their blind school. There were nineteen little blind girls who sang, recited, knitted and read Braille for us. One tiny tot eight months' old had been found when she was only a few days old under a clump of bamboos near the mission. Our girls were much interested and I think enjoyed the sweet singing of the little blind children more than any other feature of the visit.

Our Christmas vacation lasted only two days, for the Chinese New Year's vacation was coming soon, Jan. 23 to Feb. 24, which ends our school year and begins the new one.

A Japanese Christmas

By CHARMA MOORE

MY first Christmas in a heathen land was certainly a new and strange experience. As we hurried about the streets doing our Christmas shopping and getting ready for the Christmas celebration here in the school it did not seem possible that the hundreds of people whom we met on the streets knew nothing of Christmas. It seemed that I just must stop and tell them the Christian story so that they too could be happy.

We had our Christmas program in the school on Friday afternoon. We worked until late Thursday night trimming the tree and decorating the chapel. The girls were up bright and early getting everything in order in their rooms. Most of them had invited their relatives and friends and they would want to see their rooms. The school-room was filled half an hour before time to begin. All the little brothers and sisters were there in bright kimonos with their hair oiled and as slick as you please. The girls gave the entire program in English and did well. I am sure that it will be a long time before I can do as well in Japanese. The devotional hour which followed was very impressive.

On Sunday morning the Immanuel Church had its Christmas and in the afternoon Mr. Sato had a Christmas for his Sunday school. He is a member of Immanuel Church and is a soap manufacturer. That is, he has a small shop where he makes soap. His home is in the rear of the shop and, like most Japanese houses, is very small. But on Sunday afternoon he pushes back the paper walls and has a Sunday school there. He packs it so full of children that the girls who go there from this school to teach must stand up and have the children packed tightly around their feet. With the help of his wife and our girls he had planned a fine program and he had a present for every child as well as some candy. He had carefully kept the attendance and the children who had been most regular received the nicest presents and so on down the line. When the children wanted to thank him he told them to thank God, for God had made it possible for him to give them the presents.

My Best Gift

By MRS. E. C. CRONK.

CHRISTMAS was coming. There could be no doubt of it. The shop windows were dazzling with a red, gold and green glamour, which shone round a hundred gifts, useful and useless. The December magazines, wreathed in holly, radiated good cheer, gift suggestions, and turkey menus. People with happy surprises tucked under their arms, and with the joy of joy-giving shining out of their eyes, jostled each other good-naturedly along the streets. Small boys manifested their annual sudden symptoms of unusual goodness. By many unmistakable signs Christmas was forecast.

I had just torn off my calendar at December 11 when the postman brought the mail. Among the letters was one in a square envelope with a bunch of holly in the corner. I opened it first. Another envelope fell out. As soon as I saw that little envelope I knew it was from the missionary society and I felt a quick resentment at its coming just at this time.

"They do choose the most inappropriate times for sending out envelopes for special offerings at our church," I said. "Nobody ever has any money left at Christmas. I can't see why they don't wait until some time in the new year."

Aunt Caroline, who was standing by me, was looking at the envelope that had fallen on the table. Then she looked up at me. She said not a word but smiled one of her superior, exasperating smiles as she walked on into the library. Aunt Caroline did not belong to the missionary society at all. I often wished I could get her interested. She was so thorough in everything she did, I knew she would make a fine member.

I glanced down at the envelope. Surrounded by a holly border were the words: "God gave his best gift to you at Christmas."

Will you give your best gift to him?"

Some things come to us with sudden illumination. The words on that envelope were no new words to me, but, as I read them, I suddenly understood Aunt Caroline's smile.

I had said "Nobody has any money left over at Christmas."

There was no sham about Aunt Caroline. She saw through me even when I had deceived myself. She would never talk with beautiful sentiment about giving God the best gift while she gave "left-overs."

I had it out with myself that day. When I began to count up all that I was giving to others while I looked with resentment on the little envelope that asked for a special Christmas gift to my Saviour, I knew why Aunt Caroline smiled. I looked over all the presents I had made and bought. I thought of those yet unmade and unbought for which I was planning and saving and then I realized that for Him whom I professed to love above all others I had planned nothing. I wondered if I were really willing to make His gift my best gift this Christmas. Of this much I was sure, that I was willing to be made willing, so, with a prayer, I promised myself that my best gift should be for Him who gave Himself for me.

It was not easy to cut down on the other gifts to the friends I loved best, but I did it. Then there was a long list of friends

The Gift

CASPAR, Melchior, Balthazar,
These are they who followed the star.

Frankincense and myrrh and gold,
These were the gifts they brought of old.

These were the precious, wonderful things
They brought, as befitting three wise kings.

The nameless Shepherds were quite too poor
To lay such gifts on the stable floor;

But one, I'm told, left his cap, and another
His shepherd's coat and his crook; and his brother,

Who had carried a lamb across the wild,
Left that as a gift for the Holy Child.

Oh, Mary might better have liked a gem,
For the best of women are fond of them;

And Joseph, no doubt, the gold approved—
'Tis a thing men's hearts have always loved;—

These things I suspect; but sure I am
That the little Lord Christ preferred the lamb.

"Where Is He That is Born King?"

BY ROBERT B. PATTISON.

WISE men have ever asked to know
"Where is he that is born the King?"
And all who would know have followed
The glow
Of some heaven-born star where the angels sing.

The gleam of that star shows a humble place,
Not Herod's palace, Christ's place of birth;
But his mother's pure face transfigures that place,
Reflecting the face of the King of earth.

We find "the city of the great King,"
If we are wise men in our day,
Where, in Christ's name, with hearts
afame,
We keep the soul of the child away.

For the manger of Christ is the lowly heart,
And the hand of the King in truth we touch,
And the King draws near and holds those dear
To whom Christ whispers, "Inasmuch!"

We find the King in the suffering
To whom we are as a sufferer in need;
And the kingliest King to earth we bring When we add the discouraged with kindly deed.

Thus Christ is born in the life forlorn
Whenever we calm its stress and care;
Thus Christ has part in every heart
That seeks earth's suffering to share.

Where is the King? Where?
There is the King! There!

A Mother's Prayer

AS I hold my own baby,
So close to my breast,
With the tiny soft fingers
Like pink rosebuds pressed.
Do I think of that Baby
Of heavenly birth,
Who came bringing hope
To the mothers of earth?

As I clasp my own baby,
So close with a prayer,
That the Saviour will keep us
With all watchful care,
Do I think of the mothers
Whose mute, nameless fears
Bow them low to blind gods
With dumb lips and deaf ears?

In my home where my child
Is a gift from the Lord,
Where the mother is honored,
The baby adored,
Do I think of far lands,
Where at breaking of day,
The unwanted babies
Are carried away?

Oh Father, who gavest
My baby to me,
May the love of my child
Bring me closer to Thee,
May the children of earth
Who know not thy Son
Be more precious to me
Because of my own.

—Laura Scherer Copenhauer.

My Best Gift

to whom I had felt for years I must give things I wanted in formal and unprofitable exchange for things I didn't want. I wrote the name of every one of them down on my list of Christmas good wishes and put the money in my little holly-wreathed envelope.

As my needle flew back and forth in dainty gifts I began to think of His "inasmuch," and I found time to add to my Christmas surprises, garments for some of His needy ones. Along by the side of the doll for my little sister I laid one for a child who had never owned a doll. Soon my "Inasmuch Box" was overflowing with gifts. By the day for the December meeting of our missionary society my heart was overflowing with the joy of giving, and my envelope, usually so empty, had in it my best gift.

All people. As I started to the meeting Aunt Caroline said, "I want to go with you today. You may take me to the society as a Christmas gift member, brought in through an envelope."

Then she looked down at the envelope and smiled again, and I knew with sudden intuition that my empty envelopes in past years had been a stumbling block.

Mary's Baby

JOSEPH, mild and noble, bent above the straw;
A pale girl, a frail girl, suffering, he saw;
"O my love, my Mary, my bride, I pity thee!"
"Nay, dear," said Mary, "all is well with me!"
"Baby, my baby, O my babe," she sang.
Suddenly the golden night all with music rang.

Angels leading shepherds, shepherds leading sheep:
The silence of worship broke the mother's sleep.
All the meek and lowly of the world were there;
Smiling she showed them that her child was fair.
"Baby, my baby," kissing him she said.
Suddenly a flaming star through the heaven sped.

Three old men and weary knelt them side by side.
The world's wealth forswearing, majesty and pride;
Worldly might and wisdom before the babe bent low Weeping, maid Mary said "I love him so!"
"Baby, my baby," and the baby slept.
Suddenly on Calvary all the olives wept.

—Shaemas O. Sheel.

The Glory of the Star

IT speaks to us of better days, that coming golden age,
When nations all at peace shall dwell, and wars no more shall rage;
It prophesies that blissful time, when everywhere shall bide
The beauty and the rapture of an endless Christmastide;
So let us live the glory, this glory from afar,
The glory that the Wise Men saw, the glory of the star!

—Campbell Coyle.

Be Born Anew, Dear Lord

BE born anew, dear Lord, be born again,
Unto the hunger of the sons of men!
Whose famine is too bitter to be fed
By any lower food than sacred bread.
We thirst for hope and, tasting, drink it not.
We choke for joy denied a barren lot.
We starve for love and, starving, throw the dice
That may, or may not, pay love's precious price.
Our trembling hands, infirm, have lost the wit
To grasp thy holy cup. Lord, give us it!

Fill it with strength despaired of by the weak.
Fill it with brimming rest the weary seek.
Out of the chalice let the lonely drink.

* * * * *

Unto white hearts give purity anew;
And to the false the power to be true.
Give to the friendless, shrinking and apart
The happy throbbing of the Christmas heart!

—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

Empty Stockings

THERE is this to be said about stockings: on all the other days of the year holes may be exceedingly uncomfortable, but on Christmas Eve they wax positively dangerous! Especially great holes through which little presents could all too easily slip and roll away out of sight and perhaps stay lost forever and ever, amen—which was a shuddering thought: one which Rebekah Rachel worried over, since the holes in her own tattered stockings were as big as silver dollars!

Yet early on the morning of the day before Christmas she draped them over the foot of the bed: "I jess gets 'em ready for that old Mr. Santy Claus," who was sewing buttons on cards as fast as was humanly possible. (And that was too slow—since putting buttons on cards is no way to earn rent and food and clothe Rebekah Rachel.) Mrs. Einstein therefore did not take time to look up at Becky's slim, small Christmas stockings; yet all day long she saw them in her mind's eye—poor little empty stockings, dangling hopefully from the bedpost, put there early to entice that absurd American fairy.

"What for you go on believe in that old red feller?" she asked, as she threaded a needle.

"Well, ain't we been in America one year longer 'n last Christmas? So maybe now he makes a remember of us! But say, mudder, couldn't you mend me up them awful holes? Things could to fall through them holes so terrible easy!"

"Not much I couldn't mend them up," snapped Mrs. Einstein, "und don't you make no teatings on me, Becky, for them stockings is something fierce mit holes—all day and all night would it take, und mit no buttons sewed on new cards, where'd your supper come from, huh? Und your breakfast, huh? Mit your popper lost these four weeks, too! Und anyhow, Becky, ain't I told you I don't hold mit this Krisht holiday? You gotta mind how Jews ain't got no use for Krishts (Christians)."

So Rebekah Rachel walked sadly away; and sadly her mother sewed endless buttons on endless cards, until by and by it was four o'clock on Christmas Eve, with big feathery flakes of snow floating down from the sky—for all the world "like little angels' fadders," whispered Becky to herself, as she pressed her nose against the window pane and watched the passers-by. Never had there been people passing by with arms so full of bundles: men with little green trees tucked under their arms and men with great green trees trailing along behind them. Women with more parcels than they could possibly carry, for sometimes you saw them stoop to pick one up. Even the children skipped merrily by with little bits of packages clutched in their red mittens. And above all this bustle was the cheerful clink-clankle of sleigh-bells. At least it should have sounded cheerful, but when Becky turned away from the window there was mudder sitting under the feeble gas-jet sewing buttons on cards as hard as ever she could, and just beyond mudder's chair hung a pair of forlorn empty stockings, dangling hopefully.

Becky walked over and pinched them experimentally here and there, hoping against hope that in some mysterious way a dear surprising something-or-other might have already been dropped inside! But there was only the same old emptiness. Becky sighed.

"Mudder," she said, "I think I go down and walk me around on the sidewalk some."

"Sure, but mind you don't go getting yourself lost like what your popper done four week ago. My sakes, Becky, I'm most mad mit wondering—where could your popper have went to, anyhow."

Becky shook her head forlornly. Fathers that walked out of front doors and never came back, no, not for four long weeks, were unhappy thoughts for Christmas Eve. So she slammed the door and started down the long flight of rickety stairs that led to the street. And on those stairs she met Sophie Sobreski.

Now it must be mentioned that Sophie and all the Sobreskis, big and little, were what Mrs. Einstein called "Krishts," and again and again Becky had been warned to have nothing to do with this heretical neighbor. But Sophie herself, having no such warning, greeted Becky with incurable friendliness: "Say, I lets you in on a secret, so you promises you won't tell my mudder! See! I unwraps my package und what has I got? Why, I got an apron! Ain't it some grand apron, though! Well, I got secrets on my mudder over this here apron, for tomorrow she gets it off me for Christmas, und she don't know I been sewing it every week in my sewing class around to the Baptist Mission. I'll be some Santy Claus on my mudder, yes?"

Becky fingered the apron and nodded a dull "uh-huh!" Not another word could she say, she was so overcome with envy and longing. Oh, to be Sophie and have a place called a mission to go to!

But no sooner had Sophie disappeared inside her door than Becky rushed up to her own flat and snatched her tattered stockings from the bedpost. Then down the steps she dashed, out on the street, through a back alley and around a corner to the little mission home: yours and mine! Just as if she had been there a hundred times before, Becky burst open that door and demanded of the lady at the desk: "Is this here the place where Sophie Sobreski sews aprons as surprises on her mudder? Well, then, I wants you should do favor on me, please! I wants you should mend me up my stockings for Santy Claus. My mudder she ain't got no time from buttons since my popper got himself losted, and if that old Christmas feller should make visits on me tonight his present could fall through these holes terrible easy, see?"

Ah, it was a great deal to see all in one look and all in one breath! But the lady at the desk rallied to the occasion, quite as you and I would have had her rally.

"Tell me where you live, dear," she said, "and I'll not only see that your stockings are mended in time, but I'll jog old Santy's memory about you, indeed I will. He'll surely call this time!"

"O-oh!" sighed Becky, contentedly. So this was the kind of thing that happened when you came to Baptist missions!

She walked home through the snowy streets, and there were more men with little green trees tucked under their arms, and more children with chunky packages clutched in their red mittens. But she was no longer envious. By a delightful process she too had achieved a Christmas! So she skipped along to the merry clink-clankle of sleigh-bells, and said to mudder, excitedly: "I've got secrets on you, mudder. Joost you wait and see!"

And although she fully meant to stay awake to see the fun, she closed her eyes for half a minute; and the next thing, behold! it was morning! Morning, with her mended stockings bulging with surprising somethings. She chuckled with sudden high glee, and turning saw her mother watching her.

"Look, mudder!" she cried, "that funny old red feller made visits on me last night—see!"

Mrs. Einstein nodded, but her eyes were full of tears. "Becky," she said, "I tells you something: that 'red feller,' he was just an everyday Krisht lady, a fine lady mit arms full of bundles, und she says how she will help me finding your popper, und how next week I should earn more moneys at a new job than by sewing buttons; und, Becky, this afternoon they got a Christmas party on that mission, und me und you is asked! Becky, I can't keep no more mad on Krishts! Any Krisht what makes mendings on a little kid's empty stockings und fills 'em up mit fruits and toys—say, you can't keep a mad on folks like that! Not mit baskets of Christmas eats left sitting on the table und kind American ladies acting like we was their special friend."

And I'm thinking that all over again, in the quiet of that humble room, the Christmas angels sang—even as they sang long years ago:

"Peace on earth,
Good-will among men."

How Father Feels About It

IT SEEMS to me a little hard that, just because I'm dad,

I must receive a necktie of a green and purple plaid,
Or hideous, big humidior, all brass and quartered oak,
Or fancy boxes of cigars no mortal man could smoke.

Suspenders worked in cross-stitch or a scarf of knitted wool—

All fancywork affects me as a red rag does a bull!—

A puffy, wadded dressing gown—I think 'twas raised by yeast!—

And slippers that were modeled for some prehistoric beast.

A pocketknife that won't cut cheese; a watch fob that's a crime;

A dinky doodad little clock that pays no heed to time;

A "combination inkstand" that holds everything but ink!

Of gifts I'd really like to get nobody seems to think!

I tried to solve the problem by making out a list.

"No; you must be surprised," they said. Said I: "The point you've missed;

A real surprise at Christmas would be something I could use!"

"We see," they cried; "give us your list, and from it we will choose."

The Tree That Grew Up and Touched The Stars

OH, mother," wailed Little Pine, "I do so want a new dress like all the other trees. What's Easter without something brand new?"

"Tut! Tut!" sighed dear old Mother Nature, "haven't I given you those nice little new cone buttons to trim the cuffs on each of your arms? What more do you want, poor child?"

"I don't think it's fair!" wailed Little Pine, "what are old cone buttons when Apple Tree is all trimmed up with the ruffiest pink blossoms, and Plum Tree is all one mass of adorable sweetness! And here I am in my same old suit—boohoo! Boohoo! I'm ashamed to be seen, and all the other trees laugh at me; really they do. 'What's the good of having needles if you can't sew yourself something new for Easter?' they shout at me, and poke their fingers at me! Oh, couldn't you give me a few frills, mother dear?"

But Mother Nature shook her head: "Just wait, darling! And whatever you do, hold up your head, for some day you may touch the stars."

"It's a faraway sort of wish," sighed Little Pine that night, gazing up at the distant stars, twinkling such miles and miles above her, "and I want something new to wear now. I don't want to wait."

But of course she had to! For Mother Nature is always obeyed, and down in their hearts all her children realize that she knows what is best for them. So Little Pine held up her head in outward pride, but there was shame in her heart that every other tree had such fluttery ruffles and such good-enough-to-eat daintiness. The people that walked in the woods never once noticed her, but went into grown-up, or youthful, rhapsodies over every other tree.

"Oh look!" the children would scream with delight, "look at the darling little maple keys!" And they collected them to carry home. Moreover there were artists who came with paints and paint-brushes, and painted the orchard; but they never painted Little Pine. The farmers walked out in their "Sunday best" to look over their estates, and they praised the vines nearby and smiled at the orchards—but never cast a look at Little Pine. You really can't blame her for feeling very old-fashioned all summer in her heavy winter suit. It meant little to her that the cone buttons were growing bigger and browner. For what was brown-ness, when the apple trees were all one mass of crimson apples and the peach trees made your mouth simply water? Even the chestnuts had amazing trimmings,—prickly pom-poms here and there, and when they opened they were full of dusky nuts. Amazing!

All this was bad enough, but by October maple tree changed her green dress for a red and yellow one,—the most blazingly gorgeous colors you ever saw. People came and carried home great boughs for trimming their homes, but nobody paid the least bit of attention to Little Pine. All she could do was to hold up her head and gaze at the stars wistfully.

But about this time came tragedy to every nearby tree. Great autumn winds came blowing briskly through the woods, and their crimson-yellow dresses were fastened on so poorly that away they blew. Ah me! Such a rustling of bare arms! Such a shivering! Little Pine looked down at her old green suit with a first little thrill of approval: "It's very warm, and I've still got it!"

Then Mother Nature ordered great comfortables of snow, and tucked them all in bed for the winter; and Little Pine was exceedingly contented. "I really look nicer than any one else just now," she thought modestly, for she truly felt there was not much to boast about, when her fortune was due to others' misfortune in losing all their beauty.

Days and nights went by in snowy quiet; then one day along came a man with an eager look in his eye. He examined the woods anxiously, but the moment his eye lighted on Little Pine he shouted to his companion: "Hello there, Bill! Don't look any further, I've found the very tree. Come on over here!"

"What a beauty!" said this other person, "as straight as a ramrod and as symmetrical as a pyramid. The very tree!" So he and the other man carried our trembling Little Pine away.

"Goodbye! Goodbye!" she called to all the others.

"You lucky thing!" they called after her, "this is what comes of being sensible all the year round!" And in spite of leafy blankets and snowy quilts they shivered with the cold. But Little Pine was not shivering. Not a bit of it! For the two men carried her indoors, and she thrilled with pride over that. (For only the very best trees ever get indoors, you know.) All night long she leaned in the corner where she had been put, and the air of that house was as balmy as June!

"This is the most delightful experience," she said to the Mahogany Chair nearby, "imagine feeling warm in winter. I see that you belong to the Wood Family, but you have a very curious shape. I think I never saw anything like you before. You make me wish—"

"Oh no," sighed the Chair, "on December 25 every stick of wood in this whole house would rather be the little pine tree, so don't tell me what you wish. Be content to be what you are."

"Correct," muttered the Desk; "once I grew in the forest, too, and although the nicest kind of things get written on me day in and day out, I declare I'd rather be the little pine tree that always stands in the corner on December 25."

"Same here," said the Sofa.

"Second the motion!" chuckled the Mantlepiece.

"Third it!" laughed the Table.

"Fourth it!" grinned the Book-Case.

Indeed, it was all very flattering to Little Pine; for just to look at these descendants of the Wood Family you could tell they were exceedingly high class. "I don't know what it's all about," thought Little Pine, "but I feel sure it was right of me to hold up my head."

Morning came, and the loveliest things happened: A lady and gentleman came in with great boxes of various sizes, and out of those boxes they dressed Little Pine as not a tree in all the woods had ever been dressed! Glistening ropes of silver tinsel were hung round and round her, huge shining balls were hung here and

A Great Course for Men's Classes

ONE of the most interesting and inspiring lists of subjects for men's classes which has come to THE BAPTIST for a long time is that used as the subject of his addresses by Mr. Henry T. Bailey, dean of the Cleveland School of Art, and teacher of the men's class in the East End Church, Cleveland, Ohio. These were delivered beginning in the spring of 1920 and were on the general subject "The Greatest War in History," this being the Christian conquest of the world. The subjects of each of the thirty-six lessons follows:

35. The New Organizations for the Great Victory.
36. The Kingdom of God on Earth; old and new conceptions—what will Cleveland be like in "that day?"

Good character is life, and life can be derived only from some source of life. There you have the whole philosophy of prayer. Prayer is that attitude, that energy, whereby we lay hold upon some source of life and revive and rejuvenate our own spirit. And what a tragedy it is that in this very efficient world of ours we should have left out the one thing that really is efficient, the one thing that brings us into touch with the source of life!

Common, practical things we shrink from. Are we going to think about others, or are we going to be absolutely selfish, merely caring for our own whims or indulgences? That is the way Christ's test comes to us. It is a question whether men and women are actually living in homes, in railway trains as they go about, in shops, and in all their social relationships, under the law of the One who came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give His life, not on the cross only, but every day, for the ransoming of others.

International Uniform Lesson for January 8

ELIJAH THE TISHBITE

1 Kings 17:1-16. Golden Text, Matt. 2:11

Historical Background

Ahab became ruler of the northern kingdom of Israel about 918 B. C. He was the husband of the wicked Jezebel, and, though personally weak, was politically powerful and was employed, under her influence, in destroying Jehovah-prophets. It was in the tenth year of Ahab's reign at the darkest hour that Elijah appeared.

Outline of Lesson

With the simple force characteristic of this rugged prophet, Elijah delivers his message to the inimical Ahab; then the voice that led him to Ahab commands him to "hide himself by the brook Cherith." It was a wild and rocky canon to which he betook himself, but he "did according to the word of Jehovah." There he was fed by the ravens and he drank of the brook until it dried. Then again came the command, this time sending him to Zarephath, a journey of about ninety miles, where he was assured that a widow would sustain him. But, arrived there, he was told by her that she had only a handful of meal and a few drops of oil which she must use for her son and herself or they would die. He bade her first to make a cake for himself and trust that there would be enough left for her sick son and herself, assuring her that "the jar of meal should not waste, neither the cruse of oil fail, until the day that Jehovah should send rain upon the earth." She obeyed "and she and he and her house did eat many days."

Leading Points

(a) Obedience: On the part of Elijah to the directing Voice—a Voice which bade him take the course demanding greatest courage; on the part of the widow who gave the last of her meal to the prophet.

(b) Faith: It requires faith to take one's life in hand as Elijah did in appearing before Ahab. He demonstrated the same faith when he obeyed the command to hide, then to take the long, hard journey of ninety miles from Cherith to Zarephath; and what faith it required on the part of the poor widow to make her last bit of meal into a cake for her guest with her son and herself near the point of starvation!

(c) Reward: In spite of every appearance to the contrary it was a safe thing for Elijah to obey God. He was kept all through the drought that covered the land. Through obedience to the command of the prophet the widow and her son had food for themselves and for their guest through that same period of famine.

UTILIZING OPPORTUNITIES

Gen. 41:14-40; II Cor. 6:1, 2.

Introductory: The Scripture passages deal with two kinds of opportunities: The Genesis passage relates the story of Joseph as the interpreter of Pharaoh's dream. The utilization of this opportunity resulted in the promotion of Joseph from prison to be ruler over Egypt, next to Pharaoh. The Corinthian passage may be classified as presenting the opportunity for salvation. "Now is the day." The utilization of this opportunity lifts one from fellowship with sin and evil to salvation and fellowship with Jesus Christ.

Examples: 1. Daniel from slavery to the premiership of the Babylonian Empire. 2. Abraham Lincoln from the country store to the presidency of the United States. 3. Paul from the Jewish Sanhedrin to be the interpreter of the Saviour of the world. 4. Thomas A. Edison from an inefficient telegraph operator to the position of the world's greatest genius. 5. Henry Ford from a one-horse factory to the position of a great captain of industry.

Through the Church: The church presents today unusual opportunities for development. Indeed, this age is a challenge to every red-blooded young man and woman. We are being called upon for leadership. We are being called upon to re-evaluate things. In this new evaluation we are prouder than ever of our American citizenship, but there is another commonwealth and it is that of God's grace.

"Opportunity"

"They do me wrong, who say I come no more

When once I knock and fail to find you in;

*For every day I stand outside your door,
And bid you wake, and rise and fight and win.*

"Wail not for precious chances passed away,

*Weep not for golden ages on the wane!
Each night I burn the records of the day—
At sunrise every soul is born again!*

"Laugh like a boy at splendors that have sped,

To vanished joys be blind and deaf and dumb;

My judgments seal the dead past with its dead,

But never bind a moment yet to come.

"Though deep in mire, wring not your hands and weep;

*I lend my arm to all who say: 'I can.'
No shamefaced outcast ever sank so deep,
But yet might rise and be a man!*

"Dost thou behold thy lost youth all aghast?

Dost reel from righteous retribution's blow?

Then turn from blotted archives of the past

And find the future pages white as snow.

"Art thou a mourner? Rouse thee from thy spell,

Art thou a sinner? Sins may be forgiven;

Each morning gives thee wings to flee from hell,

Each night a star to guide thy feet to heaven."

WALTER MALONE.

TOO GREAT A RISK

A red lantern is needed; for some of our churches are venturing perilously near a danger-line. God has chosen to link church prayer with church success. The things for which churches exist are promised positively on the condition of united prayer. (Matt. 18:19.) Our clear duty is to magnify this, because our Father wishes to work through us in that way. His method is illustrated in Ezekiel, where he names a score of blessings (typical of what Christian churches need), states that he will bestow them, and then adds: "Yet for this will I be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them." The success of the Christian church is thus conditioned not on work for God, but on prayer to God. Evidently his plan is that united prayer shall be given the pivotal place in church life.

Now we see on all sides an alarming tendency to slight this great essential. With a few notable exceptions, the decline of the prayer-meeting is more and more prevalent. A strong Chicago church, of another denomination, recently voted to discontinue its prayer-meeting, because of "lack of interest." In many of our churches other things are far more strongly emphasized, and attention to them urged.

The devil hates strong prayer-meetings; and his proverbial cunning is shown in the sly ways he has of sapping their vitality. A "dull" prayer-meeting is made the excuse for church members having social gatherings on the meeting night, and so contributing to the "dullness." Sometimes two or three hours preceding the prayer-meeting are occupied with useful and important gatherings in the church building, with the undesigned effect of making the most important meeting of all comparatively insignificant. The children of light need to be careful, lest they play into the hands of the prince of darkness.

THE CHURCH COVENANT

A few weeks ago I was talking with two young men who are members of the Baptist Church, and in my conversation I accidentally alluded to the church covenant. I was greatly surprised to discover they knew nothing about a church covenant, had never read one. They had joined the church without assuming any of the obligations of a covenant relation with the church members.

I have been a reader of the religious press over twenty years and during that time I have taken no notes regarding the church covenant or the covenant meeting before communion. Besides I do not remember of ever hearing or reading a sermon about the church covenant.

I have always had the covenant read by the church members standing at the regular prayer-meeting before communion; or sometimes I have read the covenant Sunday morning just before communion.

I believed the covenant subscribed by an immersed person forms a member of the Baptist Church. And the covenant lived up to by the grace of God adds solidarity to the church by creating the mutual interest which is essential for spiritual growth. The church covenant will again become a useful power in the church when the vital truths of the covenant are emphasized. A series of sermons on the covenant would be a great help in presenting the fundamental truths to the people.

CUI BONO, BROTHERS OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION?

The reports of the past two conventions of the Northern Board have made a bad impression upon us who stand on the firing line in the Far East. We fail to see what good can accrue to the local churches, to the home mission endeavor in America or to the work on the foreign field if the convention continues to exhibit a spirit of mutual suspicion and seeming intolerance.

The "New East" cannot take sides one way or the other. From this distance it would seem that the conservative men have just cause of complaint of not having received due consideration at the hands of the convention. But we are a democratic body and the majority rules. Hitherto, if the writer understands the situation correctly, the selection of men for office or for important committees was made with regard to fitness and ability to serve. If other tests were applied, then reaction was bound to follow.

On the other hand, it is wrong to use orthodoxy as a slogan of rally for power or control. The Baptist denomination is as sound as it ever was and is not inferior to any denomination to meet the present great crisis confronting all Christendom and the whole world. We were curious to know what kind of a "Statement of Belief" the "Fundamentalists" would put over and we were greatly relieved when we read this, for Baptists an almost colorless statement. We do not hesitate to claim that ninety-nine out of every hundred Baptist church members would unhesitatingly subscribe to this statement. We need not worry ourselves to a frazzle because a Brother Baptist, one in a hundred, proves himself to be all wrong. There has always been a richness and variety of opinion and theology among Baptists. If you try to "compel" Baptists they just "won't." Our past history teaches us that we can dispense with creedal statements and investigating committees, but we cannot do our God-given work, as it should and must be done, without mutual love. No group of our great denomination, whether conservative or liberal, so called, can take the entire denomination under its wing and guide our affairs.

It is claimed, and rightly so, that, including the work of our woman's board, the Northern Baptist Convention has the fourth largest foreign missionary society in all the world. That is according to financial standards. Ah yes, but do we hold that position when we apply tests of spiritual force and cultural power and contracts making for larger brotherhood of all mankind? As a matter of fact, the example you brethren of the past two conventions have given us, namely, of "getting after the other fellow" does not help us a whit in the work of building up of the Kingdom of God and, honestly, permit us to say, we doubt whether you are building up the Kingdom in your own surroundings because of these things. For the work of the Kingdom of God is done the other way. That is, it works from the inward to the outward and you and I must get at the "ego" and subject him to an "investigating committee." If that were done there would follow a great "getting together" with one heart and soul to do the Lord's will, which is nothing less than making disciples of all nations.

Baptists in China are up against a greater problem than you are, brethren of the Northern Baptist Convention. We have over a thousand local churches founded and organized according to American (North, and American (South), English and Swedish traditions and customs. Some of our most conservative Baptist missionaries of the southern states are being more and more convinced that all these one thousand and more Chinese local churches must get together in a national convention. But what a variety of theological conviction and local church customs will be represented. The only criterion, however, that will help us to get together will be tolerance and brotherly love. With that as our guide, we must and will win out. And it is a good thing for the foreign missionary that he is broadening. For otherwise the racial instinct of the Chinese will break the fetters of ecclesiasticism and traditions of western local church customs. The Chinese Baptist churches will get together, some day with or without the assistance or even in spite of the Baptist foreign missionary.

The one great unifying institution in China is our Shanghai Baptist College. Words must fail as one tries to tell the story of the possibilities of this institution in getting our Chinese Baptists from all parts of China together. What has Louisville Seminary been for our Southern Baptists in the past? A greater work than even that of the seminary at Louisville remains to be done by our Shanghai College and Seminary. Nor will it do to give the Chinese the impression that the Northern and Southern boards in America are doubting their loyalty to Christ Jesus. These young men demand that they be told honestly and fearlessly what the religious world is thinking. Their faith in Christ is such that no theological thought of any "school" can separate them from Him whom they love and to whom they have surrendered their lives.

In conclusion, brethren, allow us to say: "Get together Baptists of the North and go to it" and finish that World Forward Movement Program. We are not discouraged, we are waiting for you to come up with your ammunition and supplies and reinforcements. Are you going to continue to argue about "fundamentals" and other things and thereby fail in doing the great fundamental thing—giving the word of life to the nations?—The New East (Published jointly in China by the Northern and Southern Baptist Missions).

Further Progress of the Continuation Campaign

By HELEN M. HUDSON

AMID the storm they sang,
And the stars heard and the sea.
The sounding isles of the dim woods rang
To the anthem of the free.

As our Pilgrim fathers and mothers sang as they landed on the stern New England shore, so the women of the Northern Baptist Convention are starting on a praying and singing campaign to raise their share of the $30,000,000. "Faith is the Victory" is echoing from women's missionary meetings all over the country; prayer groups are rapidly being organized. The fact that the amount attempted figures approximately thirteen times what was raised for the Jubilee, the hitherto crowning effort of women's work, is but lending zest to their efforts. In fact the leaders are confident that in this case thirteen is the lucky number. Campaign directors have been secured in almost every district. Those who have already been elected and at work are: Mrs. Orrin R. Judd—New York District; Mrs. Geo. H. Swift—Atlantic District; Mrs. R. L. Hutchinson, Mrs. W. H. Alexander—East Central; Mrs. R. A. Hilton, Mrs. John Nuveen—Central District; Mrs. D. D. Smith—Northwestern District; Mrs. F. L. Miner—West Central District; Mrs. F. I. Smith—Rocky Mountain District; Mrs. V. V. Didrickson—Columbia River.

A glance over this list indicates to a person conversant with our denominational leadership the strength of the personnel. Strong women have also been secured to direct the efforts of the women in the states. As this statement goes to press the acceptance of one woman of duties of director has just been received by telegraph. We know that she has refused the state presidency of the D. A. R. in order to assume the duties of a district director.

The crisis of our denomination and the challenge of the present situation is stirring the hearts of Baptists everywhere, but as usual it is the missionaries who come to the front and show us what real self-forgetfulness means. Mrs. Coleman reported the following incident from her trip to the west:

Miss Viola Hill, of Ningpo, China, now on furlough at her home in Santa Ana, Cal., heard Mrs. Coleman present the continuation campaign in Los Angeles. For two years Miss Hill has been definitely planning to spend her furlough for further study. At the meeting in which the South Pacific District voted to undertake their share of the unpaid balance of the $100,000,000, Miss Hill arose and said she thought the undertaking of the women so great, the meaning of the undertaking so vital and the call to her soul so urgent that if the district board would use her she would gladly relinquish all her hopes of further education and give herself to the work of this campaign. The feeling created by this offer can hardly be expressed. The women decided, however, that they could not accept the offer since it involved Miss Hill's future usefulness to the field, but that they themselves would shoulder the task in a greater spirit of determination and sacrifice.

The World Wide Guild under the slogan "We Will Give" is rallying its forces to raise $50,000. The Children's World Crusade is planning to give miles and miles of dimes, enough they hope to reach the total of $6,000.

In conformity to the general time schedule outlined by the General Board of Promotion the first step of the campaign is the "Pay Up Period"—this to extend from Dec. 1 to Jan. 10. The present financial situation of the denomination has already been stated through the columns of this paper. In view of the situation, however, the first needed step is very clear, for if the money already pledged were paid up to date the societies would be able to meet their regular operating expenses without deficit. We are hoping that several things will happen during this period from now until Jan. 10. First, that the Christmas Spirit of peace and good-will will so permeate the hearts of delinquent payers that they will bring peace both to themselves and to the missionary society by "paying up." Second, that those who go through the Christmas season without paying up will at least wish to start the New Year right by meeting their obligations to the New World Movement. Third, that those who have let the old year pass without paying up will make a New Year's resolution and pay on the spot, and fourth, we hope that during the week of prayer, Jan. 1-8, each Baptist will gain such a sense of his obligation to his Master and to his Master's work that all other stimuli having failed, he will then pay up the amount of his pledge to date.

As stated above we hope these things will happen. We know, however, they will only happen as in each Baptist church there is an aggressive human force filled with a deep sense of the obligation of the church to the missionary enterprise. Is that human force you? If not, why not?

Pittsburgh Laymen Already Organized

By FLOYD L. CARR.

The laymen of Pittsburgh held their tenth annual banquet at McCreery's Restaurant on Friday evening, Dec. 2. Under the name of the Brotherhood of the Pittsburgh Baptist Association, the laymen of Greater Pittsburgh have for ten years been organized for the strengthening of the Baptist interests both local and worldwide. Rev. F. E. Taylor of Indianapolis was heard with keen interest by over 500 guests in an inspiring address on "What Four Men Said to the Preacher—The Soldier, the Judge, the Clubman and the Traveling Salesman." Pittsburgh has no "Social Union" or other similar organization, and the annual banquet of the brotherhood fosters fellowship and acquaintance among the Baptist leaders.

The decision of the laymen at the Indianapolis meeting to undergird the New World Movement with a laymen's organization gives added interest to the working plans of the Pittsburgh Baptist Brotherhood. The Pittsburgh organization is directed by an executive committee of twenty-one members, seven of whom are elected annually to serve for three years by an executive council composed of representatives from the affiliated men's classes. The executive committee meets each Monday noon at the close of the ministers' meeting. The pastors have a standing invitation to attend, and any visiting Baptist leader finds a warm welcome and a sympathetic hearing from both pastors and laymen. The various denominational interests are thus kept before the leaders of the district. The faculty of the Baptist Christian Workers' Institute, held in the Sandusky Street Church Dec. 4-9, was welcomed in a special luncheon on Monday, Dec. 5.

The plans for securing the co-operation of each of the eighty Baptist churches in the Pittsburgh Association will be of general interest. The association is divided into eleven districts, each district being assigned to a member of the executive committee who serves as a supervisor. It is his duty to oversee the deputation and visitation work and to co-operate with the district workers. Each group has three directors—a rally director who prepares for the district rally, a prayer meeting director, who effects the inter-visitation of laymen upon the prayer meetings, and a stewardship director, who fosters the growth of Leagues of Stewards in the churches of his group. These leaders meet at an evening luncheon two or three times each year to report, to formulate plans and to hear outstanding Baptist leaders. On Nov. 22 they were favored with an address upon evangelism by Rev. Arthur B. Strickland, secretary of evangelism for Pennsylvania, and an address upon stewardship by Rev. Frederick A. Agar, efficiency secretary of the Board of Promotion.

A series of district rallies is planned for each fall, in the interest of the brotherhood objectives. Stewardship was the theme of the eleven rallies held last September with the co-operation of the Board of Promotion. Over 1,200 men heard an illustrated address by Rev. Sumner R. Vinton, on "The New Day of World Service," and an inspirational address by Rev. James E. Norcross, upon "New Occasions Teach New Duties." Stewardship pledge cards were circulated for signature at these rallies.

Evangelism is to have its rightful emphasis in an all-day conference planned for early in January, in co-operation with the Pittsburgh Baptist Association. Dr. H. F. Stilwell, national superintendent of evangelism for the Baptist denomination; Dr. George Mahy, national superintendent of evangelism for the Presbyterian denomination, and Rev. Arthur B. Strickland, secretary of evangelism for Pennsylvania, are expected to participate in the conference. Both pastors and laymen will be invited to attend, and it is hoped that the Pittsburgh Association can do its part in attaining the denominational goal of 200,000 baptisms for the year.

The annual meeting of the Pittsburgh Brotherhood will be held the middle of February, in connection with the transcontinental tour of national brotherhood workers. Among the speakers are, William Ward, president of the Baptist Brotherhood of the World, who was heard with great interest by the delegates at Des Moines; Dr. J. Foster Wilcox, director of the Northern Baptist Brotherhood; Dr. Samuel Z. Batten, social service secretary of the American Baptist Publication Society, and Dr. Owen C. Brown, editor of the adult Bible-school publications of our denomination. Afternoon and evening sessions, with a luncheon at six o'clock, are planned by the executive committee.

With its slogan, "Denominational Loyalty," the Pittsburgh Baptist Brotherhood stands ready, fully organized and captained by experienced leaders, to take part in the new Laymen's Movement. It not only has rendered signal service to such local Baptist interests as the Pittsburgh Baptist Home and Orphanage, and association work in all its phases, but also has contributed in no small measure to the success of our national program, under the leadership of such men as Harry Bainbridge, Henry E. Cole and Frank H. Robinson.

Dedication in Detroit

By A. H. FINN.

The new Jefferson Avenue Church—rather the first unit, the Bible school and social building—was dedicated Sunday, Dec. 11. The Bible school at 9:45 a.m. touched a new high mark in attendance, 414. Supt. Walter Mathews is aiming at 1000 before another year.

At eleven a. m. Rev. A. V. Allen, director of religious education of the Detroit Baptist Union and a member of this church, presided at the dedicatory service. Rev. Geo. W. Taft, president of Northern Theological Seminary, Chicago, preached a sermon on "Basic Baptist Principles." Dr. H. C. Gleiss, superintendent of Detroit Union, following a financial statement from the board of trustees, led in raising necessary funds to meet the floating indebtedness and the estimated cost of putting the great gymnasium in commission. About $5,000 was paid or pledged at this first service.

At three p. m. a fellowship service was held when Walter W. Smith, president of the Detroit Union, presided. Short addresses were made by A. H. Finn, secretary Detroit Union; C. J. Netting, chairman building committee of Detroit Union; John A. Matheson, treasurer Detroit Union; Rev. J. S. West, pastor of Beulah; Rev. C. F. Hamilton, of Calvary; Rev. O. W. Johnson, of Swedish Church, and Rev. G. L. Wittel, for many years secretary of the Detroit Union; Dr. Gleiss again presented the financial needs which resulted in a considerable addition to the morning's offerings. The amount now needed is confidently expected to be given or pledged this week.

Jefferson Avenue is the consolidation of the Clinton Avenue and Jefferson branch, the first named crowded out of its old-time location by an influx of Negroes and foreign-speaking people. The property sold and vacated was purchased by the Calvary Negro congregation. The Jefferson Avenue branch of the Woodward Avenue Church was located at Engle Avenue, nearly opposite the car barns in Fairview. Business had made it largely untenable. The property was deeded to the Detroit Union when it was decided to combine the congregations in the newer residential district farther out Jefferson at Lakeview. The property as it stands is worth about $150,000. Plans are out for the auditorium proper to face on Jefferson Avenue and which will cost at least $150,000 more.

Dr. Taft preached before a splendid evening congregation, notwithstanding the rain. The membership was greatly heartened by the ministry of the day.

The women of the churches are launching into the new convention campaign with sanctified intelligence and splendid organization. The reading courses are interesting many new minds and hearts. Two great objectives are before them—the new women's dormitory at Kalamazoo College and the new Polish Christian center in Detroit. Both are greatly needed and the days are too great in number that must intervene before they are realized. Our women believe in prayer and work. God's blessings are sure to follow their united efforts.

Woodland Avenue Church recently had a pay-up Sunday that resulted in over $6,000 of ingathering. Dr. Hoag has in mind a considerable advance for the current year above former subscribing for the New World Movement. The stewardship idea is winning new adherents.

There is a quiet, effective forward movement on at Conley Memorial Church. Pastor Shaw is tireless in personal service to the community and the Bible school is overflowing into the Liberty school, where the church and school met before the present chapel building was erected. This means the auditorium proper will be needed soon.

As predicted weeks ago, the new Temple Church is swinging into a great constructive program. The Bible school has an attendance of approximately one thousand, with a 1,500 objective. Rev. Llewellyn Brown has an efficient complement of officers and helpers. That new church house must come soon.

Rev. James S. West recently celebrated his first anniversary at Beulah. Considering the depressing period the country has been passing through, the achievements of the year are remarkable. Mrs. West is in demand as a vocalist both at Beulah and at city Baptist events.

Under the leadership of Pres. John R. Glading the Detroit City B. Y. P. U. is making new records in attendance, enthusiasm and effective service. The new Jef-erson Avenue union, of which church Bro. Glading is assistant superintendent of the Bible school, and a deacon, has carried off the banner four succeeding months. It is awarded on a point system required for a standard society.

Rochester Alumni in New England

The New England alumni of Rochester Theological Seminary held its annual reunion at the Boston City Club on Dec. 12. All members and guests were the dinner guests of Dr. L. L. Potter of Hartford, Conn. The speakers were Pres. Barbour, Rev. Bernard Clausen, Dr. L. L. Potter and Dr. J. H. Mason. Officers elected were Rev. P. H. McDowell, Melrose, pres.; Rev. H. E. Hodge, Everett, vice-pres.; Rev. N. C. Fetter, Boston, secretary. The following action was taken relative to the death of Dr. Strong:

"The New England Alumni of Rochester Theological Seminary, in annual meeting at Boston, Dec. 12, pause to record the passing from earth to heaven of our beloved leader, forty years president of the seminary, Rev. Augustus H. Strong, at Pasadena, Cal., on Nov. 29, at the grand, ripe age of 85. Our joy in having had him so long and in having loved him so much is even more real than is the sorrow because of his temporary separation from us. His crowning day has come. Union with Christ is his final fulfillment. His great mind and his great heart are at home in the great things of God and of reality. It is our privilege, we who have sat at his feet and have been touched by his spirit, to rejoice that he has gone from living to life, from faith to sight.

"We extend to the loved members of his household our sincere sympathy in their sorrow and we assure Pres. Barbour and the seminary that our hearts are with them under the shadow cast by the death of this the great son, the great servant, the great master of our Alma Mater.

"While we mourn the death of Dr. Strong, we know he lives an ever enlarging life in and with his Saviour and Lord. We can best show our respect for him by giving ourselves in fresh love and new loyalty to Jesus Christ. The faith of his heart and the spirit of his life are truthfully reflected in the closing words of the article just published from his pen, 'The Atonement,' in THE BAPTIST of December 10, 'God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord, Jesus Christ.'"

Community-Service and the Local Church

The weekly church supper, preceding the prayer meeting, of the First Church of Philadelphia, Pa., on Nov. 30, was made the occasion of reports to the church of the community or social service department. Pastor Carter Helm Jones presided and introduced the social service committee of the church, the various workers, the paid staff and volunteer workers, including more than fifty men and women who are making the impact of the church on its neighborhood forcibly felt as they discover and seek to meet the various needs of the people. Many professional social workers and students from the training school were present. Secy. Rolvix Harlan of the Home Mission Society brought a brief address on "The Church Saving the Community," and had as his text Phil. 3:20—"We are a colony of heaven." More than 250 members of the church were present and having discovered it was the pastor's birthday, presented him with a beautiful bouquet as a token of full esteem and devotion.

In the prayer meeting that followed the supper the lecture room was filled and by a coincidence the address of Secy. Harlan was on "Can Europe Turn the Corner?" He dealt with the troubles and perplexing conditions in Central Europe, especially in Germany and Czecho-Slovakia. Dr. W. W. Keen read a request of the Foreign Mission Board to the church to release Dr. Jones for a period of six or eight weeks, as it is hoped to have him and Dr. Taylor of Indianapolis make a visitation to Czecho-Slovakia to address our Baptist churches and congregations, to bring encouragement and to present the evangelistic appeal. The splendid guidance and sound missionary policy of our leaders in Czecho-Slovakia will prepare the way for these brethren. Their visit and service will come at a most opportune time and will put our work forward in the new republic of Central Europe, as perhaps no other kind of co-operation at this time could.

A church which supports a ministry and message of the gospel which warms the heart, informs the intellect and convinces the judgment and then enlists the will of the people in community service, votes unanimously, of course, to co-operate in this wider service of the kingdom in the interest of missions and world brotherhood.

REV. G. F. D. VANDER MEI is stated supply at Immanuel Church, Bellingham.

MISS HARRIET DITHRIDGE, who has had a number of years' experience in kindergarten work in Japan, is conducting a Japanese kindergarten in Seattle under the auspices of the Seattle Baptist Union.

FERNDAL: REV. T. W. HARRIS and his people were assisted three weeks in special meetings beginning Nov. 7, by Rev. N. J. Barnes, of Sedro-Woolley. It proved a gracious season of outpouring of the Holy Spirit. There was not only a revival of the members of the church, but sixteen professions of acceptance of Christ. Sixteen candidates were baptized Dec. 4.

VANCOUVER: REV. J. C. WETTERHAHN, pastor, began special evangelistic meetings Nov. 27, after a week of daily prayer-meetings held in different parts of the city. The revival began, however, before the special meetings. On Nov. 20 five members were received by letter and seven persons as candidates for baptism. On Nov. 27 two were received by letter and one as a candidate for baptism. Two others expressed their desire to become Christians. Seven candidates were baptized Sunday evening, Dec. 4. All departments of the church are active. Thanksgiving morning a large number of young people went to different sections of the city, sang songs at the homes of the sick and shut-ins, then returned to the church for a morning prayer-meeting.

REV. L. L. CLOYD, after nearly forty years in the ministry, with the closing of his pastorate with Immanuel Church of Bellingham, retired from active ministry. He graduated from the Morgan Park Seminary in 1885, though he began his ministry before that time and has been in the work continuously since. His pastorates have been in Green Bay and Superior, Wis., De Kalb, Savanna and Sycamore, Ill., Hastings, Neb., Aberdeen, Tacoma, Blaine, Seattle and Bellingham, Wash. Mr. Cloyd has been a faithful pastor and minister, greatly beloved by his parishioners and fellow-ministers. Mention should also be made of Mrs. Cloyd, who in all his ministry wrought with him to advance the cause of Christ. Mr. and Mrs. Cloyd will make their home in Seattle and he hopes, as his health will permit him, to render some service as pulpit supply.

Pastor Byler has received several new members into Curran and Lot churches and Rev. W. J. Spiers is rendering splendid service on the Kilmaster circuit. Tawas and Reno have received several members as a result of meetings conducted by Evangelist A. N. Fields.

THE SEMI-CENTENNIAL of First Church, Battle Creek, was celebrated in a picturesque program, arranged by Miss Mary Curtis. The pageant, "Bearers of Light," consisted of six episodes in the history of the church, beginning with the early days when Indians peered in the windows. Each episode of the church was vividly portrayed—even the prayer meeting of long ago with the lantern bearer who furnished the light for reading the songs. The church was organized in 1838 when Battle Creek was the village of Milton.

KALAMAZOO COLLEGE is rendering a state service through its teams for evangelistic and missionary propaganda. They are available from Friday night over Sunday, and may be secured by communicating with the Extension Department.

REV. FREDERICK AGAR, of New York, spent several days in Lansing, with First Church. Many delegates were present from nearby churches. The First, Olivet and North churches had every-member canvass with excellent reports. During the present depression, many pledges from the "tollers" were increased—sometimes doubled and more. "Stewardship" is becoming operative in many hearts and lives. Rev. C. W. Kemper has preached forceful sermons along this line and carried on an extensive and intensive propaganda with paying results.

MR. FRED AMBLER who has been serving the church at Napoleon for several months was ordained to the gospel ministry Nov. 29. Forty-seven delegates, representing nineteen churches of the Jackson Association, comprised the council. Rev. C. L. Doyle was chosen Moderator; Dr. Hartzog, clerk. The ordination sermon was preached by Rev. E. M. Rhodes; charge to church given by A. E. Hayes; charge to candidate by Rev. S. J. Hall; prayer of ordination by Rev. H. W. Mack.

A PROGRAM with big objectives has been adopted by First Church of Jackson, Rev. E. M. Rhoades, minister. The people seem to have caught the vision of our Lord for the first clause commits them to support the great missionary enterprises. The Sunday school is bounding ahead in enrollment, and the people have a mind to work for the unsaved and unfortunate at home.

THE PASTOR of First Church, Lansing, Rev. C. W. Kemper, has just finished his second year of work during which time 201 new members have been received, not including about fifty received into North and Olivet. These two organizations now have an efficient pastor for each field.

The first edition of the "Book of Remembrance" is exhausted. A second edition will be printed but only enough to supply orders. Only orders received at the literature bureaus by Jan. 9 will be filled. Copies cannot be guaranteed after that date. Order your copies at once from 276 Fifth Ave., New York City, or from nearest literature bureau.

Next Door Neighbors

BY HELEN B. MONTGOMERY.

O, have you read Margaret Applegarth's collection of delectable tales called "Next Door Neighbors"? If you haven't, trot right down to the book-store and buy a copy of the jolliest, homiest, Christmasy book of stories that you ever read. They are just meant to read aloud or to tell, and at every story your heart will open a little wider until at last it just bursts with love for all the neighbors, big and little, young and old, quaint and lonely that there are in this big America of ours.

Really, she is a genius, that Margaret Applegarth, a genius who is consecrated to the Kingdom of God. Where she might use her youth, her fancy and her charm to win much fame and more money for herself, she delights to pour all out in the service of missions and the church. The very least we can do is to appreciate her and thank God for her and buy all her books and circulate them in every Sunday school in the land and give them for Christmas presents to all our friends. Here are Jewish, Polish, Italian, Bohemian, Chinese and Japanese neighbors; here are Negroes and Mountaineers and Indians, Alaskans and Latin Americans—Miss Applegarth gathers them all about the camp fire of her fancy and tells about all of them stories that take us straight into their hearts.

THE BAPTIST reprints one of the Christmas stories entitled "Please Do Not Open Till Christmas," to give you all a taste that will make you long for more. "Next Door Neighbors" is published by Revell and costs $1.25.

The author has chosen an interesting epoch for her story—the colorful life in old California when that great stretch of sea-coast and inland plain was still a dependency of Spain. The story has to do with the noble love of the Spanish governor for a waif, who is marooned ashore from a tramp vessel, and adopted into his family; complications arise with the coming of a young man from Boston when the girl is in the early twenties. The book ends with the departure of the young wedded couple for Boston with the blessing of all. We are given glimpses of the Indian workers under the tutelage and Chimneysmoke, by Christopher Morley; New York: Geo. H. Doran Co.

This volume, which has as a sub-title, "Lyrics for Households of Two or More," is an attempt to give a worthy setting to Morley's best-loved poems. It is a volume of friendly poems about common things. Some of the author's lighter verse is included, but the greater part of it centers about a man's love for his home. Your heart warms to the poems for they are human and homely. The book is beautifully illustrated by Thomas Fogarty, making it a particularly appropriate gift book.

Famous Leaders of Industry, second series, by Edwin Wildman; Boston: The Page Co., $2.

Another book of life stories of boys who have succeeded. There is a picture and a sketch of each of twenty-eight men, among whom are Glen Curtiss, G. W. Goethals, H. C. Hoover, L. K. Liggett, F. A. Munsey, T. V. Vall and Wm. Wrigley, Jr. A most wholesome and stimulating book for a boy, one of the kind which parents will delight to put into his hands. Men learn from doing and from doers; why not stimulate the boy with stories of men who have really done things?

"It Is to Laugh"

When mother entered the nursery she found Muriel in tears, and in response to her inquiry the child explained:

"We were playing at weddings, and Paul threw rice all over me."

"You shouldn't cry for a small thing like that. It's to bring luck to the bride."

"But," protested Muriel, still sniffing, "what he used was in the pudding."—Disston Crucible.

One Sunday morning we took our little four-year-old girl to the Methodist church, says a Burnside, Iowa, correspondent, where she witnessed for the first time their way of baptizing. Several people were taken into the church, among them some babies. In our cave was an incubator almost ready to "hatch," and as the custom was some water was sprinkled on the eggs, to improve the "hatch." This was done on this particular Sunday morning after church. And as usual the little girl was right at her daddy's heels through the whole procedure. Coming up out of the cave, she thoughtfully put forth this query: "Daddy, when those chickens hatch will they be Methodist chickens?"

there like monstrous rubies or tremendous emeralds. Strings of popcorn like pearl necklaces were laid along her arms, and gilded figures hung from every branch. Little Pine hardly dared breathe for fear some of this ravishing beauty might fall, and when little colored candles were placed at the tip of every arm she felt no higher glory could come to her. But it did! Oh yes, indeed it did! For on the very tip-top of her slender straightness they placed a dear gold star. It was something unbelievable!

"I've touched the stars!" she whispered, "oh, at last! At last! I've seen you shining over me, all year, but I never dreamed that by holding up my head and making the best of my old suit I should actually touch a star! And please, what star are you, anyhow?"

The Star whispered gently: "Oh Pine, I'm the Little Star That Came and Stood Over Where the Young Child Lay!"

"I have heard of you," the little tree answered, reverently, "Oh how I pray I may be worthy to have you rest on top of me this night. I did not realize before that this was—Christmas."

"And you are a Christmas Tree!" said the Bright Red Packages; but before they could say another word the door was opened and the children scampered in: Timothy, Bill and Peggy, with their mother and their father and the good, old Agony.

"It's the boo'fullest little twee that ever ever was!" sighed Timothy, in ecstasy, his hands clasped in high excitement.

"It's so straight," said mother, approvingly.

"And I love the way it holds the star," said Peggy.

"We knew when we saw it that it was the only tree in the wide, wide world for us, didn't we, Dad?" asked Bill.

"I reckon it's the Christmas-iest I'll pine tree what ever done stand in dis here house!" chuckled dear old Agony.

And Little Pine touched the star in cheerfulest thanksgiving!

OUR MUSIC CORNER

WILLIAM LESTER

TO THE CHOIR MEMBER.

If you have been invited to sing in the choir, consider the honor of the position. You are taking an active part in leading the service of song.

Be punctual at rehearsals. Much time is lost in going over things again for the benefit of late comers.

When arriving, do not always wait for the leader to greet you first. Show that you are as pleased to see him as he is to have you there.

Do not feel slighted if he seems preoccupied. He has the responsibility of the musical service on his mind and he is thinking chiefly of that.

When he calls for order before beginning do your part in becoming attentive.

Do not grumble at what he selects. Remember he has many to please; do your part with the new compositions taken up and they won't seem tedious or "dry."

Watch your part carefully and follow the leader's baton. Although rests are not to be sung, neither are they to be ignored.

Don't wait for your neighbor to sing first. All must watch for a given beat if the start is going to be good.

Don't think only of the music. There are also words to be interpreted. Feel that you are telling something; if the anthem be in the nature of a prayer, feel that you are making a prayer.

Do not think of other things when singing; it is fatal to sincerity of expression.

If the organ has an interlude or the other parts come in alone, do not take your eyes off the music. You may not be ready when your turn comes.

Do not try to outstep some one else. The loudest voices do not always possess the best carrying power.

H. C. HAMILTON in The Gospel Choir.

MUSIC REVIEW

From J. Fischer & Bro., 7-11 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

A Shepherd's Song—Gaines ($15).

Fantasy on a Russian Folk-Song—Gaines ($35).

Above are listed the titles of two of the most interesting choral numbers the present reviewer has seen for a long time. The first-named is the more usual—a well-written and effective setting of the well-known Marlowe text, the music laid out for chorus of mixed voices. Appropriate color is given by the effective touches of modal harmony but never at the expense of vocal ease. An ad-libitum piano accompaniment is provided for rehearsal use. The second number listed is a more pretentious work, for four-part chorus of women's voices, violin solo, and piano. It is, as the title states, a series of musical pictures holding up to us the life of old Russia, a genuine peasant's holiday. Mr. Gaines has made masterful use of a distinctive Russian folk-tune, and his own original contributions do not pale when compared to this. The vocal difficulties of the number are not portentous and the choral work will well-repay careful treatment. A word of commendation should be given the publisher for the splendid edition which had been issued.

From Boosey & Co., 9 East 17th Street, New York, N. Y.

Husheen—Needham-Salter ($15).

The Barefoot Trail—Wiggers-Taylor ($15).

A couple of usable, well-made, two-part songs, versions of well-tried successes as solo songs. They are both tuneful, easy to do, scaling no musical heights, but good honest music set to healthy sentimental lyrics. Valuable as relief numbers on a choral program or for Sunday-school concerts. With the two copies came a very interesting and conveniently arranged catalogue of the issues of this well-known firm, listing numbers by many of the best composers—Elgar, Parry, Lucas, Ferrari, Stanford, etc.

From the A. P. Schmidt Co., Boston, Mass.

O'er the World in Silence Sleeping—Harris ($12).

O Come, Let Us Adore Him—Calver ($12).

Arise, Shine, O Jerusalem—Dicks ($12).

Three effective anthems for Christmas use, all very practical as to difficulty—or rather, ease—melodious and churchly in mode. The first is choral in form, with splendid part-writing and an effective independent organ part; it has no solo sections; a noble anthem in the classic English church style. The second is a conventional "praise-anthem," not of any great originality nor ease of statement; best adapted for chorus choir use, where bigness and baldness of outline and a swinging tempo and rhythm are the chief essentials. The Calver anthem is a better type of a work; a poetic pastorale movement for tenor or baritone solo, followed by a joyous choral section, which in turn is interrupted by a tenor recitative, closing with a full version of Adestes Fideles. A most valuable and interesting anthem for general church use.

From Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago, Ill.

It came upon the midnight clear—McDuffee ($.60 net).

A simple setting of the familiar Sears text, easy vocally, with a fluent accompaniment seemingly conceived for the organ. To me the song lacks some of the joyous lift usually embodied in songs written for such a festival time as Christmas; but where stark simplicity is the requisite factor in the choice of a song, this simple lay is to be well recommended. It is issued in one key—for medium voice; a few alternative high notes are suggested for those high voices that want to adventure into the clouds.

From J. Fischer Bro., New York, N. Y.

Song of the "Mush On"—Rhys-Herbert ($.60 net).

A real "man's" song by the late popular composer of Minneapolis. It is easy to sing, and easy to listen to. Published in two keys, and choral versions.

By J. Y. AITCHISON, General Director

The following table shows that the average monthly income on New World Movement funds for the first seven months of the fiscal year has been $464,740.86. This is $576,925.80 less than the amount required to take care of the monthly budgets of all participating organizations. The entire income for the first seven months was $4,038,480.60 less than the outgo. Should the present rate of income and outgo continue to the end of the year it would result by April 30, 1922, in a deficit on the current year's budget of $6,923,109.60.

Invariably the income during the last five months of the fiscal year is much greater than during the first seven months. We are confident the income will increase steadily month by month from now until the end of the year.

The board of promotion reported at Des Moines pledges to the New World Movement aggregating $48,724,510. $14,872,922.65 had been paid previous to May 1, leaving unpaid pledges at the beginning of this fiscal year amounting to $33,851,587.27. It is estimated that at least one-third of this amount will be due by April 30, 1922, namely, $11,283,862.42. $2,834,538.71 was paid during the first seven months of this year or 25.15 per cent. This leaves a balance of $8,449,323.92 yet due by April 30, 1922.

CITY MISSION SOCIETIES

At Indianapolis the city mission organizations readily agreed that there should be cake for no one until there is bread for everyone not only in our own family group, the city mission societies, but in the larger denominational family. Accordingly through a painful process of surrender one society has yielded to another so that there may be justice for all. The group as a whole has reduced its askings for the current year approximately one-half (51 per cent) of what would have been received had the New World Movement come to full success. It is receiving payment on the basis of three-fourths of this reduced figure which involves no little hardship for most of the societies. Moreover it has been difficult to explain why specific definite items of work contemplated and commonly known within the cities had to be put in the deferred class, that is, put off for a more favorable time. Nothing short of full success can save the city situation.

How This Will Affect the Cities Concerned: Cities Having Separate Budgets in the New World Movement

San Francisco says: Two churches cannot invite another scholar to Sunday school because of lack of room, and three other buildings are little better than shacks.

St. Louis says: All advanced work is being discouraged. Practically everyone of our mission churches is asking for increased appropriations on the ground of unemployed men and reduced salaries of those who are working.

Chicago says: Three newly organized churches are in immediate need, a most successful Polish and Roumanian congregation have no meeting place except rented quarters.

Pittsburgh says: With 100 per cent of the expected amount we can little more than mark time. With a receipt of 75 per cent our work will be greatly handicapped. Our advanced work, unless more of the $100,000,000 is pledged and secured, will have to be given up. It is indeed a crisis.

Philadelphia says: The 75 per cent cut makes it impossible to meet the salary for directors of religious education. We will have to reduce our present force of missionaries. Two places where community centers are badly needed, one promised, will have to be abandoned.

Buffalo says: On the 75 per cent basis we shall eke out a hand-to-mouth existence with no possibility of provision for a strong Baptist future.

Brooklyn says: With a relatively small current expense budget there is no serious embarrassment at this point, but must withhold aid from churches and Christian centers and refrain from establishing new churches in growing communities until funds for advanced work are available.

New York says: With a heavy current expense budget the society must incur a heavy indebtedness this year for build-

Full payment of an amount equivalent to 100 per cent of what is due this year on pledges, viz: $11,283,862.42 plus the anticipated income from matured annuities, legacies and invested funds, viz: $800,000 would provide a total income for the year of $12,083,862.42.

The time for concerted action has come. The denominational papers for the last few weeks have given full information concerning the critical financial situation confronting us. We are confident that Northern Baptists will hear and heed these appeals. Several states have reported a decided increase in the amount collected on pledges during the month of December.

The history of Christian missions shows in times of adversity that financial support is in inverse ratio to what it is in times of financial prosperity. Faith wins its greatest victories under financial depression. The returns of the next few weeks will prove in unmistakable measure the value Northern Baptists place upon the work being done by our representatives in all fields.

We ask all our people to co-operate heartily in the effort to secure the full amount due on pledges during the pay-up-period culminating January 10. Participating organizations should have the funds needed without being obliged to borrow additional sums.

"Now brothers, I have to tell you about the grace God has given to the churches of Macedonia. Amid a severe ordeal of trouble, their overflowing joy and their deep poverty together have poured out a flood of rich generosity; I can testify that up to their means, aye, and beyond their means, they have given—begging me of their own accord, most urgently, for the favor of contributing to the support of the saints. They have done more than I expected; they gave themselves to the Lord, to begin with, and then (for so God willed it) they put themselves at my disposal.... It is to your interest to go on with this enterprise, for you started it last year. You were the first not merely to do anything but to want to do anything. Now carry it through, so that your readiness to take it up may be equalled by the way you carry it through."—II Cor. 8:1-5; 10:12. (Moffatt's Translation.) ing alterations on mission properties already under contract. It has nothing whatever for any advanced work as projected in the budget and awaited with eager expectation, and can take advantage of no strategic opportunity. The city, in its growth, rushes on. We cannot join in the progress.

Replies from other standard city mission societies have been delayed.

Expectations aroused but not satisfied make for discouragement and loss of morale. This is one of the most serious aspects of our present denominational situation everywhere. It is peculiarly serious in our great cities from which so large a percentage of funds for future advance must come. Dr. Dutton, of Buffalo, says: "There is increased dissatisfaction and embarrassment in churches and missions, with miserable equipment, who gave liberally to the New World Movement with the reasonable expectation that necessary aid would be forthcoming during the five-year period. This results in slow payment, and an atmosphere of making approach for the rest of the $100,000,000 exceedingly difficult."

Expectant missionaries on a thousand fields—in jungle, in heathen city, on western plain, in the wayside parish, and in great cities:

"Where cross the crowded ways of life,
Where sound the cries of race and clan"
Expectant missionaries! Shall we deny them?

In behalf of the Standard City Mission Societies,
CHARLES H. SEARS.

STATEMENT OF CONDITIONS OF SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

On the basis of survey percentages the schools and colleges should have received May 1 to Oct. 31, 1921 .....	$5,545,965.00
Their actual receipts have been May 1 to Oct. 1, 1921. ....	2,844,037.00
The amount which has been held back from schools and colleges in the interest of every organization in the Northern Baptist Convention, except Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Fund .....	2,701,928.00

When the New World Movement began, the schools took courage because their needs were recognized by Northern Baptists as a part of the denominational organization obligation. When difficulties came in financing our national and state societies because only half of the hundred million was subscribed, the schools and colleges consented temporarily for the first year to receive half of their expectations. They were willing to share with the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board the privilege of helping the other organizations. They did this because they felt they were part of the Baptist body. Their necessities should now be recognized. The educational institutions cannot go forward without the gifts, sympathy and prayers of Northern Baptists.

The schools desire that Baptists shall understand the difficulties and humiliations through which they have passed by reason of the small receipts from the New World Movement fund during the first half of this year, and the distress that has come to the servants of the church of Christ. What happens to a college that receives $4,313, when the Baptists of the Northern Convention have pledged it $22,500—this for the first six months of this year? This is what happened: The faculty had to wait for its salary; the college has not been able to keep contracts with employees or city merchants; the coal bill has not been paid; the borrowing power of the college is gone, and it is at the mercy of its creditors. These servants of ours ask how they can give religious training in a situation of this kind. The trustees of the colleges in this strait say the deficit is not of their making: they counted on the Baptists of the Northern Convention. The Baptists for the moment have forgotten their obligation, but they are not going to desert the schools in this emergency. Two of our schools reopened this fall; they counted on the denomination's pledge. One of them had the right to expect $30,000 for the year. The first six months it received $2,959. Another of these reopened schools had the right to expect from the denomination $71,000 for the year's receipts; for six months they had $7,022 from the New World Movement. These schools represent the extreme necessity, and there are others in similar condition. Every school in the New World Movement expected to render a larger service because of the New World Movement. For some it is life or death in the immediate future. Other schools which we count as more firmly established meet this day also as a crisis. Many of our colleges have received pledges of conditional gifts from the general education board totaling millions of dollars. What a tragedy if the failure of the Baptists to pay pledges should result in the loss of this money to these colleges and to our program. But more important than the millions of conditional gifts is the expectancy of the college and of the people of the college constituency that the college shall go forward. A school cannot stand still, it must grow or shrivel.

On the basis of full payment of pledges already made our school can be maintained and many of them strengthened, and the whole program of the denomination will receive the benefit that should come from a system of church schools. When the hundred million is paid we will have made a great Baptist contribution to the Christian college system of America. GEORGE R. BAKER, Acting Secretary, Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention.

THE STATE CONVENTIONS

The work of the State Conventions is fundamental and comprehensive, dealing with the local churches, from which the contributions must come for maintaining a world-wide work. In dealing with the work of our State Conventions, we are reaching the course of denominational life.

Coming to the more specific missionary work of the State Conventions, we find that there are 253 state evangelists or missionary workers, covering the entire area of the thirty-five states. These are the cutting edge of State Convention enterprises. The thirty-five State Conventions are aiding in the support of 1,446 churches incapable of self-support, churches whose doors might be closed but for this help. These evangelists and missionary workers make possible an intensive campaign of evangelism throughout the states. The total amount appropriated by State Conventions out of their current budget for the aid of local churches is $403,538.00.

Apart from the splendid work which is being done by standard city mission societies, there are 109 missions to new Americans. The appropriations made for this work total $165,390.00. If the amount to meet the current budget of the State Conventions is not raised, this work must be curtailed. It ought to be greatly increased. If America is to become Christian and remain Christian, the gospel must be preached to the new Americans. To this task, in connection with the two home mission societies, the State Conventions are committed. If the vast foreign population in America cannot be converted to a faith in pure Christianity, missionary work the world over will suffer.

The activities of State Conventions may be summed up as follows: the cultivation of high Christian ideals, helping in the support of pastors and maintaining missionary activities in English-speaking churches; the evangelism of new Americans; assisting in the maintenance of churches and gospel centers for the large negro population; developing and maintaining religious and missionary education; creating an atmosphere for evangelism and maintaining a high quality of

The world is a sphere of suffering and, until it is remade from base to summit, no one can deny that it will continue to be what it is. But the aim of fine manhood should be to make it so strong that it can stand the utmost strain. Again I say the end is not suffering but victory, though of a sort that can be achieved only through suffering. Nothing less is worthy of men who are sons of God. It behooves us to suffer that we may enter into our glory. —CHARLES H. BRENT.

evangelistic activity wherever possible. In addition, the State Conventions cooperate with our great missionary societies and educational institutions in securing support for sacrificial Christian undertakings, at home and abroad, and in raising the necessary funds for financing our great denominational work.

The fund must be provided to meet the operating budgets of these state conventions if they are to continue their basic work. Owing to the increased cost of doing all forms of missionary work, many of these state conventions, in common with our great national missionary societies, have been compelled to run in debt. These debts must be paid and current budgets met. This can be done only as we realize 100 per cent on pledges already made to the New World Movement and secure greatly increased amounts in new subscriptions.

Prayer Points for Illinois
Women

Under the leadership of Mrs. W. P. Topping, of Elgin, Illinois women are getting into the continuation campaign. In promoting the work Mrs. Topping has brought out a folder which deserves attention. Under the same caption as this news item it urges the women to pray for one topic as given each day for ten days and then to repeat during the nine ten-day periods of Jan.-March. It is suggested also that groups meet for this purpose. The keynote of all is "With trust in the Lord, faith in the victory, Illinois Baptist women will pray it through—pay it through." Then ten prayer points follow:

I. I will pray with faith—That Illinois' Share ($2,500,000) in the Continuation Campaign for the $100,000,000 Fund be subscribed before May 1st, 1922.

II. I will pray with faith—That the amount asked of the women of Central District ($750,000) be subscribed by May 1st, 1922.

III. I will pray with faith—That the amount we, as Illinois Baptist Women, have assumed ($500,000) be subscribed by May 1st, 1922.

IV. I will pray with faith—That one-third of that amount ($170,000) may be joyfully given, and sent by local treasurer to State Promotional Director, Dr. A. E. Peterson, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, by May 1st, 1922.

V. I will pray with faith—For the leaders in the Campaign, National, District, State, Associational, Local, that they may have wisdom, courage, strength to achieve.

VI. I will pray with faith—For the missionaries in Foreign Lands and in the Home Land. (Refer to "The Book of Remembrance" and leaflet, "Missionaries of Central District.")

VII. I will pray with faith—That I may realize my own responsibility, that I may lovingly help each woman, young woman and girl in my own church, to realize her responsibility.

VIII. I will pray with faith—That each Illinois Baptist woman will consider her "Individual Blessings" and "Individual Responsibilities" and thankfully give in a manner that will properly represent her before God.

IX. I will pray with faith—For the young people of my own church that they will take Christ as their leader, and give their lives to definite Christian service.

X. I will pray with faith—That my own church may get the vision of the world's need and "measure up" to the goal set before us.

Fresh from the Field

Letters have been received by officers of the Foreign Mission Society which tell something of the splendid reception accorded Secy. J. C. Robbins and his wife upon their arrival in Burma early in October. A few days after their arrival the annual meeting of the Burma Convention was held, which was attended by 3,200 registered delegates. While this attendance is large, it is hardly exceptional. The annual meeting of Baptists in Burma is one of the largest assemblies of actual delegates from churches to be found anywhere in the world.

Rev. E. S. Stucker, of Ottawa, Kans., will have Mr. Lee Lewis of Baldwin as singer in his meetings after Jan. 1. A meeting is planned for the First Church, Colorado Springs, Colo., Jan. 29-Feb. 12, but other dates are yet open.

Mrs. Sarah Kirkham, widow of Rev. O. C. Kirkham, who died in 1914 after fifty years in the Baptist ministry, died on Dec. 17 at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. M. Leslie, in Clinton, Iowa. She was born in Hoosick, N. Y., Nov. 26, 1834, and married in 1860. Two children survive, James, of New Orleans, and the daughter mentioned. Burial was in Tiskilwa, Ill.

Associate Secretary Lippard expected to spend Christmas with Rev. Olivia Brouillette in the devastated regions of Northern France, when large bales of clothing for women and children, the supplies of soap and the barrels of toys were to be opened for distribution.

Rev. W. L. Donnelly, of Mokence, Ill., has accepted a call to the Ridgewood Church of Joliet and will begin his work on Jan. 8, as the successor to Rev. J. Brainerd Brown who has gone to Petersburg, Ill.

In a recent issue announcement was made of the resignation of Rev. W. L. Brandon, pastor at Braymor, Mo. On Dec. 11, with a large congregation present, the church recalled him for another year with an increase in salary, and to the joy of his people he has consented to remain.

Dr. Arthur S. Phelps who has been supplying the First Church, San Francisco, for the past fifteen months, became preacher at the White Temple (First Church), Portland, Ore., beginning with Christmas Sunday.

Dr. Geo. E. Burlingame is filling dates in Minnesota as follows: Dec. 21-29, Richfield, Minneapolis; Jan. 1-20, American and Danish churches, Albert Lea; Jan. 22-Feb. 12, Calvary, Minneapolis; Feb. 15-Mar. 5, Owatonna.

Mr. Samuel S. Nickerson, of Sugar Hill, N. H., has a writing guide for the blind. It is a piece of leatherboard with indented lines, which act as a guide that the writing lines may be kept straight. This has the approval of the Perkins Institute. Mr. Nickerson desires the pleasure of giving this to all ministers or members of their family who need such a device.

The reports at the annual meeting of Baptists in Czecho-Slovakia, held in October, indicated a very successful year's work on the part of the struggling churches. Within the twelve months immediately preceding, the membership of the churches increased from 1700 to 2300. In Latvia a similar record has been made by our denominational kinsmen in spite of all the suffering which they have endured in recent years. Commissioner J. H. Rushbrooke, who has just returned to London after visiting Latvia and other Baltic states, has written that there have been 600 additions to the Baptist churches in Latvia alone during the last year.

Circling the Globe with Prayer

PLANS have been completed for circling the globe with a week of Prayer from Jan. 1 to 7. Christians around the world will join in the call to special prayer.

For three-quarters of a century it has been the custom of evangelical churches to join in special periods of prayer on common subjects. This year, owing to the Washington Conference, the Week of Prayer will probably be more widely observed than ever before. The call in this country was issued by the Commission on Evangelism and Life Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, which annually since 1916 has co-operated with the World Evangelical Alliance, with headquarters in London, in arranging for the service of prayer. Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, president of Princeton Theological Seminary, is chairman and Dr. Charles L. Goodell, secretary of the commission.

Word has been received that the Week of Prayer will be observed this year not only by England and the countries of Europe and America, but also in the colonies of the United States and Great Britain and in the mission fields of China and Japan, with special services at Peking, Calcutta and Jerusalem. Throughout the world the Y. M. C. A. the Y. W. C. A. and similar organizations will co-operate.

The Week of Prayer has special significance in many churches, as it marks the opening of their evangelistic services. Wednesday, Jan. 4, will be specially observed because it is the day set apart for prayer for the nations and their leaders. There is also a period on this day for prayer "that the press of the world may be used to establish truth and justice." The worldwide call to the Week of Prayer says in part:

"A world situation of great complexity still must be faced. A new world is being born. East and West the nations of the earth are in turmoil and trouble. There is deep social unrest, severe economic difficulties and widespread distress. Nation has risen against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; there have been famines and earthquakes in divers places.

"At such a time we need to come very humbly to our Lord with the petition that He will 'teach us how to pray.' We cannot be content with words and forms; we need the right spirit and the gift of power.

"During the past year there has been worldwide inquiry amongst the disciples of Christ as to the possibility of closer outward and visible unity. We have found that many practical difficulties beset the path of those who are most anxious to find the right way, but prayer will be answered.

"Meanwhile we rejoice that we can unite wholeheartedly in bowing at the Throne of Grace. We remember that special promises are given with respect to united prayer. We live busy lives, but careful husbandry of our time will give us full opportunity not only for secret waiting on God, but for coming together with one heart and one mind to make our requests known to Him."

Upon the occasion of his visit to the Sona Bata station of the Congo mission, Secretary Lerrigo found a notable revival in progress. Already a thousand people in the vicinity of the Sona Bata station had in recent weeks accepted Christ as Saviour. This news should stir our people to fresh enthusiasm for our mission in West Central Africa.

There has just been placed in the stereopticon depository at 125 No. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, a new stereopticon lecture entitled "Special Interests of the Children's World Crusade." Anyone who desires it should write to the above address. It is a fine lecture prepared by Miss Mary Noble.

Associate Secretary W. B. Lippard has cabled the Foreign Mission Society of the safe delivery at Danzig and at Libau of all the large quantities of supplies which left New York Nov. 23 on the S. S. Esthonia for distribution in Poland, Latvia, Lithuania and Russia. The representatives of various sections, who met Mr. Lippard at Danzig and Libau, are now busily engaged in shipping the supplies to various parts of their countries for distribution before or during the Christmas season. Mr. Lippard cabled that in some of the countries the railways would probably transport the supplies without charge. A thoroughly good impression seems to have been made by the announcement that, although in most of the countries, except Russia, the supplies will be distributed through our own denominational agencies, attention is to be given to those who are in greatest need, regardless of racial, political or religious differences.

Singing evangelist Wm. S. Dixon, of Wheaton, Ill., assisted in a campaign in Joliet in September. From there he was one of the helpers in a simultaneous campaign in Duluth, Minn., where eight Baptist churches united in four centers at the same time, with outside singers and evangelists. He then assisted in Ottumwa, Iowa, being his second campaign in that city in nine months. He is now in a stirring campaign in Mt. Pleasant, Iowa.

At the meeting of the N. Y. state board of promotion, held in Syracuse Nov. 28-29, the director, Rev. R. E. Farrier, reported that while one year ago there were 611 contributing churches, this year there are 740 contributing, or 93½ per cent of the churches which have services. Last year the churches paid in cash five times the amount of the total apportionments of the churches in 1917-18. For the first four months of this year, the payments have been 82 per cent of last year. 292 churches have gone over the top. Of the $7,606,000 quota, the churches have pledged $4,675,000. The board voted unanimously to seek to secure before May 1 $3,000,000 to complete its quota. Dr. Farrier said: "Too great credit cannot be given to many of the treasurers of beneficence and pastors, who have so patiently and persistently co-operated in the work." Mr. Benjamin Starr reported 2,573 tithers now enrolled in 104 churches.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago announces its Annual Founder's Week Conference to be held Feb. 1 to 5 inclusive, with a strong program of Bible teaching, inspirational addresses, and group meetings for prayer and consideration of present-day problems.

THE BAPTIST and "Missions"

THE BAPTIST and Missions both belong to the Baptists. The former has felt from the first that the best interests of Baptists would be served by the promotion of both journals. During the current year THE BAPTIST has sent to Missions 2675 annual subscriptions. We shall greatly increase that number this year. The denomination has authorized us to grant a combination rate of $3 for these journals provided both subscriptions clear through the same office. Remember Missions when making up your list for THE BAPTIST.

Money Talks

Money talks, especially in the publishing game. When subscription receipts lag and renewals are slow and new subscriptions are scarce as hen's teeth, you may be pretty sure that something is wrong with the publication or that the subscribers are wanting in due appreciation of literary efforts of its editors and contributors. Read carefully these figures and draw your own conclusions. It will save us embarrassment. Subscription receipts for Oct., 1920, $2021.10; Oct., 1921, $3566.85; Nov., 1920, $1878.34; Nov., 1921, $4160.45; Dec., 1920, $2981.08; and the first fifteen days of Dec., 1921, $3593.67. Money tells of a growing interest in the paper that belongs to the Baptists.

O, That We Could Sense It

"Every knock is a boost." So writes Wm. T. McConaghy of Beverly, Mass. If the knocks really were uplifting the editors would have long since been beyond terrestrial scenes. We have come to see that we receive the knocks because our friends love us. They are love pats. Once in a while we have a deep thrust but even this does not move us if it is given in a beautiful Christian spirit. Always call a man "brother" or a woman "sister" before you slay him. It shows your piety.

Poor Editor

Our little referendum has been carried to the columns of the Baptist Observer. Editor Parsons says: "The suspense is terrible and the weekly comments, pro and con, are nauseating." We can't for the life of us see why an editor should get sick over the other fellow's job. For our own part we have almost all that we can do without worrying about the Observer or any other paper. Selah. (Which being interpreted, means, let the knockers knock.)

He Ought To Have a Baptist List

A brother publisher uses two columns to tell about the condition of his subscription list. It is a sad story. He uses language which the editors do not understand but possibly some of our readers may. He says: "I'm going to deal right off the top of the deck and lay the cards face up on the table." We do not keep our subscriptions on cards. He goes on: "Do you want our enemies to chuckle and say, 'I told you they could not run a paper'? That's up to you. It is your move. Be honor bright now, and walk into this office and pay up. Don't come in to kick and growl—come in to do your honest share toward putting your paper in the clear." He ought to have a Baptist list. We have never known in our newspaper experience such co-operation in renewing subscriptions promptly.

ill with pneumonia while visiting his mother in St. Louis late in November. He is slowly recovering.

The Illinois Convention Board held a meeting at Springfield on Dec. 20 and unanimously elected Promotion Director A. E. Peterson as acting superintendent until the end of the convention year. Full powers of the office as provided in the constitution were voted him, the board also pledging full cooperation in any policies he may promote. All matters pertaining to the work of the convention as well as promotion should be referred to him. Until further notice he may be addressed as heretofore, at 125 North Wash Ave., Chicago.

The mid-winter rally of the New England Woman's Home Mission Society will be held in Lorimer Hall, Tremont Temple, Boston, Jan. 19, morning and afternoon. The meeting will emphasize Christian Americanization. Miss Alice W. S. Brimson, of Chicago, will be one of the speakers. Mrs. A. E. Watkins, dist. secretary.

British Nonconformity has lost one of its most distinguished scholars in the death of Dr. Peter Taylor Forsyth, principal of Hackney Theological College, Hampstead, for the past twenty years, and the author of numerous works on religious subjects that have had a wide reading. Dr. Forsyth was a Congregationalist and intensely loyal to his denomination. He was not a stranger to America, having been chosen to deliver the Yale Lectures in 1907. Among the books which have come from his pen are "Positive Preaching and the Modern Mind," "The Cruciality of the Cross," "The Person and Place of Christ," and "The Christian Ethics of War."

Too Late for Classification

NEW YORK

REV. H. C. COOPER, of Little Falls, has accepted a call to the church at Carthage, beginning his work in January.

REV. H. J. VOSBURGH, of Watertown, has declined a call to West Virginia to remain in Watertown where the people have shown such hearty cooperation, their latest act being to increase his salary $1,000.

DR. R. E. FARRIER, director of promotion for New York state reported his collections for December as 110 per cent of collections for the same month last year.

REV. W. J. RUTHERFORD has accepted a call to Mt. Morris Church, where he has already begun his pastorate.

DR. H. CLARKE COLEBROOK, of Gloversville, is constantly proving the big brother and helper to the smaller churches of the surrounding community. He and his faithful deacon, Mr. Charles King, have just revived the work in the Fultonville Church.

AT AN ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING of the Oswego Association, the state director outlined the plans of the pledging of $3,000,000 to complete the quota of the state. Mr. C. W. Streeter is chairman of the committee and it goes forth with the determination to put the churches over the top. The state board has adopted as title for this campaign to complete the quota, "The Second Mile Campaign."

President-Emeritus Augustus Hopkins Strong

AN APPRECIATION BY PRES. CLARENCE A. BARBOUR, ROCHESTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

IT is no formal word of eulogy which I speak. Rather it is a word of personal appreciation and affection. In many ways my life was linked with that of Dr. Strong.

More than thirty years ago, for three years he was my president and my teacher. Those were in the days when he was in the fullness of his strength. For sixteen years prior to the time of my entering the seminary he had been its president. With firmness and wisdom and kindness he conducted the affairs of the school of which he was the head. With painstaking diligence and thoroughness he did his work in the class-room. His students were then, as they always have been, his "boys." Today they are scattered about the circle of the globe, in this land and in the far-flung battle line of the mission field. Dr. Strong never lost his eager and affectionate interest in the men who had studied under him.

Dr. Strong came to the seminary from eleven years of preaching and pastoral work in Haverhill, Mass., and in Cleveland, Ohio. Already his remarkable gifts as administrator and as theologian were manifest and he was wisely chosen to take up the work of Dr. Ezekiel G. Robinson, the first president of the seminary, who had accepted the presidency of Brown University.

At the beginning of Dr. Strong's presidency, in 1872, the seminary had a faculty of seven members only, but among them was the great scholar, Dr. Horatio B. Hackett, as professor of biblical literature and New Testament exegesis, a distinguished figure in any faculty. The student body numbered eighty, including the German department. In buildings and endowment the school was not abundantly provided with resources. The productive endowment amounted to $113,750.

With steady and persistent determination, with wise and devoted leadership, Dr. Strong carried the administrative and instructional responsibilities. The seminary went from strength to strength. The president was honored as a denominational leader, widely recognized as a statesman in the educational world, and ranked among the most influential teachers and writers in the realm of theological thought. When in 1912 he retired from his presidency of forty years, he had the joy of knowing that the school which he loved and served had made great advance. The faculty had become fifteen in number and the curriculum had become greatly enriched. The endowment had been multiplied many-fold. The student body, including the German department, numbered 152. The equipment had so increased as to be reasonably adequate to the work of the school. In 1907 Alvah Strong Hall, unsurpassed in its appointments, had been opened as a dormitory building, the munificent gift of Mr. Henry A. Strong in memory of the father, who had in the early days been treasurer of the seminary. The library had been enlarged and recatalogued, and the beautiful Paine reading room had been constructed as the gift of Dr. Strong's life-long friend, Mr. Cyrus F. Paine, the loved president of the board of trustees, preceding Dr. Strong to his eternal reward by only a few months.

Strong was ever at my call for counsel. His relation to the brethren of the ministry in the Monroe Association as well as far beyond its borders, was that of a friend wise and constant.

After my induction into the office which he had held for forty years he was always ready to counsel with me, but never did he claim any special privilege in the administration of the affairs of the seminary. It would be well in the sphere of the pastorate, if former pastors were always as wise in their relation to the churches which they had served in that high office. Dr. Strong visited the seminary from time to time, speaking in the chapel services to the edification of the seminary body. He continued as a member of the board of trustees until his death.

Many times during these years he has been my host in that home whose hospitality has been enjoyed by so many to whom he gave the privilege of its warmth and welcome. It would be generally agreed that Dr. Strong was at his very best in his own home. There during all the years of his presidency he received literally thousands of guests, all of whom were immediately at their ease, so gracious was the atmosphere. There was genuine relaxation, the sunshine of good fellowship, together with that admirable dignity and poise so characteristic of him. Dr. Strong was very particular that each one who enjoyed his hospitality should register in the guest-book, and in the course of the years the collection of autographs thus secured must have become notable. Many whose names there appear are now in that land to which Dr. Strong himself has gone.

Through all of these relationships there emerge certain outstanding facts in the character and the life-work of him who has gone from us in the fullness of his years, like a shock of corn fully ripe.

There was an utter and reverent recognition of the central place of Jesus Christ in all Christian life and thought. Christ was to him ever first and foremost. Not only was this true in his earlier years; it became increasingly true in his ripened thought and experience. His whole thinking was Christo-centric, his loyalty to Christ was absolute.

Dr. Strong's industry was a marvel to all who beheld it. He was a man of ceaseless and tireless toil. His time and strength he held as a steward for their careful and diligent use. All through his long life he labored incessantly and systematically; there was little waste motion. He planned his life for the highest ends, and he held himself with resistless determination to the accomplishment of the exacting tasks which he prescribed for himself.

He loved the best in literature, with an appreciative and discriminating valuation. His own literary style was compact, clear, and vivid. Among the many writings which have come from his pen probably few will be more likely to live, in wider usefulness, than those volumes in which he has set forth his conception of the deeper meaning of the great poetical works.

It is a great record which has closed. We can never forget, and must never forget, the long life which was lived and the great work which was wrought during these more than fourscore years. We remember him as the president and recognize his great and abiding service as there rendered, but more than all, those who best knew him loved the man himself, and sorrow as those who here will see his face no more.

The Hope of the Crisis

HAVING for several weeks spoken of various aspects of the crisis which has come upon the missionary enterprises of Northern Baptists and discussed in some detail its causes and possible cure, THE BAPTIST desires, as we face the new year, to say something of the hope which buoys up the hearts of our loyal people under the conditions pictured. Numbering the various aspects under which this hope appears may help to make it stand out clearly.

1. Our national organizations have never predicated the final outcome of the year on the income of the first eight months. To assume that the percentage of receipts in the remaining months will be what it has been in the period now gone is not just or even sane.

2. The general financial situation at the beginning of the present fiscal year was the worst it has been for many years. People in the churches are affected by such a condition just as vitally as those outside. When business is struggling it can hardly be expected that churches and church people shall have nothing but prosperity.

3. Almost $12,000,000 is due on pledges before the close of the fiscal year. The pledges of Northern Baptists are good. Times may be hard, conditions unforeseen may be faced, individuals may find themselves passing through adversity and affliction, but these cannot destroy the honor of the men and women who in the name of the Lord made their pledges to the New World Movement.

These gifts were voluntary gifts. There was no constraint save the love of Christ as we, his representatives, planned to meet more adequately his commission to go. The dire needs which led most of us to give more largely than heretofore not only exist today but have in large areas been greatly intensified.

The societies and boards, our agencies for the administration of our gifts, have been grappling with the problems of world need until they find themselves in a most critical situation. The crisis is ours. The crisis is the Christ's. It is our work and his work that is imperiled.

The pledges will be paid. Even at the cost of personal pleasure and to the point of individual suffering, these pledges will be paid.

4. This extremity is bringing us face to face with the concrete facts of our work as has not been the case before. It is making real to us our missionaries and giving to us a sense of fellowship with them. We see even more clearly than in the past that we are fellow-laborers with them and that failure on our part is as critical for the kingdom of God as would be failure on their part. There never was a time when the constituency has known the details of denominational work better than at present. There never was a time when the leaders have so completely taken every member of every church into their confidence. A policy of frankness like this always brings criticism, but criticism is a sign of life and interest; it shows that there is a desire to meet a given situation heroically and adequately. Only when criticism becomes captious or turns to stubbornness does it become an evil thing. Out of this criticism and as a result of the policy of keeping before the churches the details of the work there is bound to come a more intelligent and therefore more zealous missionary constituency in our Northern churches.

The resources of the denomination are also coming into sight, both in men and money. Nobody ever dreamed a few years ago that Baptist churches could give on such a scale or would do so if they could. Now experience is showing that despite this magnificent giving, the denomination has not even begun to exhaust its resources. There are vast reserves of power and of money which have not yet been touched. And the people who possess these are either asking themselves now whether it is right for them to wrap the Lord's talent in a napkin or are likely soon to be asked the same question by others.

Spiritual resources also are not exhausted. In fact, they have hardly been touched. The knowledge of our own weakness and of God's might is bringing us back again to God. The abasement and confession which has been our lot of late is the beginning of spiritual renewal and of a mighty revival in the lives of individuals and of churches. We can and shall praise God that he made us drink a bitter cup when we realize what depths of spiritual life have followed.

Let no one therefore be discouraged. Let every one seek God with all the power of his soul. Let every one dedicate himself and his means to God afresh. For this new year is going, if we Baptists follow God's clear guidance, to be a year of mighty triumph for his cause as that is embodied in the churches of the Northern Convention and in their far-flung missionary work.

Moral Influence Diplomacy

IN THE Washington Conference the United States has been running true to form. It has returned again to its faith in men and to the agreements which they make voluntarily among themselves. It has renounced force in favor of moral suasion.

The treaty negotiated at Versailles, whether it was good or bad, was a treaty which drew up constitutions, created legal forms and penalties and altogether sought to bind nations by formal obligations of the sort to which the world has been accustomed. Attempts to inject into that treaty the idealism and the human faith of America were not astoundingly successful.

The decisions of the Washington Conference are primarily gentlemen's agreements. They look back to a belief in the honor and good intent of the nations involved. They call back faith into international relations. They bind nations by moral restraints rather than by legal bonds. In this they are far truer to the American genius than the other kind, for America has always believed in moral influence more than in force.

We have been told constantly that the whole business world is built upon faith and that without faith modern business could not last a week. We are now reminded that it is entirely possible to settle vexed international questions on the basis of faith and to settle them with a finality not otherwise possible. Because of the achievements of the Washington Conference along this line, there is new hopefulness of the future in all the leading capitals of the world.

Of late, new years have been opening in the midst of a feeling of depression. The year 1922 opens with clearer faith in the possibility of peace on earth than men have had for many months. Moral influence diplomacy, Golden Rule diplomacy, Christian diplomacy is the reason.

A Happy New Year

THE new year is interesting just because it is new. New chickens, new babies, new houses, new tasks, new friends—they are all interesting because they are new.

Old things may become very dear, but one seldom gets excited over them, and occasionally they become very irksome. Some men take to the open road for the reason that the old road is painfully familiar. There are men who are almost annually looking for a new job just because the old has become monotonous. New shoes are delightful even if they do pinch a little because they give a chance to discard the old.

So an old year has few friends. Its going is an occasion for laughter and joking. Even though it has brought much good, its presence has become wearisome. Men turn their back on it and welcome the new year as joyfully and regularly as they welcome the magazines with their perennial nude babies on the front cover.

Has it ever occurred to you what a pleasant thing it would be if instead of rejecting the old, that could be made new? The life of the past has its values such as are not lightly to be discarded. If only the weariness and the deadness could be cast off, and some kind of a new creation come to the old, how much better than entirely new ventures!

Margaret Slattery believes that she has discovered how to do this very thing. In a little booklet published by the Pilgrim Press she makes clear the matter. She says: "From the time when the star shone over Bethlehem down to the present day, Jesus Christ makes all things new. If he is a vital, living force in the soul of an individual, life does not grow old, days do not grow wearisome, every day is a possible adventure, all things are new and they have the fascination and interest of the new; they are full of hope."

If that prophecy interests you, go on to consider the method which she proposes. Briefly it is this: "Make your resolutions, but remember it is He who will keep them new. Rejoice in the new year, but do not forget that a year grows old with failure and despair and only God can keep it new and fresh with hope. But he can, and there is no limit to his power. If into this new year you bid Christ come to walk with you more closely, to direct your efforts and sustain you when efforts seem to come to naught, then the old year will find you undefeated, with your face still turned toward the future and your heart beating high with hope. If you let him into your life, in a deeper sense than ever, to recreate it and make it new, others will find a large place in your heart, you will be a blessing as well as blessed, and you will have, as I pray God you may, a wonderful year of rich experience and joy."

A happy new year to you! Share your joy and it will be doubled. Bid Christ dwell within you, the hope of glory; ask him to give you the secret of continual renewal; and life will no more grow old, neither will there ever be clouds heavy enough to obscure the sun.

The Force That Is Ours

THE Apostle Paul must have seemed ridiculous to the men who thrust him into a Roman dungeon and kept him there. He asserted that he had all things and abounded, when he was living in manifest distress. He taught that the faith of which he was the teacher was to conquer the earth, and yet he himself was suppressed by Roman power. He would have been ridiculous if he had possessed no power except that which men saw.

Did ever a man seem more foolish to his contemporaries than William Carey when he started out to convert the world? One can hardly wonder that men who did not understand his secret were accustomed long afterwards to point out to travelers the little shop where once a crazy cobbler worked.

There has never been a time when the missionary enterprise was not a small group of people engaged in a task of the largest imaginable size. Even now, when it has grown to such dimensions, it almost staggers the imagination. There is a pitifully small force and a task of the utmost dimensions.

That force is there and the people back home are supporting it because One whose authority we acknowledge has commanded us to go into all the world and disciple all nations.

If the world ever laughs, if perchance it even sneers at what seems to it folly, the Christian churches will yet keep calmly on their way. They know deep in their hearts that the impossible is going to be achieved. For the same Mighty One who gave the command said also, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age."

THE FREEING OF DEBS

Eugene V. Debs was one of the victims of a war hysteria which for a season possessed American minds. He was judged guilty of having said things which were calculated to obstruct the draft and so to bring aid and comfort to the enemy. For this offense he was sent to the Federal penitentiary where he has remained until this time. The season of goodwill brings him release.

Thank God for the returning sanity of the American people. The war is over. The time for free speech has returned. The day has come also when the wounds of the war should be bound up as far as possible and old enmities and prejudices healed by the application of the law of love. There is nothing to be gained by continuing the punishment of political prisoners; there is everything to be gained by taking all measures likely to fuse into one harmonious body the various elements which make up the population of the United States.

THE GOVERNMENT SAYS, "PROHIBITION PROHIBITS"

Mrs. Montgomery, in her message to the churches published in this number, brings to attention from government sources conclusive evidence that prohibition is prohibiting far better than its enemies, among whom must be numbered a fairly large proportion of the secular press, like to think. We commend the careful reading of this article.

An attempt has been made to laugh prohibition to death. It was the only resource left, direct attack having failed. That attempt has not yet ceased. Let Christian people beware! Neither the observance of law on the one hand or contempt of law on the other are things to be laughed at. It is entirely for the people of the churches to decide whether a law which has survived every other attack and which is the hope of the sober world shall be killed by ridicule.

CHICAGO AS A MISSION FIELD

When you think of Chicago you may think of a Polish city of 137,611 persons; a German city of 122,788; a Russian city of 102,095; an Italian city of 59,215; a Swedish city of 58,563; an Irish city of 56,786; a Czechoslovakian city of 50,392; an Austrian city of 30,491; an English city of 26,420; a Hungarian city of 26,106; a Canadian city of 26,054; a Norwegian city of 20,481; and dozens of towns smaller than 20,000, each transplanted from a different country.

The city is called American, and so indeed it is most heartily and buoyantly American. It is at the same time one of the greatest mission fields in the world and the results of the work done in it are world-wide in their results. It is to meet such conditions that the Chicago Executive Council (practically the City Mission Society) exists and does its valuable work.

FOR UNIFORM DIVORCE LAWS

One of the scandals of the marriage situation in the United States is the great variety of divorce laws which prevail. The laws of one state may easily be defied by people who will step across a border line. A man and a woman may be criminals in one state and good citizens in another.

Many people prefer that this situation shall be remedied by agreement among the states. This process is slow, however, and not altogether certain. So it is not strange that there is now urged an amendment to the Constitution authorizing Congress to enact uniform marriage and divorce laws. Hearings have already been held before a sub-committee of the U. S. Senate.

It may be that this is the better way to a good end. It may be that it is not. Christian people should follow the arguments. In any case, the agitation will furnish a splendid opportunity for registering sentiment against lax divorce laws and in favor of some arrangement by which there may be the desired uniformity of action.

A YANKEE DINNER FOR RUSSIA

On December 22 final agreement was reached in Congress on the Russian relief bill and the measure was sent to the President for his signature. By the terms of this bill $20,000,000 will be spent from the funds of the United States Grain Corporation for Russian relief. This grain will be bought in the United States in carload lots and will be shipped to Russia in American ships. Secretary Hoover is of the opinion that the shipping of this grain from American ports will begin by Jan. 1. He has also announced that the soviet authorities will probably use $10,000,000 in gold for the importation of foodstuffs to Russia to assist in relieving the famine in the Volga basin.

An interesting sidelight on financial conditions in the United States, which are reflected in part in the campaigns of all the denominations, is Mr. Hoover's statement that the present is not a good time to appeal for public charity, the total collections of the organizations working for this cause since last August not totaling more than $500,000.

CHURCH OR KINGDOM?

The Des Moines Confession of Faith says in the sixth article: "We believe in the church—a living spiritual body of which Christ is the head and of which all regenerated people are members." The Word and Way contends that this is "the prevailing Pedo concept." It quotes Dr. Goodchild, "The word church refers, not only to groups of people organized as local, visible congregations here and there, but to the great body of those who love and serve Jesus Christ throughout the world, no matter what the name of the church they are found in, and no matter if they are outside all church fellowship. This is the church to which the gorgeous promises of the New Testament are given. This is the church that will survive all attacks that are made upon it." Against this the Word and Way contends that "this definition of the church has no support in the New Testament." It contends that there can be no such church as Dr. Goodchild describes except in prospect and that the New Testament "does not recognize, or reckon with, any church except the institution founded by Christ, which has existence and finds expression in the independent ecclesia that actually assembles, administers the ordinances and preaches the gospel. Dr. Goodchild and those who think with him fail to discriminate between the church and the Kingdom."

The Resurrection and the Collection

A religion that consists merely in fine feeling, a heightened imagination, exalted visions of truth, is evanescent. We shall not long believe in the resurrection unless we contribute to the collection. Money talks. So it does. I would prefer to put it, sacrifice talks.

By ROBERT A. ASHWORTH

O GRAVE, where is thy victory?
O death, where is thy sting?
The sting of death is sin; and the power of sin is the law: but thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. . . . Now concerning the collection. . . . 1 Cor. 15:55-16:1.

"Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ! . . . Now concerning the collection." The suddenness of the transition almost takes our breath away!

In this famous fifteenth chapter we find ourselves upon the mount of transfiguration. We stand upon the heights of religious emotion. How are our hearts stirred by the vision of triumph over death and the grave! The ancient enemies of mankind lie slain beneath our feet! We hear things which it is hardly lawful for man to utter, so high are they, so glorious in their suggestion of life and immortality brought to light through Jesus Christ our Lord! From that height we have watched the clouds that hid from us the face of God disperse, and the mists below that have covered with an unbearable mystery those common elements of human life, which are not less sad because so common, have lifted long enough for us to see glimpses of their meaning in the light that heaven sheds upon them. We have looked into the face of a risen Christ, and have seen the dark specter death flee before him, and leave as spoils in the Savior's hands the fears that have oppressed the hearts of men, until, with sympathetic exultation we have exclaimed with the apostle, "O grave, where is thy victory! O death, where is thy sting! . . . Thanks be to God that giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

On this height we would gladly always dwell. We say, "Let us build tabernacles here and spend our lives upon this hill." Here in a fervor of religious ecstasy we would dwell forever. "Here would we sit and sing ourselves away, to realms of everlasting bliss!"

And then, without a moment's warning to prepare us for the descent, we are plunged from the mountain to the valley, the dark, forbidding valley, with "Now, concerning the collection!" In an instant the atmosphere changes from June to December, and our teeth begin to chatter. It is as though breasting the warm waves and exulting in the glow of them, we suddenly strike a current of cold water that depresses the heart, and makes the breath come hard and short. Our first impulse is to put for the shore. Swimming has lost its charm for us!

Alas, Paul, we exclaim, what an anti-climax! Could you not have omitted the collection? Why could you not have stayed upon the mountain top, and let us enjoy the vision to the full! We have seen the heavens opened, and heard the trumpet sound, the corruptible has put on incorruption, and the mortal has been clothed with immortality. Christ has extracted the poison from the jaws of death and left him fangless. Must we now concern ourselves with a collection?

Facing a Subscription Paper

For there is nothing very stimulating about a collection! Who loves a collection? There are multitudes who, if warned, would go a long way out of their way to avoid one. There is many an old soldier in the world's warfare, who has stood hard knocks, and has "sought the bubble reputation even at the cannon's mouth," who cannot look a subscription paper in the face without flinching.

Yet, strange to say, Paul appears to be sublimely unconscious of any incongruity between the resurrection and the collection! For him the transition from one to the other is easy. There is no chapter heading to intervene, as Paul wrote it. Chapters are a modern invention quite unknown to Paul, an invention, I sometimes think, of the evil one. Paul would hardly make of it a new paragraph. "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory over death—now concerning the collection."

Look at it, for a moment, from Paul's point of view. There was dire need in Jerusalem. We can hardly realize, except in imagination, what the new faith meant to those who professed it amid the hostile conservatism of Judaism. It meant expulsion from the synagogue, and that meant not only ecclesiastical but material penalties. From most it cut off the means of livelihood and shut them off from family and occupation; and the saints at Jerusalem were in want. Ask the missionary in China and you will find that he can understand it. Ask the convert from the superstitions of Confucianism or the Christian Hindu in India, and they will tell you of privations and sacrifices, of loneliness and poverty, of which you know nothing. And in Paul's conception, there had come with the emancipating truth which is the burden of the fifteenth chapter a new sense of human brotherhood: there was now neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, but men were one in Christ Jesus. The need of one was the opportunity of all, and in Christian circles opportunity was to be spelled always obligation. The Greeks of Corinth were free to choose what religion they would as the Jews of Jerusalem were not. Their lives had been enriched by the gospel. From a larger life must spring a broader view: from a greater inflow must come a richer outgo. To Paul this was so self-evident as to need no explanation, much less apology. The life of the church is to be a life of service, and service involves expenditure of many kinds. It means expenditure of time, of talent, of money. The life of the Christian is to give, give, give!

Some one has called the fifteenth chapter the chapter of the "springs," and the sixteenth the chapter of the "river." What are the springs for but to replenish the rivers? What are visions but the material out of which to fashion duty? What are the riches which are in Christ Jesus but capital to be expended in the service of man? What does the resurrection, with its message of glory and joy to the believer, the vanquished death, the empty tomb, the victorious cry—what does the resurrection mean to the believer but the rising of that tide of love that shall flow out in deeds of beneficent service to all the race? When the heart glows with a warm sense of gratitude to God, the first reaction is a giving impulse, the desire to make some acceptable return for blessings received.

Paul was right. It was essential that shortly after the reception of the revelation should come an opportunity for a collection! The collection is the act by means of which the emotion secures permanence. They who are depressed by the collection will shortly lose the joy of the resurrection.

Paul merely anticipates the wisest and most modern of our psychologists when he implies that religious emotion, if it is to maintain itself, must early find expression in action. A religion that consists merely in fine feeling, a heightened imagination, exalted visions of truth, is evanescent. It will fade like the mists of the morning twilight in the glare of the light of day. It will disappear like a vision of a dream unless in the first wakening moments it is fixed in an act. The soul that chooses to dwell in the realm of emotion grows flabby and flaccid, becomes weak and invertebrate. Emotion that does not express itself in conduct tends to become weaker and weaker with every repetition until it disappears entirely.

Emotion Unexpressed Kills Sympathy

That is why Bishop Butler in his Analogy, if I recall it rightly, disapproves of the theater. At the theater, he says, men's emotions are stirred; they weep over the misfortunes of the poor, are deeply moved by the heroism of the brave, and view with approbation the sacrifices of the good; but unless they go forth to feed the hungry, and minister to the sick, to emulate heroic deeds and live the unselfish life, they lose the capacity for feeling, and the oftener they view their counterfeit presentation upon the stage the weaker become their reactions until they cease altogether to be moved by them and lose the very power of sympathy and love.

We shall not long believe in the resurrection unless we contribute to the collection. Religion is not feeling but will, not emotion but conduct, and feeling and emotion are valuable and permanent only as they express themselves in action.

The method of Paul, therefore, is the method of Schoolmaster Sikes with Nicholas Nickelby—a method which, under more philosophical terminology, prevails in every modern school: "W-a-s-h—Wash, to make clean; W-i-n-d-e-r—Winder, to casement: Now go and do it!" A vast amount of modern pedagogy is crowded into that example.

NOW CONCERNING THE COLLECTION. The collection of the sixteenth chapter, it would appear, is as spiritual an exercise as the recollection of the fifteenth chapter. You cannot live in the spirit of the fifteenth chapter unless you share in the activities of the sixteenth. The

You?

*SOMEBODY signed a mission pledge,
Testing his purse to utmost edge,
Somebody paid it through the year,
Brightening the world with Christian cheer,
Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?*

*Somebody handed cheerfully in Money to help God's cause to win,
Somebody kept his promise to pay,
Writing each check on scheduled day,
Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?*

*Somebody let the year slip by Heedless of payments piling high,
Somebody said, "No more delay,
Quickly I'll settle that sum today."
Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?*

*Somebody's pledge was only a scrap,
Paper that had no value, mayhap,
Somebody's soul grew shriveled and small,
Failing, he grieved the Lord of all.
Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?*

more generously we give to the collection the firmer our grasp upon the great truth of the resurrection.

So it must always be. It is the law of life recognized by the nobler souls. Jacob at Bethel has seen the heavens opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the ladder that linked him to the skies, and arising from the vision he exclaims at once, "Of all that thou givest me I will surely give the tenth unto thee." The collection follows hard upon the revelation. Peter sees the sheet let down from heaven to the house-top, and his ears are attuned to the divine interpretation, and he is no sooner awake than the message comes, "Two men wait for thee at the door," and duty, not altogether welcome, comes to fasten the new truth within his mind and heart. And our Lord himself, can we forget that the refreshment of the transfiguration mount was interrupted by the cry of the demoniac boy, and that the mount of God was exchanged for the valley of human need and suffering? Money, time and talent are mortgaged to the gospel.

No Divorce Allowed

I say then that these chapters belong together. What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder! Thus do we marry them, the resurrection and the collection, privilege and obligation, in one new divine unity! Paul has not marred the fifteenth chapter by adding the sixteenth, but has completed it. You have heard, perhaps, of the church member who supported the teaching of his minister in the prayer meeting by exclaiming, "Yes it is as the pastor has said, salvation is free, for I have been a Christian for fifty years and it has never cost me a cent!" What that man needed, of course, was to be converted. You cannot make a Christian out of a sponge that sucks up all the privileges of a Christian civilization in home and church and state and business, whose cry is always that of the leech, "Give! give!" but who himself gives nothing of any worth, in time, or talent, or worldly goods. A foreign missionary was some time ago addressing a large congregation. He noticed a boy intently listening, who seemed to be greatly interested. The earnest face of the little fellow led the missionary to say that even children might preach the gospel in foreign lands by their prayers and by their gifts. At the close of the address and with earnest interest printed upon his countenance the little fellow took the hand of the speaker. "Do you want to give something to the cause?" asked the missionary. "No, sir," replied the boy. "I was just wondering whether you had any foreign stamps to give away!"

We Pay for What We Want

How can he who loves not the collection, out of whose heart no river flows, feel within the springs of a gratitude whose source is the blessed truth of the resurrection life?

I am not sure but that the man was right who said that money is the acid test of our sincerity. We pay for what we want, and we pay in proportion to our means whatever it costs. Only yesterday I read in the newspaper how John McCormack paid $150,000 for "The Portrait of a Man," by Franz Hals, while another paid $750,000 for two Rembrandts. Gainsborough's "Blue Boy" lately brought a fabulous price. They say, Money talks. So it does. I would prefer to put it, Sacrifice talks. The measure of your interest is the measure of the time, talent and money that you devote to a cause.

Jesus Wants Men and Money

Here is a world in need. Millions are starving. To a sensitive imagination the world is resonant with the bitter cry of the children. It rings in our ears. Your interest is proportionate to the degree of your sacrifice on their behalf. It will not do to say, "Depart in peace; be thou warmed and fed!" Money talks!

Here is a spiritual need surpassing the physical. The world needs Jesus Christ above all other needs. Do you feel it? Are you moved by it? Yes, if you are giving to fulfill that need. But they who do not give will not long feel. Emotions often aroused tend to weaken and disappear unless stimulated by action to which those emotions prompt. There are none so indifferent and hard to move as those who have long resisted the generous impulses which have swept across their hearts at the appeal of human need. In the great foreign mission enterprise we have not men enough; but we have more men than money. It is the strange paradox of our Christianity that it is easier to get some men to give themselves than it is to get the rank and file of men to give their money. When a man tells me he does not believe in foreign missions I understand, of course, it is another way of saying he does not contribute to them. They who do not contribute soon cease to believe.

God a Preferred Creditor

We believe in the church. What would the world be without the Christian church? You would not live in a community without a church. What do those owe to the church who never enter its doors except at a funeral, or trouble it except to crave its ministrations in their hour of sorrow? It is of far more lasting importance than the government under which you live, of more vital moment to you than the schools and colleges which you generously support and endow—yes, more to you in the great eternity in which you must live than your business. When the sense of responsibility and privilege is lacking, how seriously the church is crippled! Men pay their taxes and pay their bills at the butcher's, and give to the church if they have anything to spare. They recognize in theory that their greatest debt is to God, but then, as one man put it, God is not pushing them! Why not lift the church to the dignity that is its by right!

New World Movement New Year's Resolutions for 1922

THE old year, with its problems, its neglected duties and its lost opportunities is forever gone. The New Year, bearing in one hand the greatest crisis that the denomination has ever known and in the other the greatest opportunities for God and for good that have ever been offered Northern Baptists, is here. As a Christian, a Baptist, and a participant in the New World Movement, I hereby make the following resolutions:

That I will do my utmost to bring victory to the New World Movement, to which I have already pledged my allegiance, and for the success of which I hold myself morally responsible under God.

That I will not shut my eyes to the fact that the loyal, concerted action of every Northern Baptist is needed in this crisis.

That I will be in 1922 as honest a Christian as I am a business man or woman. That I will pay my debt to God as readily as any other obligation.

That I will pay my pledge to the New World Movement when it is due. That if by any means whatsoever it is possible, I will increase my pledge, knowing that nothing brings such rich returns as investments in Christian work.

That I will open my eyes to the suffering and the need of the world, and be henceforth a seeing Christian.

That behind the figures which every society of our great denomination has given, showing its needs, I will see our faithful missionaries and other helpers in far lands and here at home, ready to do God's work, if I make it possible.

That I will see further the wistful, waiting faces upturned to mine, of those who know not Christ, and who will never know him unless I, his follower, am faithful to my trust in 1922.

That behind these, and shining through them, I will see the face of Him who said, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

That I will today "put on the armour of God" for the battle of righteousness in 1922 and that I will never leave the ranks until the victory of faith is won.

The church lives not for itself: it lives to bless the world, to lift up Christ, to give, asking nothing in return. It stands as the representative of Christ in the world, the tall finger of its steeple daily pointing a preoccupied world to the realities that lie above and beyond. It is here as one that doth serve, as was its blessed Master. The privileges of church membership are largely the privileges of service, and these are the noblest that life affords. They give to life the dignity of a high purpose and invest it with a meaning whose full significance eternity will not be long enough to explore. Jesus saw in the devotion of the sinning woman the evidence of a sincere repentance. To the proud Pharisee he said, "Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little." The consciousness of a large forgiveness leads to large service.

In Business with God

I read a story a little while ago of Bishop McDowell of the Methodist church. "Not long ago, in his busy and useful life, he was in one of the cities of Wisconsin. In the dining-room of his hotel he met a young traveling man eagerly enthusiastic about his business. His enthusiasm just bubbled out of him at every pore. The bishop, as the older man, greeted the younger with a 'Good morning.' 'Good morning,' said the younger man, and then seized the opportunity to speak out what was in his heart, he said, 'I am a traveling man.' 'So am I,' said the bishop. 'I am in the jewelry line.' 'So am I,' replied the bishop, 'for,' said he, 'I remembered the Scripture that said, "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels!"' The young man went on, 'I am in business with my father.' 'So am I,' said the bishop. 'My father founded our business.' 'So did mine,' said the bishop. 'My father has taken me into partnership,' said the young man. 'So has mine,' said the bishop. 'This is my first trip out,' said the salesman. 'I have made many trips,' said the bishop. 'I want to make a good report to my father when I get home,' said the young man. 'So do I,' said the bishop. Ah, to be able justly and truly to make a good report to Him who hath made us in His own image and called us to be co-workers with Himself, to be able to make a report that shall bring the 'well done' from His lips at the last, that would be a home-coming worth the while!"

IX—ULTIMATE FATES

THE decision of the will for or against Christ necessarily determines whether the subsequent evolution of the individual shall be an upward or a downward evolution. If that decision be for Christ, there will result an ever-increasing measure of knowledge, love and spiritual power. "If any man will, he shall know of the teaching" (John 7:17); the love of Christ for him will kindle new love in his heart (2 Cor. 5:14); and the reception of strength from his Master will enable him to do greater things in his service (John 14:12). On the other hand, rejection of Christ will result in progressive deterioration, the blinding of intellect, the deadening of affection, and the weakening of will. The Christless man becomes "vain in his reasonings and his senseless heart is darkened" (Rom. 1:21). He comes to be "past feeling," either his own depravity or the love of God (Eph. 4:19). His dislike for holy things becomes an open "enmity to God" (Rom. 8:7). Refusing regeneration, he becomes a prey to degeneration.

And so the ultimate fate of the wicked is suggested by our application to it of the principle of evolution. I have shown in my "Miscellanies" (2:110-128) that neither annihilation, nor external and positive inflictions, are warranted by Scripture; while yet we read of an "eternal sin," and of a punishment worse than "fire and brimstone" (Mark 3:29; Ps. 11:6; 32:3, 4). As in joining himself to the will of Christ man receives divine life, joy, strength—the motor-elements of upward progress,—so, in rejecting Christ's will, he loses even the natural strength with which Christ had endowed him. An evil and selfish will becomes more and more hostile to God and man; loses insight, fellowship, power; exchanges free-will for automatic subservience to impulses from without; in short, reverts to the animal type from which humanity has been by Christ's power evolved. "Man that is in honor, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish" (Ps. 49:20). God does not punish him, so much as he punishes himself. He does not cease to be; but he lives, stricken and blasted by his own perversity. God "requireth that which is past" (Eccl. 3:15), not by stripes or thunderbolts, not necessarily by any positive inflictions, but by the sinner's own memory, conscience and character; and these are the essence of hell. As man came up from the brute, so he can return to the brute; but "without are the dogs" (Rom. 22:15), forever excluded from God and from the society of the holy. Indeed, as even the animal creation arose from that which was inert matter, the spirit that will not drink of the fountain of life may become at last little more than mere matter, only active by pressure from without. He who is too proud to join himself to Christ and become Lord of all, may end by losing all that makes his honor and dignity in the universe, and may only serve to all worlds and ages as a warning against sin. So God's love may utilize opposition to his holiness, and may make even the wicked to serve him. Refusing Christ, the sinner may himself become the refuse of the universe, scrapped and cast off forever (Syst. Theol. 3:1035-1056).

What heaven is really to be may also appear from a consideration of this principle of progress. Joining ourselves to Christ, we determine an upward evolution, and participate in God's knowledge, love and dominion. "In thy light shall we see light" (Ps. 36:9). "He that loveth me shall be loved of my Father" (John 14:21). "We have waited for him, and he will save us" (Is. 25:9; 63:1). "Ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19:28). "Know ye not that we shall judge angels?" (1 Cor. 6:3). "Things which eye saw not, and ear heard not, and which entered not into the heart of man, whatsoever things God prepared for them that love him" (1 Cor. 2:9). "For all things are yours" (1 Cor. 3:21). "Filled unto all the fullness of God" (Eph. 3:19). Thus is held out to us the prospect of an eternal growth in the wisdom, favor and lordship of the infinite God. And this infinite God is none other than the crucified but now risen Savior, who begs us to admit him to our hearts (Rev. 3:20).

As all things have been created by the power and for the honor of our great Redeemer (Col. 1:16) it is no narrow service to which we give ourselves when we surrender ourselves to Christ. "On his head are many crowns" (Rev. 19:12); the crown of literature and the crown of art, the crown of science and the crown of philosophy, the crown of unfettered industry and the crown of democratic government (Miscellanies, 1:210-219). At the feet of him who was crowned with thorns shall be cast the crowns of all the saved, from all the continents and from all the islands of the sea. Mongolia and Polynesia and Patagonia shall join in stretching forth their hands with offerings to Christ. A multitude that no man can number shall praise him of those who have been redeemed from the earth. But why should we limit the praise to the inhabitants of this little sphere? Is it not written that God will "sum up all things in Christ, the things in the heavens" as well as "the things upon the earth" (Eph. 1:10); that "to principalities and powers in heavenly places shall be made known his manifold wisdom" (Eph. 3:10); that "in the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven" as well as on earth and under the earth (Phil. 2:10)? May we not believe, with Mark Hopkins, that, in the great day of restitution, other intelligences will come in long procession from other departments of the universe, "great white legions from Sirius and Arcturus and the chambers of the South," to bow the knee and to confess that Jesus Christ is Lord?

Is that day near, or is it far away? We are reminded of the controversy between the premillennialists and the postmillennialists. I am persuaded that a careful study of Scripture will show that each of these views has its element of truth, and that with some qualification we may admit both into our scheme of doctrine. For a complete statement of my faith in this important matter I must refer to my "Systematic Theology," (3:1013-1014). But I venture to summarize what I there teach, and to preface that summary with three general remarks: first, that Christ's manifestations are primarily spiritual and invisible, and only afterwards are visible and physical; secondly, that Scripture and the history of the church show that this priority of the spiritual in Christ's manifestations was the faith of the early apostles and their disciples; and thirdly, that we may reasonably expect that Christ's final manifestation of himself will follow the same rule of spirituality first, and physical impressiveness afterwards.

In my book entitled "A Tour of the Missions (2nd ed., 276-289), I have called attention to the oneness of human nature. Man is both soul and body, spiritual and physical. The redemption of one part of him is the guaranty of the redemption of the other. The prophet is lifted up to see in germinal spiritual life the certainty also of final spiritual perfection, in resurrection of the soul the resurrection of the body. There are four separate instances in which this priority of the spiritual appears. There is, first, a spiritual death, "dead through your trespasses and sins" (Eph. 2:1), but secondly a physical and literal death; "This is the second death, even the lake of fire" (Rev. 20:14). First, again, there is a spiritual judgment (Is. 26:9; John 3:13; 12:31); but secondly, an outward and literal judgment (Acts 17:31). First there is an invisible and spiritual coming of Christ (Matt. 16:28; John 14:16, 18; 14:3); but afterwards, a final, visible, and literal coming (Matt. 25:31). So also, first a spiritual resurrection, already in some cases accomplished (John 5:25) "the hour cometh, and now is;" but also a physical and literal resurrection (John 5:28, 29—"The hour cometh in which all that are in the tombs shall hear his voice"). So we may regard "the first resurrection" in Rev. 20:8 as spiritual and invisible, while the second resurrection, mentioned in verse 13 which follows, is clearly visible. In other words, Christ's second coming is both of these: it is premillennial spiritually, but postmillennial physically and visibly. At the beginning of the thousand years of conquest and success, Christ comes to his church in mighty reinforcement of its spiritual energies. At the end of a thousand years of peace and progress, Christ comes to his church visibly and literally, in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, to reward his faithful followers and to put an end to the opposition of his foes.

This first premillennial coming by his Spirit seems needed, to make the second coming intelligible or possible. When the fullness of time had come, God sent forth his Son; for without spiritual preparation of the world in the knowledge of its sin, the first coming of Christ in the flesh would not have manifested God. So the fullness of time must come, before Christ can manifest himself literally and visibly in his second coming; for without spiritual preparation the church will not be able to understand his manifestation. What would be the use of Christ's visible advent to a dead church? Unbelievers cannot understand a spiritual kingdom. When Saul was smitten to the earth on his way to Damascus, that light of Christ's manifestation, brighter than the sun, came to a man already under the influence of the convicting Spirit and kicking against the pricks of conscience (Acts 26:14). So he could understand Christ's manifestation. But those who were with him were perfectly blind to its meaning; "they heard the voice, but they beheld no man" (Acts 22:9). There must first be a believing church, or Christ's visible coming will be in vain. So the visible coming is preceded by an invisible coming, and this is premillennial. When the church arises and shines because her Light is come invisibly, then he who is the Light personified will come in power and glory, and that coming will be postmillennial. Our duty then is not to expect a speedy second advent in the clouds of heaven, but to pray for a mighty coming of Christ in the hearts of his apathetic and slumbering people, rousing them to trust his promise and to conquer the world.

But the eternal is not all. Body and soul go together. Christ is the Savior of the body also, and when he is manifested, then we shall be manifested with him in glory (Col. 3:4). But that shall be after, and not before, the spiritual victory has been won. Premillennialism, when it means the immediate end of the present dispensation and the sudden dawn of the day of judgment, is often the cause of half-heartedness in Christian enterprise. Why work in the vineyard, when the Master may come before the harvest? But premillennialism, when it means the spiritual coming of Christ, to refresh and strengthen his army for conflict and victory, is an incentive to the most vigorous and enthusiastic effort. Let us be premillennialists of the latter sort.

Let us be postmillennialists also. I fear that many who object to premillennialism have really lost faith in any literal and visible coming of Christ. The gradual spread of Christian truth is enough for them, and they give a purely spiritual interpretation to all promises of Christ's manifestation. I will not say that these brethren have given up all faith in the inspiration of the Scripture, but their conception of inspiration is a very different one from mine. And when Scripture teaches of a coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven, of the changing of the body of our humiliation into the likeness of his glorified body, and of a new city of God in which dwells righteousness, I cannot think that it is to be interpreted figuratively. Paul has no manner of doubt about the matter, for he says: "We know that if the earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." "For our citizenship is in heaven, whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he is able even to subject all things unto himself" (Phil. 3:20-21). So I think that, with Paul, we may be postmillennialists also, expecting that, at Christ's final manifestation of himself at the end of the millennium, "we shall be like him, because we shall see him as he is" (1 John 3:2). Let us pray then for his coming and manifestation in our hearts, that we may be prepared for his coming and manifestation in the world.

A PRAYER FOR TODAY

By C. B. STEPHENS

O H, thou Timeless One;
Thou who needest not
That, in order to be appreciable,
Eternity be separated
Into minutes, days, and years;
Thou in whose throbbing heart
The fulness of Life
Ever makes itself manifest;
Thou Keeper of the years,
Make this moment,
That judges yesterday,
That unlocks tomorrow,
The one moment that really counts,
Full to overflowing
With the presence of thine own self:
That there may be created in me
A holy discontent,
A Christ-born vision
That fairly appraises
The inadequate attainments of the past,
And fans in the heart
A fiery zeal
For values that by thy grace may be.
Sanctify to the perpetual recreation of my spirit
The significant,
The potent,
The speeding
NOW.
In the name of Him
Who for our quickening
Became with us
A child of the years,
And with us faced destiny
Crowded into the present moment of decision;
Revealing, thereby, the only loyalty,
Loyalty concrete
In meeting the demands
Of a single, soul-measuring minute.

Missionary Education Through Dramatics—II

By MRS. MILTON FISH

Suggested Dramatizations of Several Chapters of the Text-book, "World Friendships."

Lesson One: The World's Health. Healing

Hymn: "We've a Story to Tell."

Two minute prelude answering the question: "How We Are Telling the Story"—through healing, working with the hands, teaching, printing, preaching, reforming and practicing. Read in unison the last paragraph on page 8 and all of page 9 of "World Friendships, Inc."

The story: Isaiah 53:4-6; Luke 2:10-11. Prayer of Thanksgiving for having a story to tell.

Class memory verses: Matthew 28: 18-20, Why We Tell the Story.

Name all the agencies by which missionaries are winning the world's friendship through improving the world's health. Four tableaux:

1. Letting the devils out—page 17.
2. Taking the pulse—page 22.
3. Making a health report—page 16.
4. A contrast—page 11.

A CONTRAST: DRAMATIZATION OF PAGES 11 AND 12

Characters:

Doctor Haas, an American doctor of Adana.

Three Turkish doctors.

Properties:

A screen suggests the apartments of the Governor's wife. (The doctors enter from behind the screen.)

FIRST DOCTOR: The Governor's wife can't recover.

DOCTOR HAAS: Her life does hang by a thread, but gentlemen, that thread will be strengthened by an operation.

SECOND DOCTOR: There isn't one chance in a hundred that she will live (shrugs). It is written on her forehead—what can we do?

THIRD DOCTOR: I am not going to risk my life by making the attempt.

FIRST AND SECOND DOCTORS: Nor I. Nor I.

DR. HAAS: What do you mean, sirs, by "risking your lives"?

FIRST DOCTOR: We don't dare to operate. The patient will surely die, and our lives will be the forfeit.

DR. HAAS (sternly): An American physician's oath does not allow him to consider his own interests, if there is a chance to save a life. If you refuse to help I must do it alone.

SECOND DOCTOR TO THIRD DOCTOR: You write a contract, which, if Dr. Haas will sign, then we will consent to assist him.

THIRD DOCTOR (appears to write and hands paper to Dr. Haas who reads aloud).

DR. HAAS: I, the undersigned, promise on my word as an American physician to accept all responsibility in this operation and in case the Governor's wife does not recover I will bear the blame and suffer the consequences. (Dr. Haas signs his name. All step behind the screen; the light should be dimmed. The pianist plays softly "The Great Physician" over twice. The four doctors return.)

THIRD DOCTOR: She hasn't even a fighting chance. Good bye.

FIRST DOCTOR: I have an important engagement—Adieu.

SECOND DOCTOR: I, too, must hasten. Good night!

(Dr. Haas watches them a moment, shakes his head, then kneels near the screen as though at the foot of a cot. Soloist sings very softly: "We May Not Climb the Heavenly Steeps." Dr. Haas rises and prays.)

DR. HAAS: "Oh! God! I thank thee that in the time of my extremity, when my power could go no further, Thou hast heard my cry and saved this life. I thank Thee Thou hast set Thy seal of approval upon my work here." (Exit.)

SPECIAL DIRECTIONS

Charts: Use one and two; three will surely cause a lively discussion.

Two questions:

1. What causes so tremendous a waste of life in heathen lands?
2. Which are needed more to stop this wastes, men or women? Why?

Prayer: Thank God for encouragements. Inspiration: Have a good story teller tell story of Dr. Reynolds in "A Noble Army" or of Dr. Catherine Mabie in "Ministers of Mercy."

Close without singing but with sentence prayers for all working in medical missions.

Lesson Two: In Factory and Field Laboring with the Hands

Hymn: "Work, for the Night is Coming."

DRAMATIZATION: "WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE?"

Characters:

A Malayan.

A tourist, in white.

Properties:

Improvise a fruit tree under which the native is sitting sucking an orange. (Enter tourist.)

TOURIST: You're a lazy fellow.

NATIVE: Huh?

TOURIST: I say, is this the way you spend your time?

NATIVE: Huh?

TOURIST: Don't you ever work?

NATIVE: No need.

TOURIST: No need? What do you have to eat?

NATIVE: Good. (Points to tree.)

TOURIST: I see you have some clothing.

You have to work for that, don't you?

NATIVE (shrugs): Wife make.

TOURIST: You lazy good-for-nothing. Satisfied with the shake of a tree for food and a wife to fashion a rude garment. Why, you are utterly without ambition.

NATIVE (slowly rising): You make clothes?

TOURIST: No, my tailor made them.

NATIVE: You find and cook your food?

TOURIST: No, my cook does that.

NATIVE: You make big boat you come in?

TOURIST: No, I bought it.

NATIVE: Me same—we brothers. Me no work either. My wife, she my tailor, cook, everything. (Exit after tourist.)

COMPLETING THE PROGRAM

How do Missionaries teach the dignity of labor?

Scripture: God needs every kind of worker. First Corinthians 12:28-31.

Solo: "Give of Your Best to the Master."

Prayer: Thanksgiving for the ability to work.

Charts: Build and discuss the two regular charts and use Exhibit "A."

Hymn (all standing): "We've a Story to Tell." How is it told in this chapter?

Question: What are some of the things we have in this country that we should pass on and what are some of the things we are passing on that we should keep at home?

How would you answer one who said: "I believe in a practical Christianity, not in foreign missions." (Write answers on blackboard.)

It is better to give a beggar work than money. Apply that principle to missionary work.

Repeat memory verses.

Story of Sam Higginbottom in "Ancient People at New Tasks," or Dr. Paton in "A Noble Army."

Close with sentence prayers of consecration to be and do what Christ wills.

Lesson Three: Gateways to the Mind. Teaching.

As the schools of missions last but six weeks, it may be necessary to combine chapters 4 and 5. However, outlines are given for the two chapters. Each class leader can select what is best adapted to her group.

Recently, while arranging a meeting in the interest of the Oriental Union Christian Colleges it was discovered, in an educational center that none of the ministers or missionary leaders knew anything about these colleges. If "Lighting the Christmas Candles" has not been given by some other organization in the town or the young people have not seen it, it is especially appropriate for this chapter. Use it in your class and then repeat it at a popular meeting in the church, receiving an offering for the same. We Baptists are responsible for $100,000 for these blessed institutions.

Hymn: "We've a Story to Tell." Don't sing the whole hymn every night. Use such verses as are in harmony with the lesson, or use just Christmas music for this program. During the giving of the pageant have the old Christmas songs played very softly. It certainly is impressive to note how very soft music, played sympathetically, takes away the self-consciousness and make a truly effective background. Always begin rehearsals with prayer. Just before the presentations have a word of prayer with those taking part.

Bible lesson: The Great Gift. Luke 2:7-18.

Prayer for those who have never heard the wonderful Story.

Concert reading: Paragraphs 3 and 4, page 65.

Charts 1 and 2. Sing Doxology as an expression of thanksgiving that we are in America.

Questions: 1. Why is illiteracy so great in India, after all these years of wise English leadership? 2. What are the causes of illiteracy in China, with its respect for learning? 3. How are these conditions being changed?

Talk: The Y. W. C. A., the Y. M. C. A. and the Chinese Government Schools.

Results of National Prohibition

The Convention President's Letter to Northern Baptist Churches

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

SOMETIMES matter of thrilling interest is congealed in the fine print of a government report. I recently received from the government printing office in Washington a copy of a speech delivered in the Senate of the United States by Sen. Wesley L. Jones of Washington. I have read every word of it, and advise every one to send for a copy and circulate it as widely as possible. But because I fear that few of you will take the trouble, and because I think that our vigilance ought to be greatly increased on this whole prohibition question, I am writing this abstract for Baptists, in the hope that they will become white-hot supporters of the policy of national prohibition. Our tendency is to regard the battle as won and to unbuckle our armor, when in reality the wily and unscrupulous enemy even now is banking on our over-confidence and plotting to defeat the amendment.

The Cry of the Wets

Senator Jones shows that the chief cry of the "wets" is that prohibition cannot be enforced, and that by this cry they are actually discouraging some of the supporters of prohibition, whereas the truth is that even the partial enforcement of prohibition is producing effects that are startling in their number and influence.

To meet the non-enforcement argument he quotes from Mr. Bryan as follows: "Complaint is made because there are still violations of the law. The law against murder has been on the statute books for over 100 years, and still some murders are committed and not all murderers are caught. The same is true as to the law against stealing. Last year about 2500 automobiles were stolen in Philadelphia, and 20 per cent of them were never found. Yet no one suggests the repealing of the law against stealing automobiles."

The attitude of distinguished foreign military authorities toward the prohibition law is cited. Gen. Diaz of Italy says: "I have brought no liquor with me, and I intend to drink none while I am here. I believe that while a guest in another country I should show the same respect for their laws as I would show for those of my own nation." General Foch announced that he would follow the American custom and take only water with his meals. Admiral Kato, delegate to the Disarmament Conference, omitted wine in the salute to the emperor on his birthday, saying, with fine courtesy: "This is a prohibition country, and we will not drink a toast but celebrate banzais"—the equivalent of three cheers in the American language. What an example to genuine Americans!

As to the experience of enforcing the prohibition law, Senator Jones shows that the reports from Ohio disclose the fact that "the enforcement department had collected in fines, forfeited bonds, and prohibitive taxes on the illegal sale of liquor an amount which represented four times the cost of the department, or in other words, enough to carry on the enforcement work for the next two years. It is manifest therefore that enforcement departments properly organized are not a burden on the taxpayers."

The question of arrests for drunkenness is treated exhaustively, and it is conclusively shown from official records that there has been a gratifying decline, one that we should hardly have dared hope for in the present disturbed condition. "Reports from chiefs of police in 51 largest cities of the United States, including New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis and cities of that size and former degree of wetness, and with a total population of over 20,000,000, show a slump in arrests for all causes from 960,603 in 1917 to 851,108 in 1920. The total arrests for drunkenness in these cities in 1917 were 307,108. This was cut to 108,835 in 1920, or almost 65 per cent of a decrease."

Police Commissioner Enright, of New York City, shows that crimes like burglary, assault, arson and murder declined from 15,000 in 1915 to 10,000 in 1920. Murders decreased 51 per cent and burglaries 10 per cent in Chicago during 1920 as compared with 1919, and the number of disorderly cases from 38,000 to 32,000."

The reports of the Massachusetts commission on prisons shows that the prison population of Massachusetts has declined from 108,185 in 1914 to 56,932 in 1921, and that the prison population of Boston has declined in the same period from 6000 to 3000, a decrease of 50 per cent.

In Ohio four work-houses have been closed and there are 10,000 fewer inmates under prohibition than under license. In Pittsburgh, Warden Lewis reports that in 1918 there were 14,684 prisoners committed to the jail; in 1920, only 4712. In Washington, D. C., there were 6590 commitments to the work-house in 1914; 2511 in 1919 and 833 in 1920. Mayor Smith of Louisville, Ky., reports a decrease of 84 per cent in the prison population in the first year of prohibition.

In the Former Beer Capital

In Milwaukee, the beer capital of the United States, there was a decrease between 1915 and 1920 of 38 per cent in cases of abandonment, 60 per cent in drunk and disorderly, 38 per cent assault and battery, and 59 per cent disorderly conduct. Governor Brown, of New Hampshire, reports in July, 1921, that there are but 43 jail inmates in the state. Richmond, Va., has increased 27 per cent in population during the years between 1917 and 1921, but her arrests for drunkenness and disorder have decreased 75 per cent.

Senator Jones then compares these results under imperfect prohibition to those in wet England, and finds a marked increase in drunkenness during the same period. The convictions for drunkenness in 1920 showed an increase of 65.26 per cent over those of 1919.

One of the most convincing exhibits of this pulverizing reply to the claims of the wets is found in the statistics regarding inebriate asylums. B. E. Neal, the president of the forty-five Neal Institutes for inebriates, reports:

"During the twelve years before the Volstead Act became effective, we treated more than 125,000 drinking men and women. Chicago and Cleveland Institutes treated more than 100 patients a month; Los Angeles and San Francisco averaged twenty-five to fifty a month. Today Neal institutes still operating do not average two patients a month. Drinkers are not turning to the use of drugs."

The Washington Home for Drunkards reports in the Chicago papers of Feb. 1, 1921, that during the years 1910 to 1919 it treated an annual average of 921; in 1920, only 125.

"The chief Keeley institute at Dwight is closed and has been taken over by the health department for injured soldiers, with accommodations for 230."

Dr. Horatio N. Pollock is authority for the statement that within two years after the eighteenth amendment became operative, "There were no state hospitals for inebriates left in the United States. The state asylum for inebriates in Minnesota is now a hospital for mental diseases. The Connecticut state hospital for inebriates is now a part of the Norwich state hospital for the insane. The state hospital for inebriates at Knoxville, Iowa, has become a United States public health service hospital for the treatment of mental defectives. These are the last of the state institutions for inebriates to be converted to other uses. The New York City industrial colony discontinued receiving inebriates in October, 1918, and was permanently closed in December of that year."

Working Men Benefitted

The report shows that two-thirds of the labor leaders interrogated by the Literary Digest—345 out of 526—answered "Yes" to the inquiry as to whether prohibition had benefitted the working man.

The evidence from the banks is so voluminous that only a sample can be given. The Peoria clearing house report shows a gain of 32,000,000 in the clearings of the year 1920 over the year 1919. The Comptroller of the Currency reports as follows, Nov. 8, 1921:

"Stagnated industry, business depression, and growing unemployment under ordinary circumstances would be expected to reduce the savings deposits, but they did not. Returns from 623 mutual savings banks, located principally in New England and the eastern states, show that on June 30, 1921, these institutions held deposits amounting to $5,575,181,000, credited to 9,619,250 depositors. One year previously the same banks had deposits of $5,186,485,000 and 9,445,327 depositors. This June the average deposit was $579.59, and a year ago it was $549.14. According to these figures there was a gain of $338,336,000 in the deposits of these banks and a gain of 173,933 in the number of depositors during the fiscal year. In the same period there was a gain of $30.45 in the average deposit. That unemployment increased during the last fiscal year is generally known, and that the trend of wages was downward is undeniable. Under these circumstances men and women ordinarily would be compelled to draw upon their reserves in savings institutions, and as a result the deposits of savings banks would be expected to shrink. Instead they expanded in the volume of deposits, the number of depositors, and the size of the average deposit."

Dr. C. W. Eliot, ex-president of Harvard, said in addressing the Twentieth Century Club in Boston, Oct. 29, 1921: "There are three classes whose testimony

A Church That Challenges Its Community

NEARLY five years ago the building of the Fountain Street Church, Grand Rapids, Rev. A. W. Wishart, pastor, was burned. For patriotic purposes building was postponed until after the war. Since then many meetings of the church have been held and a lot of hard work done. Magnificent pledges have been secured. On Nov. 1, in pledges, cash, real estate and securities the fund for the new building amounted to $407,000. The total amount desired was $605,000. A great banquet, attended by 1220 guests was held in the Coliseum on Nov. 16, at which time the building committee reported. At that time it was announced that in a clean-up campaign during the first two weeks in November, $22,246 had been raised. Generous pledges were then turned in by the district captains and cards passed among the guests with the result that more than $20,000 in new pledges was received on the spot. At the close of the meeting it was announced that nearly $40,000 had been raised.

As expressing the ideals in the minds of those connected with the enterprise, some of the remarks made by different ones at this banquet are illuminating. Lemuel S. Hillman, superintendent of the church school, told what the new building would mean to the Sunday-school pupils and what these boys and girls would mean to the church. He said: "We want to make our church not a communion of saints, but an engine of power for service in the community, which will take an active part in the affairs of the world. To develop moral backbone, lofty ideals, a rational view of religion and a reverence for God are the aims of our Sunday school, which tries to train boys and girls for Christian citizenship. This community needs the new church building, and the children need it. More than that, it needs them; they will be the men and women of tomorrow and they won't break faith with you."

H. C. Cornelius, chairman of the committee on architects and plans, told of the efforts of the community and how it arrived at the conclusion of its work. "We don't intend to throw away money, but we first decided what kind of a church we thought the members and the community needed, and then we left it up to you to decide whether we could build that church."

Dr. Wishart explained the architecture and plans of the church. He spoke especially of the high tower in which will be installed chimes to be played Sunday morning by the organist. He said: "A church should suggest spirituality, and appeal to the sense of beauty and worship. We believe that this aim has been achieved in our new church."

The church and church house cover nearly all of the land owned by the church at the corner of Fountain Street and Bostwick Avenue, including the site now occupied by Central Place, a little ground being reserved for grass and planting.

The material used in the exterior of the church is reddish color brick, trimmed with Indiana limestone. The roof is to be green tile.

The main entrance, up a few steps, and the entrance off Bostwick Avenue, which is on a level, open into the vestibule (73' x 20') under the gallery. This is screened off from the Auditorium by a wood glazed screen. There are four entrances from the vestibule into the auditorium (107' x 73'). This seats 1122 on the main floor and 628 in the galleries, which are placed on the sides and back of the church.

The windows which light the auditorium are entirely above the galleries and will give abundant light.

The pulpit platform is placed directly under a large arch at the south end. Beyond the arch is the choir gallery, and the organ which is beyond a pierced screen and fills the entire opening above the choir gallery.

The walls will be panelled from the floor to the under side of the gallery. The front of the gallery, the work about the pulpit, the singers' gallery, and the other woodwork in the auditorium will be black walnut like the old church.

The roof of the church is open timber work, the trusses to be of wood the same color as the work below, but it is desired to have the timbers decorated in keeping with the style of the architecture in which the church is carried out, both in the exterior and the interior, which is in the spirit of the early Christian churches, that were built in northern Italy and on the Adriatic coast in the very early days of the church when the enthusiasms of the people were still fresh and their energies unabated. It is felt that these ancient churches to this day are as inspiring and satisfying as they were in the beginning.

The baptistry is placed under the choir gallery and when the ceremony is carried out the pulpit and pulpit seat will be removed and the doors of the three central arches will be opened.

Under the organ are robing rooms, rooms for the musicians, deacons' office and exits from the galleries.

At the westerly end of the vestibule the door leads into a memorial tower, which runs up to a height of 162' above the sidewalk. The tower is built strong enough to house chimes that may be installed in the belfry.

The church house is planned generously to provide for all of the requirements of the modern city church. It has commodious accommodations for the church school, with separate rooms for kindergarten, junior, and intermediate departments, and for individual classes. The Women's Working Society will have specially equipped quarters. There will be a comfortable men's room. The church house assembly rooms will accommodate 800 people and 500 at a banquet.

The office of the church is on the first floor adjacent to the entrance of the church house with the ladies' parlor beyond. On the second floor are the executive offices and the pastor's office.

Mr. W. A. Jack has pledged himself to raise the funds for a great organ to cost approximately $50,000, and personally to provide for the salary of a master organist during a period of ten years.

The Washington Conference—Steady Strides Among the Snags

By WILLIAM AXLING

THIS conference is a cross section of life. On its stage the scenes shift with such suddenness that the spectators are amazed and dazed. Within the brief space of the past seven days the conference has alternately stood triumphant on its highest mount of hope and groped in dismay in its deepest depths of despair. Victory and defeat in rapid succession have filed across the field.

Japan Spikes Her Enemy's Guns

On the afternoon of Dec. 14 when Secretary Hughes met the accredited representatives of the press at the State Department there was a smile on his face that betokened victory. With the words, "Today I have something to tell you," he launched into the reading of the final agreement between America, England and Japan on the question of the ratio of naval reduction.

The agreement is practically an acceptance of the proposals put forth by Secretary Hughes in his dramatic speech on the opening day of the conference. The ratio of naval armament between these three powers is to stand at 5-5-3 as Secretary Hughes suggested. Sixty-eight capital ships of the "Big Three" are to be scrapped aggregating a combined tonnage of 1,861,643 tons. Japan is to keep the much coveted "Mutsu," which was launched the opening week of the conference, and scraps instead the "Settsu," one of her old ships. In return there is a readjustment within the program by which America and England scrap older and antiquated ships and retain or build newer and more modern ones. At the end of the ten years the relative naval strength of these three nations will stand as follows: England, 525,000 tons, America, 525,000 tons and Japan, 315,000 tons. This will make the permanent combined tonnage of these three powers 500,000 tons less than the total which they now propose to scrap. A ten-year naval holiday is a definite part of the schedule drawn up between these powers.

For ten years at least the tax-burdened peoples of these three nations are not going to be compelled to stagger around carrying $40,000,000 battleships on their backs. Moreover, billions of money and the industry of thousands of men in these lands will be diverted from the building of battleships to recuperative, productive and cultural channels. The emphasis will be thrown from the pursuits of war to those of peace. Thus the war-breeding cut-throat naval race between these three nations which had already attained so maddening a pace is at an end—let us fervently pray never to be revived.

The understanding includes an agreement on the part of these major naval powers to maintain the "status quo" as to fortifications and naval bases in the Pacific. America abandons the idea of making Guam a naval base. No restrictions, however, are placed on fortifying Hawaii. The islands on the coast of Japan and those adjacent to Australia and New Zealand are also not incorporated within the scope of this agreement. In other words, all offensive armament programs in the Pacific are definitely ditched and only defensive plans allowed to proceed.

Some consider the compromise agreement reached as a diplomatic victory for Japan. It is, however, a far greater victory for America, for better America-Japanese relation and for world peace. It proves to Japan that America is conciliatory and not attempting to be a dictator in the Pacific. America's yielding on the question of the "Mutsu" and on that of fortifications and naval bases lets Japan in on the ground floor of the agreement, removes the shadowy hand of coercion, shows it up as a fair and free deal and makes it possible for Japan to back up the agreement with 100 per cent of conviction and enthusiasm.

All of the official spokesmen have stressed the fact that conciliation and goodwill have characterized the negotiation through its various phases.

Secretary Hughes in announcing the agreement took occasion to speak in the highest terms of the fine spirit manifested by all concerned and stated that he believed it to be the greatest stride for permanent peace that has been made since Armistice Day.

Mr. Balfour in speaking of the agreement on the following day to the representatives of the press grew eloquent in his earnestness saying, "The advantage to mankind of the program which President Harding of the United States and his government initiated cannot be overestimated. It absolutely does nothing that any patriot may regret, if he considers only the safety and security of his country and of the other countries participating. It opens a new chapter in dealing with armament by putting sacrifice of arms on the part of the nations concerned as a basic principle. That to my mind is a wholly new result of international arrangement and it is going to be a landmark in history. It will diminish public burdens, relieve the economic strain, be a lesson in humanity and furnish an example for future reforms. It will accomplish all this without in the least infringing upon the security and honor of the countries involved."

Baron Kato in speaking to the same group an hour later said, "Japan as a whole will rejoice in the agreement as completely, if not actually more fully, than any other country in the world. Unless Japan were entirely in accord with the purpose of the other nations that will participate in this naval treaty, this agreement could not have been reached. It has been reached in substantially the form in which it was proposed by the United States and after less than five weeks of discussion."

"I may say that from the day the proposals were made the Japanese delegation, supported by its government and the people of Japan, were determined that their country should not be the one to prevent an agreement or even delay it beyond the barest necessity of time for adequate consideration. We have never bargained. We presented our case to the delegates of the powers concerned and at all times received, as we strove in our turn to give, fair consideration."

"Our attitude at this conference will, we hope, make futile hereafter any efforts such as have been made in the past to present Japan to you in the aspects of a bellicose nation, dangerous to the peace of the Pacific. For our part I am glad to say we have obtained unquestionable evidence that Japan need have no fear of hostile designs that may menace her security from the West. This will be a most gratifying relief to us."

The Friends of France Frown

Just as the conference was congratulating itself on the great victory which had been won, France threw a bomb into the camp. Her demand for 350,000 tons of capital ships, involving an expenditure of $400,000,000 in the building of ten new ships during the next ten years, as against the 175,000 tonnage allowed her in Secretary Hughes' proposals, shoved a crisis upon the conference. It came like a bolt out of the blue. Premier Briand accepted "in principle" Secretary Hughes' proposition for naval limitation, dramatically pled the "German peril" in justification of France's large army and returned to France. Ex-Premier Viviani participated in the conference's work for four weeks and then sailed away. Neither intimated that France was contemplating this violent "gesture." On the contrary both in the sentiments which they expressed and in their attitude they seemed to line up four-square behind the conference's program and its goals. This made France's demands all the more astounding.

She backed up her demands by arguing that during the war she poured out her life in building up her army and neglected her navy. Her capital ships are therefore antiquated and obsolete. A ten-years' naval holiday would put her fleet next neighbor to zero. She said if France had not been engaged in "saving civilization" she would today be in possession of a far stronger navy. England and America refuse to bind themselves to assist her in case of an unprovoked attack. She is therefore compelled to work out her own salvation. Moreover, she has over-sea possessions whose frontiers have to be guarded and their safety secured.

Various elements seem to enter into the creation of this awkward situation. The age-long rivalry between England and France is in this way projected across miles of sea and land into this conference. The trait and taste for bargaining is not confined to the Orient. This is interpreted as a mere diplomatic "gesture" on France's part in order to get material with which to bargain. From the start there has been no expectation that France would rigidly insist on her demands. The French delegation is not in the happiest of moods. France was not admitted into the Pacific peace pact until the last moment. She was in no way admitted into the negotiations connected with the three-power naval question. Some assert that the French delegation put on an old-world secret-diplomacy, stir-up-trouble stunt. It, however, fell flat in the sweet-aired, open-hearted atmosphere of this conference.

To France's demands America said "Incredible." England replied "preposterous." Japan remained discreetly silent. Italy said, "We understood this was a conference to limit naval armament and not to increase it. We are opposed to an increase in our navy but must demand an equality with France."

Secretary Hughes also at this juncture indulged in a violent "gesture" which reached clear across the Atlantic. He appealed over the heads of the French delegation direct to Premier Briand telling him that, "the attitude of France in this question will determine the success or failure of the conference." France's premier could not face the possibility of wrecking the conference and so beat a hasty retreat by accepting conditionally the 175,000 tonnage of capital ships allotted to France. This relieved the strain and the conference has moved forward and tackled another major problem, that of the submarine, which England is anxious to outlaw as a weapon of warfare. One cannot but regret that in her desire to ban the submarine England seems to stand alone.

The Shantung Negotiations at a Standstill

So encouraging had been the progress made in the negotiations concerning Shantung that a satisfactory solution seemed all but in sight. The reparations committee of the League of Nations set a valuation of 53,000,000 marks on the Kiaochow Tsinanfu railroad. This sum Japan agreed to reimburse Germany for German rights and property in the province when they were turned over to her. In addition Japan has spent $10,400,000 on improvements since the road came into her hands.

Japan early in the negotiations yielded on every point which China brought forward regarding the return of Shantung and now for two weeks the discussion has centered around the railroad and the iron mines and coal fields which appertain to it. Japan finally agreed to turn over every thing involved, within nine months for a money remuneration on China's part covering Japan's expenditures. She asked China, however, in order to maintain the railroad's efficient management, to appoint some Japanese experts for service on the line. This is a long-established custom in China when foreign capital is invested in her railroads. Japan does not ask that her experts be appointed for permanent service on this road. She simply desires to safeguard her interests during the period of transfer. Moreover, 20,000 Japanese have settled in Shantung during Japan's regime there and have invested $70,000,000 in building factories and launching business enterprises. Japan is willing that China should take over the railroad and the mines in full title. She feels, however, that both the Chinese and her own nationals who are engaged in industrial enterprises will suffer if China takes over too abruptly the complete administration of this road. A deadlock has thus developed on the question as to the mode of payment and the administration of the railroad during the interval of transfer. The Japanese delegates have yielded up to the limit of their instructions and now the whole matter has been referred to Tokyo.

Both sides are earnestly seeking a way by which to cut this Gordian knot. Just as this article is rushed to the mail Mr. Hanibara of the Japanese delegation, referring to this deadlock, said, "I believe a happy solution will yet be found. This question has assumed such proportions in the minds of the people everywhere that it must be settled. Should the conference close with this problem unsolved there would be a feeling that in the Far East there still loomed large an unsettled problem. This would cause unrest and create suspicion. For the sake of China, Japan, and all the nations here concerned this riddle must be solved."

The Quest of the King

By MARY W. VASSAR

HE rode and he rode to Bethlehem town far over the shining plain,
There was gold upon his trappings and gems gleamed at his rein;
His dress was the royal purple, rich-broidered, heavy-furred,
And his sleek white mare was slender and young, and graceful and swift as a bird.

The night was cold in Bethlehem town, the winds were high and shrill,
The stars in the heavens were needle-points, the moon rode white and still:

But off in a field beside the road a fire was burning bright
And beside it a group of shepherds were whiling away the night.

The rider neared and hailed them, "I pray, good folk," called he,
"Is this not David's city, where dwelleth the king to be?"

For I have come to pay tribute, and gifts of good-will to bring.

I, too, am heir of a royal race, and come from my sire, the king!"

Then a gray-haired man, the eldest, made answer, grave and slow,
"There dwelleth no king in David's town for aught that I may know.

There are many noble ones there met, for the taxing doth begin,
But if ye seek for a royal prince, he must abide at the inn.

But hearken, my lord—a marvellous thing befell us yesternight!
We lay by the fire and watched our sheep, when, sudden, a wondrous light
Like the glory of God shone over us, and in silent awe we heard
The voice of a shining angel, who spake this gracious word.

'Fear not, for I bring good news to you! This night there is born a child!'

The stranger turned his steed about and sudden and scornful smiled.

"Now, what care I for the mighty news your unknown guest did bring?

I spake not of babes, ye graybeard dolt, I seek for a mighty king!"

He turned him back to the road again; the wind was piercing keen,
The moonlight flooded the sleeping town with its chilly silver sheen.

But as he drew near the city gates there rang the heavens along,
Sweet and far-off in the lull of the wind, the voice of a heavenly song!

"Lord over all the lords of earth and King above kings is he,

Rulers shall bow in the dust to him and princes shall bend the knee.

Say to the north, 'Lo! give you up' and 'Keep not back!' to the south,

For the east and the west and the isles of the sea shall be rule by the word of his mouth."

The stranger's eyes gleamed bright with hope. "The end of my quest is near!"

Then he roused the dreaming gate-keeper, "Open, a prince is here!"

He entered in through the city gates and came to the inn at last,

Its doors shut tight to the bitter air, and bolted safe and fast.

He beat upon the close-shut door "Hasten! I may not wait!"

Till the yawning porter, sleepy-eyed, had opened wide the gate.

Of the host who came to welcome he questioned, eager, low,

"Doth the heir to David's throne lodge here? Speak, for I needs must know!"

The host bent low in greeting, "Alas, my lord, I fear

That the mighty one for whom ye seek may not be lodging here.

There are high-born men and folk of wealth, but sadly must I own

There is never a man among them all might sit on David's throne."

Then fell upon the stranger's face a sudden and angry frown.

"I needs must lodge me here tonight—tomorrow I search the town.

Bring food and drink, and spread me a couch, ye can find a spot some where:

But first let me go and see how ye use my beautiful, swift white mare."

He passed to the rock-hewn stable where horses and cattle lay,

With his own hands fed and caressed the mare, then wearily turned away,

When a light from a room adjoining fell on him, clear and plain,

And out through the rocky doorway, he heard the song again!

"Awake, awake, oh Zion! Rejoice! Arise and shine,

For the glory of God is risen on thee, and the promised light is thine!

He cometh, the great Deliverer, to lead the exiles home;

And Gentiles shall haste to thy splendor, and kings to thy brightness come."

The stranger passed the threshold, but no rich-robed prince was there,

Only a pale young mother was sleeping, calm and fair

With an arm outstretched, protecting, in the world-old mother way, Toward a rough-hewn crib close by her side, where a new-born baby lay.

But the stranger fell upon his knees and laid his haughty head

On the baby's homely cradle where oxen and sheep had fed.

For the Spirit of God upon him came, and sweeter than ere before

There rang through the happy silence the heavenly song once more.

"He shall gather the lambs in his bosom, his flock he shall gently lead,

He shall not quench the smoking flax nor break the bruised reed,

He shall loosen the bonds of the prisoners, to the blind bring light of day,

And the poor shall he guide in judgment, and the meek shall he teach his way.

Flowers shall spring up where briars grew and lion with lamb shall dwell,

For a little child shall leader be, whose name is Immanuel;

Mercy and truth have met and kissed and earth is nigh to heaven,

For us this day a Child is born and the King of Kings is given!"

Flag the Train of Thought

(Being New Year's Mottoes for Everyday Use!)

ONCE upon a time there were seven Ladies-With-Eyes-In-The-Back-Of-Their-Heads. And they were friends one of another. So there often were occasions when they spoke bluntly, which is a Pleasant Thing among friends. Also unpleasant! At the end of one year, they reviewed the past, looking through the eyes in the backs of their heads, they saw that they had several unfortunate failings apiece; so they said to each other in all frankness: "What shall we do about these failings? Here we are exactly as bad as we were a year ago and, if anything, even a little more so! Now why shouldn't we be better each year as we grow older, instead of worse? Why?"

Whereupon one of them quoted: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

"Oh!" cried Another with happy briskness, "then why don't we flag the train of thought?"

"Is that a riddle?" sang the remaining Sextette, tout ensemble.

"No, just a danger signal," she replied, "in the form of a Motto, you know,—to be tucked in the corner of our mirrors to flag our trains of thought a dozen times a day (while we think!) and so shift ourselves off onto new tracks, which may eventually land us Somewhere by next New Years Day!"

"Delectable!" they cried. Let us collect suitable Mottoes at once and lay them side by side to choose from, for we may suggest rare things to each other."

They collected Mottoes, therefore; and pencilled little notes of explanation so timely and forceful and cogent that we have the temerity to share them with you. For it may be that many a Chimney Corner reader is also of the genus Eye-In-The-Back-Of-Her-Head: looking backward, like Lot's wife, she may worry over the necessity of being publicly pointed to as The Salt Of The Earth,—so large do her flaws of yesterday loom.

So side by side they laid their Mottoes on a long table; then, in order to choose, they walked slowly around it, reading, and an amazing thing happened: for whichever Motto a lady read she would immediately say something like this: "Araminta, darling, this is your handwriting and I know you wrote it specially for me! It fits me to a T!"

"My dear Ianthia!" Araminta would cry, "I wrote that one for myself. Surely you can see it's Me all over! Although this one in Jemima's writing is meant for me, too, I know—"

"Not a bit of it!" cried Jemima, "that Motto pricks my own peculiar shortcomings, but Lucetta's really hits me even closer."

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Lucetta, in her turn, disclaimed having any one but herself in mind, so finally they went home armed with a copy apiece of all the Mottoes: "For," said they, "there are moods that play upon us more powerfully one day than another. We will be prepared to flag each train of thought!"

And these are the Mottoes that did that signal service:

1. If a procrastinator—"DO IT NOW."

If there is a hole—mend it now.

If there is an outgrown coat—donate it now.

If there is a service you appreciate—express it now.

If there is Missions idling on the table—read it now.

If there is a subscription to the New World Movement due—pay it now.

If there is no subscription to the New World Movement—pledge it now.

2. If self-centered—"OTHERS!"

(The motto Phillips Brooks kept ever before him.)

Others!—when sitting in the street car, absent-mindedly occupying a seat and a half.

Others!—when standing midway of same street car as the conductor shouts: "Kindly move forward in the car!"

Others!—when shopping, and the weary clerk would appreciate a more coherent recital of what is desired.

Others!—when it comes to greeting the stranger strayed into the same pew.

Others!—when an unexpected gift of money raises a vision of a pet vanity satisfied.

3. If in a rut: "ANYWHERE—SO IT BE FORWARD!"

(The words of David Livingstone in darkest Africa, when they urged him to take life easier, and rest.)

Never have tried invigorating the missionary meetings? Anywhere—so it be forward!

Never have lifted up your voice in said meetings? Anywhere—so it be forward!

Never have spoken to Sunday school scholars about a personal religion? Anywhere—so it be forward!

Never have suggested to the pastor that the church isn't in line denominationally yet? Anywhere—so it be forward!

Never have sent for an array of free leaflets on these subjects to bombard the callous? Anywhere—so it be forward!

4. If easily tearful: "EMOTION IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR MOTION."

A crying shame that there is nobody to give missionary instruction in the Sunday school? Emotion is no substitute for Motion!

A crying shame that the Juniors aren't organized into a Crusader Company? Emotion is no substitute for Motion!

A crying shame that the World-Wide Guild girls have never enough money to conduct a reading contest? Emotion is no substitute for Motion!

A crying shame that the Woman's Society never has a mission study class? Emotion is no substitute for Motion!

A crying shame that missionary plays are not occasionally presented at the mid-week prayer service to draw young and old? Emotion is no substitute for Motion!

A crying shame that nobody fervently solicits subscriptions to Baptist periodicals and "Everyland" in your church? Emotion is no substitute for Motion!

A crying shame that your church has never "adopted" two missionaries, one at home and one abroad, to warm their hearts (and yours) with letters and friendly boxes? Emotion is no substitute for Motion!

5. If naturally enthusiastic: "LET ME BURN OUT FOR GOD."

(Said first by Henry Martin in India.)

Suppose for one year every church member directed his or her first enthusiasms (which by the way means "God in

The New Year

OH I am the little New Year, oh ho!
Here I come tripping it over the snow;
Shaking my bells with a merry din,
So open your doors and let me in!

Blessing I bring for each and all,
Big folks and little folks, short and tall,
Each one from me a treasure shall win,
So open your doors and let me in.

For I am the little New Year, oh ho!
Here I come tripping it over the snow;
Shaking my bells with a merry din,
So open your doors and let me in.

What Mr. Twenty Questions Did on New Year's Night

"WELL, all I've got to say is—I don't like Jews," said Mrs. Jones at their big New Year's dinner, "and for my part I wish there wasn't one of them in America!"

Now Ellen Jones had been so busy eating turkey and cranberry sauce and squash and celery and salted nuts and all the other wonderful things on her plate that she had not the least idea what all this conversation was about, but she carefully saved up that one startling remark of her mother's until bed-time that night, then she said: "Why don't you like Jews, mother dear?"

Her mother stared at her, surprised: "Your ears are too big, Ellen Jones!" she answered. "Hop into bed this minute!"

So Ellen hopped. But the little question dangled around unanswered, for she had just finished her prayer and that made her inquire: "Doesn't God like the Jews, either, mother?"

Mrs. Jones was hanging Ellen's clothes over the back of a chair, and she answered: "Oh, yes, dear, God likes everybody. Why, he made every single one of us, as I am sure you know."

Of course!

"Then why?... Why?..."

"Well," sighed Ellen closing her eyes, "I really don't suppose it would make the least little bit of difference to anybody if there weren't any Jews in America, now would it?"

Suddenly there was a sigh so loud that she opened her eyes, and there sat Mr.

Twenty Questions. That just had to be his name, my dears, because everything about him formed a question mark—each of his eyes was a question, his ears, his nose, his lips; all questions! And even a little curl on top of his hair rose up on end, a question mark, too!

"Ellen," sighed Mr. Twenty Questions, touching the Peter Thompson suit, which her mother had given her on Christmas, "who cut out this blue serge for your little school dress, my dear?"

"I don't know," said Ellen, "you see, mother bought it ready-made, and I suppose somebody or other fixed it, but I don't know who."

"Somebody or other!" sighed Mr. Twenty Questions. "How you talk! Well, that somebody was a Jew. I happen to know." Then he turned the dress inside out: "Now tell me who sewed all these neat little seams for you?"

"I'm sure I don't know," said Ellen softly, "do you?"

"Yes—a Jew sewed them! Do you know who pulled out all the tiresome white basting threads for you?"

"I haven't an idea," said Ellen, "who was it, please?"

"A Jew, my dear. Now who sewed on these buttons?"

Ellen smiled in a very wise fashion this time: "Maybe it was a Jew, was it?"

"It was! And who stitched on these yards and yards of braid?"

"A Jew?" suggested Ellen.

"Exactly, a Jew. And who made your father's overcoats, and your father's trousers, and your father's vests, and your father's suit-coats?"

"A Jew," said Ellen faintly.

"Precisely, a Jew. And who made your mother's heavy coat, and your mother's suit, and your mother's fur collar?"

"I guess it was a Jew," said Ellen.

"True, quite true! A Jew! And who made uniforms for almost all the soldiers in the army?"

"Jews?" questioned Ellen, her eyes like saucers.

"Correct! Jews. And who made your mother's gold wedding ring and her watch and a great deal of her other jewelry?"

"Was it Jews?" asked Ellen.

"That's it—Jews. And who pasted together the heavy cardboard boxes and the big and little boxes that collars and neckties and candy come in?"

Ellen stared—"Oh, Mr. Twenty Questions, what a lot the Jews do for us, don't they?"

"Yes, my dear, and I could go on this way for hours, asking you questions, questions, questions. And all you need answer would be the one little word 'Jew!' Now when somebody you like makes you something, what do you generally say if you want to be thought polite?"

"I say, 'Thank you,'" said Ellen dimpling.

"Precisely. Now listen, Ellen! Jews have been running our factories and stores until we're so used to the clothes they make for us that we've stopped being thankful; and they look at Christians and say to themselves: 'There isn't a bit of difference between Jews and Christians. They're no better than we are, not a bit.' Yet who was the very best Christian that ever lived?"

"It must have been Jesus," said Ellen. "Yes, my dear. And what nationality was He?"

"Why... Why... Why, He was a Jew!" gasped little Ellen Jones in great surprise.

"Exactly! A Jew! God chose to have his only son born a Jew. But he was so full of love and goodness nobody ever remembered his nationality, they just said: 'Behold, the son of God.' Would you like to have me tell you a secret?"

"Indeed, I would!" cried Ellen.

"Then whenever you see a Jew, or hear of a Jew, you must always say to yourself: 'Behold, a son of God.' For if enough of us think this of Jews they will begin to be it, you know! But of course this isn't a secret, after all, for the more people you tell it to, the more people will try to think of Jews as Jesus thinks of them."

Ellen sighed: "I do wish my mother could meet you, sir. For there never was anybody so thankful as she was over my Peter Thompson dress. Over and over she says how grateful she is for children's ready-made clothes, since they save her time and strength and money. Yet here she is, hating the very people who did all that work for her. Oh, wouldn't it be nice—?"

"Wouldn't what be nice, dear?" asked Mrs. Jones trying to wake her up, because it was now morning.

"Oh, wouldn't it be nice if you and I could think a Thank You all the time about Jews, then maybe they'd see how Christian Christians really are."

"Ellen Jones, have you been dreaming about Jews all night long, sweetheart?"

"I guess maybe I have," Ellen confessed, "and mother, Mr. Twenty Questions especially said that if Jews find us disliking them then they can't see any use in changing and becoming Christians. I—I didn't know they thought about us, as we thought about them, did you?"

Mrs. Jones kissed the question right off Ellen's lips; but somehow it crept deep down into her heart and made her want to carry her church so every one would love it—especially Jews!

And this, I think, was a fine way to start the new year; don't you think so, too?

This Class Would Grow 1000 Per Cent

The Men's Baraca Class of the Second Church of Lincoln, Neb., is the outgrowth of the unlimited faith on the part of a few men. The class had an average attendance of about ten; and all the while these men saw in the background a class of one hundred. They were not dismayed by the small number present, but rather saw in that meager number potentialities that made the class of one hundred an assured fact in no far-distant future. They prayed about the matter and then they worked—worked mighty hard, too.

The first thing that was done was to organize the class for a larger service to church and community. The general officers and teachers were elected and four committees appointed—membership, social, efficiency, and missions. Straightway—like the men of whom Jesus spoke to whom were given the ten and the five talents—the membership committee got "on the job" and in a few Sundays the class was having an average attendance of four and five times the original number. The Efficiency Committee is putting out a weekly bulletin that gets matters before the men in a practical way with no loss to the teaching time. The committee is also getting the class such publicity as is helpful to its proper growth and standing. The Social Committee meets the problem of getting the men acquainted and is putting on a monthly social that is largely attended and greatly worth-while. It is also planning to care for needs of some poor families in the neighborhood. The Committee on Missions is from time to time bringing prominent men of authority from the outside to address the class with telling effect on the various social, moral, and religious problems of the city. The committee will also help in pushing the various plans and programs of the denomination, such as stewardship, and so on. The definite plan of the class is to find a job for every man, for they recognize the fact as it has been so well put, "Use me or lose me."

The class in its remarkable growth has been an inspiration to both the church and Sunday school. The latter has decidedly felt the results in increased interest and attendance throughout the school. More than that, the class has been a challenge to many other Sunday schools in the city. While the Second Baptist Church has a resident membership of about only 225, yet the Men's Baraca Class is the largest men's class in the city, and other churches are asking these men to explain how the thing was done.

The men of the class have worked in the closest of fellowship with their pastor, the Rev. Henry G. Smith, who came to the church about a year ago from Berwick, Ill.

ELIJAH'S CHALLENGE OF BAAL WORSHIP
1 Kings 18:1-46. Golden Text: 1 John 5:4

Survey

Three years have passed since Elijah took refuge in Cherith and later in the widow's house. During this time his prophecy to Ahab has come true—there has been no rain in the land. Desperate, Ahab instructs Obadiah to go in one direction while he himself will go in another to find water. Obadiah meets Elijah, who, at God's command, is already on the way to Ahab to tell him that the drought will soon be broken. Obadiah reluctantly returns to Ahab to tell him of the coming of Elijah, and Ahab comes to meet the prophet. It is here the lesson opens.

Setting

Mount Carmel is one of the distinctive points of Palestine. It was the ancient site of Baal worship, and in making that the spot for the test, Elijah was invading foreign territory—territory where God would be at disadvantage, according to the popular belief of the day that the deities had power only in their own domains. This was Baal's domain. It is eighteen miles from Mount Carmel to Jezreel.

Lesson Story

This is one of the most dramatic stories in history. Elijah alone against 400 and more issues a challenge to the false god. Apparently all the advantage lies with Baal and his worshippers. Two bullocks were to be dressed and laid upon wood with no fire under it. "And the God that answereth by fire, let him be God." The people agreed, "It is well spoken." Elijah examined the place beneath the altar because that was often supplied with fire to be fanned into flame to deceive the people into believing in false gods. Then he poured over his bullock four jars of water. It must be understood that if fire appeared it was the work of God and had been brought about in no underhand way. While the Baalites prayed loudly, hysterically, gashing their bodies with their swords, Elijah spoke in simple faith to God. "Then the fire fell and consumed the burnt offering and licked up the water that was in the trench." "And they said, Jehovah, he is God."

Leading Thoughts

(a) Again Elijah's faith and obedience. Always these illumine every act of this rugged prophet.

(b) The power of a man with God behind him. What are 450 against one such?

(c) The testing of a real religion need never be feared. God always triumphs.

GOD IN OUR LIVES
Gal. 5:16-26

"If we live by the Spirit, by the Spirit let us also walk."

1. We must know God. Dr. Mullins states that there are six sources from which we may know God: (a) The facts of nature and of man. (b) The facts of religious consciousness. (c) The study of comparative religion. (d) The decisions of ecclesiastical courts and councils as expressed in creeds and articles of faith. (e) The Bible. (f) The revelation of God through Jesus Christ.

2. We must live God. Proclamations of every sort are of no avail unless the life is right. "If we live by the Spirit, by the Spirit let us walk." If God is in the life and has possession of the individual, there are certain things which that individual cannot do (See Gal. 5:16-21) without suffering dire consequences. Prohibitions are not enough, however. Some one has said that one could keep the decalogue and not be Christian. The decalogue is made up practically of "Don't's." Jesus said "This do." Both negative and positive are needed. "God in us" means practical everyday resultants:

(a) Love. Not that wishy-washy, sentimental, sob-stuff. But a genuine heart affection for our fellow-Christians, and especially for those who do not know the Saviour; a love which will cut straight across the color line; a love that will break down racial barriers.

(b) Joy, peace. Christmas has just passed. We sang with considerable gusto, "Joy to the world" and quoted "Peace on earth," but how many there are who repeat those phrases with the mechanics of an automaton. There are lots of things going on in the world to upset folks, but if God has a large place in our lives, we can have real joy and a peace that abides.

(c) Longsuffering. That's the limit. Why should we suffer, and what for? Why should we give up for others? Why should we suffer for them? Alas, alas how few of us have yet caught the forbearing spirit of our Lord! We are so restive and impatient. We are in such a hurry. There are lots of folks in the world who have not advanced as fast as we have. They need us. They are asking us to help, and yet they are so slow to respond. Longsuffering! Yes. It was His method.

(d) Kindness, goodness. It hardly seems that one could be good without being kind, but it is true. But it costs to be kind and good, you say, and folks so misunderstand. True, but how in all the wide world will folks ever find out that we have God in our lives unless we have these traits of character? The man in the store or on the street does not read your Bible, but he will read your life. Does he find God as he turns the pages?

(e) Faithfulness. When everything goes wrong, and folks don't seem to appreciate, and some go so far as to criticize? Exactly. If we are to be true to God, we have no option in the matter. We must be faithful under any and every circumstance. Some one reminds us that such action does not always pay. Of course, it does not always pay in material returns, but to the faithful soul there are spiritual values eminently worth while. It is not a mercenary motive that holds that great-souled missionary away out on the foreign field, faithful to his task. Ask him, he will tell you.

(f) Meekness, self-control. Not a pious, cloister look, or a vacillating weakling. A great big fine manly or womanly body, full of life, appreciative of the meaning of life; under control. My, what a picture! I think the Master was just such a young man.

SECONDS DR. TAFT'S SUGGESTION

I wish most heartily to second the suggestion of Dr. Taft with respect to the need of two books dealing with the history, development and present extent of our foreign and home mission work. Many times have I personally felt the need of information which I did not know where to find or concerning which I had only a very general knowledge. Two such books as Mr. Taft suggests would be of great value in acquainting our native pastors in the various mission fields with the extent and importance of our Baptist work. I believe that a fuller appreciation of the extended work of Baptists in the states would inspire a greater zeal to a larger effort in their own behalf and in behalf of more needy fields. By all means let us have these two books, and the sooner the better.

Rio Piedras, P. R. G. A. RIGGS.

THIS BROTHER LIKES HIS JOB

In your issue of Dec. 17, in the Open Forum, there appeared an article from some one, I do not know who, but from some rural pastor who seemingly is very much discouraged. I wish to extend to him my sympathy. Not because he is a country pastor, but because he feels as he does about his task. The biggest man in all this world and the man with the biggest task is the one whom God has sent out in the rural districts to build up his kingdom. If there is any satisfaction in working at a big task, and the writer thinks there is, the country preacher ought to be the most contented man in all the world.

I, too, am a country pastor. I, too, have been on the present field only a little over two months. I, too, have members who have fine homes and farms, and we have several children in these Baptist homes, coming on; but we are very short at the present time on hogs, and what few we have are regular pork hogs. If there is a human hog in the community we have not found it out yet.

My people are a fine lot of jolly folk, and I love them, and so would you if you could only get acquainted with them. I do not think they are perfect; if they were I would not be at home among them, for I am part human myself. Now what I wish to say is this, I would not want to have a single member think I felt about my task as this brother does, and yet you see from some few comparisons they might. I do not think that I should have to apologize to my people because of unsigned articles in our church paper. Therefore I ask that you make it known through the Open Forum, wherever that article might have come from, it was not from the pastor of the Spring Creek Church of Dayton Association in the state of Ohio.

RULES FOR THIS PAGE

1. No article must exceed 400 words. The editors will cut copy to that limit in the interest of fair play to all.
2. No attacks upon persons, either directly or by implication, will be allowed.
3. Controversy as such will be avoided, but every man or woman who honestly believes that he has a vital message for the denomination will be given a hearing.
4. Articles which are merely repetitions of arguments previously published will not be used while there is new matter on hand.
5. The editors reserve the right to terminate any particular discussion whenever it seems to them wise to do so.

I believe that if the conditions exist under our brother's care as he says, and he feels as he does about it, he should tell the Lord and not the public. It might be that the Lord would act as a sort of a bishop, or superintendent or whatever you call those fellows in giving our brother an easier task. Why become alarmed! The work is the Lord's; we are only servants; our business is to serve him and it's his business to get results from out service.

"And he spoke a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray and not to faint" (Luke 18:1). I believe if our brother can get hold of "Garden's Quiet Talks on Power;" "Quiet Talks on Prayer;" and "Quiet Talks on Service," and also a little book by Albert J. Beverage, "Work and Habits," he will find them great helpers; at least they have been so to me. I believe there is great danger today in trying to set up a nice lot of machinery and not take much thought about our oil supply to run it with. Machinery is fine, but doesn't work well without oil.

Now if you please, I wish you might make it plain to the people of this neighborhood that the former article was not from me.

Piqua, Ohio.

MINISTERIAL STUDENTS IN THE SOUTH

While the radical decline in the number of young men offering themselves for the Christian ministry in many of the leading denominations of America led to a recent widespread discussion in both the religious and secular press as to the reasons why young men are no longer attracted to the ministry, an investigation just completed by the writer reveals the fact that there has not been a decline among the students for the ministry among Southern Baptists, but that there is a marked increase in the number of such students instead.

With a half-dozen of the small institutions of learning not reporting the writer finds that there are a total of 2397 ministerial students doing resident work at the Southern Baptist seminaries and schools, and of this number 2177 are in institutions of college rank, leaving only 220 in the academies.

Of the three Southwide seminaries the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville reports 364 ministerial students, the Southwestern Seminary at Fort Worth 242, and the Baptist Bible Institute at New Orleans seventy-five. The total enrollment in the institutions of the various states of the Southern Baptist Convention, exclusive of the three Southwide institutions named, is as follows: Alabama, sixty-seven; Arkansas, sixty; Florida, twenty-one; Georgia, 179; that portion of Illinois co-operating with the Southern Baptist Convention, eighteen; Kentucky, eighty-six; Louisiana, forty-six; Mississippi, 113; Missouri, 152; North Carolina, 175; Oklahoma, sixty-four; South Carolina, 126; Tennessee, 176; Texas, 320, and Virginia, 113. Maryland has no Baptist school and the college in New Mexico will not be opened until Sept., 1922.

Bread and Hyacinths

By JEAN PAXTON

ACROSS the bold, black type that tells
Of students starved for bread and books,

There comes a misty blur of words;
Out of a cloistered past:

"Had I two loaves I'd fain sell one
And buy me hyacinths,
For hyacinths would feed my soul."

And this indictment stabs my mind:
We in America add loaf to loaf
And only now and then buy hyacinths;
While over there they sell half-loaves
To buy a bit of time to think.

To those that know that hyacinths can feed

There comes the call to a diviner deed—
To share the loaf to fill another's need
For hyacinths—and bread.

Christians should be a song and a ray of sunshine all day long. I often feel that I cannot blame young people for not being Christians. In many a case it is because older Christians are so unattractive. May we let God show us that it is His will that we should be beautiful for Him!—T. R. O'MEARA.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By ROBERT W. SHAW

The Retreats

During the past week there have been held four retreats and evangelistic conferences throughout the state. These meetings, while not largely attended, have been of great blessing to all the pastors who attended. As a result there has come about a conviction among the brethren that there should be a state-wide effort of evangelism among our Baptist churches this winter and spring. It is probable that the state will be divided into four districts, and that a well-known pastor in the state will be asked to take charge in the directing of the meetings in the districts. The method of pastoral exchange is likely to be followed. Dr. H. F. Stillwell, and Dr. A. LeGrand were the special speakers.

The State Board

In Wisconsin most of the business is transacted by the board of managers of the convention. A meeting of the board was held the last of November and certain routine business was transacted. This state has made its fiscal year to correspond with that of the national societies, and so the gap was bridged over at this meeting. Dr. H. A. Heath, and Rev. W. H. Bowler were present to set up the Continuation Campaign. The board voted to pay the initial fee of the state superintendent in the Minister's Pension Fund.

Some Notes

Rev. A. T. Erickson, of Green Bay, who is in his third year, reports more than forty additions since the Easter time. All the activities of the church are moving forward in a satisfactory way. The New World Movement has received a good support from the church, and the finances of the church are in good shape. The pastor and the church are reaching out and touching some of the weaker places near by.

At Fond du Lac, Pastor Robert Gordon, reports good work being done. Dr. Gordon is called upon frequently for outside addresses, and recently his addresses before the Twilight Club, the Rotary Club, the Federation of Woman's Clubs, and the Community Meeting on Armistice Day received cordial commendation on the part of the city papers. During November he gave four addresses in his church on World Peace. The addresses were on "British-American Relations," "Japanese-American Relations," "The International Mind," and "Patriotism and Internationalism."

Pastoral Changes

On Dec. 1 Pastor A. L. Drake began his work with the First Church of Waukegan, after a three-year pastorate at Lake Geneva. The church has given him a cordial welcome.

H. C. Carnell, who recently came to the Bay View Church, of Milwaukee, from Antigo, is now settled in the parsonage, and finding much to do. Pastor and people are happy in the new settlement.

Rev. S. M. Duyzers is now the acceptable pastor at Barron. This brother recently came to the Baptists from the Presbyterians, though originally he was an Anabaptist in Holland. The people speak very highly of him in his new work.

W. C. Osburn, one of our field workers, is just closing up a work in Wyocena. Here he has led the church in the remodeling of its church plant. Mr. Osburn will close his work with the convention the last of this month. He is open to a pastorate. He may be addressed at Madison.

Rev. J. W. Patterson has closed his work with the First Church of Darlington.

Pastor J. S. Wallace, of Madison, recently suffered the fracture of two ribs. He is improving and will soon be back to work.

Rev. S. R. Dunlop, has closed his work with Hillsdale and is now settled with the church at Omro. He did a good work with a group of churches of which Hillsdale was the center.

Rev. E. R. MacKinney, of Eau Claire, recently spent a week-end with Pastor Keelcy at Delavan. There were nine conversions as the result of his preaching from Thursday to Sunday inclusive.

Pastor J. W. Johnson has resigned his work at Stoughton to accept the pastorate of the First Church at Portage.

Then and Now

By CHARLES L. WHITE

Dr. J. Foster Wilcox recently addressed 2000 boys at a great meeting of an Older Boys' Conference in Saginaw, Mich., on the subject of the will of God and life work. It is interesting to remember that Saginaw was the first church which Dr. Morehouse served and where he had a notable ministry which resulted in a great revival and the building up of a vigorous organization with the erection of a suitable meeting house. From this frontier point of fifty years ago Dr. Morehouse used to make extensive journeys into the wilderness of western and northern Michigan, encouraging the new settlers to begin the Christian life, and to lay strong and deep foundations which have resulted in many churches and vigorous communities.

In Saginaw itself in those days it was difficult to drive through the Main Street of the city because the stumps of the trees were still standing. "How far that little candle sends its beams! So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

What has happened in Saginaw during the last half century has happened in thousands of communities in the West where the Home Mission Society was the agent of the denomination in laying the first foundations on which have been built strong spiritual superstructures.

A few weeks ago I stood with Pres. Chamberlain in the college cemetery sacred spot on the hill under the trees of Granville. We stopped for a moment in front of Dr. William Ashmore's grave and thought of other days when we met him face to face as he kindled our hearts with his burning messages of our missionary work in China.

We went then and stood by the grave of Pres. E. Benjamin Andrews, whose great life had been an inspiration to us in common with thousands of young men who sat in his classes and were strengthened by his words. From there we walked to the grave of Pres. Jonathan Going, the first corresponding secretary of the Home Mission Society. He had been called from the pastorate of the First Church of Worcester into the service of the society, and after a few years felt the call to the college of Granville, believing that another could be found to do his work in New York, while he devoted his life to building up a Christian college from which could go into seminaries men to be trained for the ministry and home and foreign mission work. The call to Shurtleff College came at the same time and Pres. Chamberlain told me that after a night spent in prayer, Dr. Going wrote to his family that Shurtleff College was strong and prosperous and could easily find a president, but he did not know of any one who would go to Granville unless he himself undertook the task. What rivers of living water have refreshed the world because of that decision.

The Home Mission Society not only established churches on the frontier, but helped with leaders of other denominations to lay foundations of educational institutions, and had the vision to advocate the establishment of academies, colleges and seminaries which now have the prayers and increasing gifts of the denomination.

Sunny Southern California

By FRANK DURHAM

The tide of tourists and home-seekers is steadily rising in Southern California. The population of the state in 1920 was 3,426,900. If in the next ten years the rate of increase continues as in the past decade the population will approach 5,000,000. In all this we are interested, not so much because it points toward "big business," but because it challenges our churches to meet a great opportunity. It is imperative that each church put on an intensive program. Ordinary methods and ordinary devotion can mean but one thing—a place in the rear.

The state board of the Southern California Baptist Convention in its meeting Nov. 29, faced the necessity of making some adjustments in plans so as to stay within the adjusted budget as agreed upon in the conference held at Indianapolis. This can be endured temporarily. But the board also faced the crying needs in new fields and the urgency of strengthening the work in fields already occupied. That these new churches should become strong is not only a present need of the communities, but their strength bears a vital relation to the larger work of the denomination. Gen. Secy. Dr. W. F. Harper, pointed out that the churches in this convention field, twenty-five years ago were giving about $1,000 for all benevolence; now, those churches which have grown stronger contributed over $450,000 for beneficence last year. The conclusion is irresistible: we must grow many strong churches.

At a recent meeting of the Los Angeles ministers' conference, Rev. W. R. Carter, superintendent of the work among our Negro churches, gave the address and set forth many interesting facts. There is now a migration of Negroes westward, and Los Angeles seems to be one of the main centers toward which they move. There are now 50,000 Negroes in the city, and one closely populated section contains 30,000. There is no Negro slum district. There is one large district of excellent moderate homes. They have a few churches doing excellent work, but other sections are greatly in need of religious help. The majority of the Negroes who have come westward are of a high type industrially and educationally. Superintendent Carter is laying broad foundations for the work and the prospect is promising, though the need is great.

The state board of the Woman's Mission Society of Southern California was fully represented at a luncheon at the Y. M. C. A. Dec. 13, and discussed the proposition that the women raise $6,000, 000 of the remaining unsubscribed portion of our $100,000,000. It was unanimously voted to accept the apportionment of $240,000 for the women of Southern California. Mrs. Richard E. Day, vice-president, spoke appreciatively of Mrs. M. Grant Edmands who has been chosen to direct this great campaign. Others who spoke in appreciation of Mrs. Edmands were Dr. W. F. Harper, Miss Mary A. Greene, state secy.-director, and Mrs. C. C. Newton, former president of the board. Mrs. Edmands is assured of hearty cooperation. While the task before the women is seemingly impossible, they are entering upon it in fine spirit, confident of the outcome.

Great inspiration has come to the several groups of workers in our state this fall and winter from such gatherings as the ministers' prayer conference at Santa Monica, the annual meetings of the four associations, the B. Y. P. U. state convention at San Diego, and the W. W. G. state rally at the Baptist Christian Center, Los Angeles. At the B. Y. P. U. convention there was an enrollment of 300; a splendid enthusiasm characterized the meetings, and at a session conducted by Dr. F. O. Belden about twenty young people committed themselves to some form of life service. More than 200 girls attended the W. W. G. rally. Following their banquet they had an interesting program and listened to an inspiring address by Miss Viola Hill, one of our own missionaries to China.

Our church vacation Bible schools this year in Southern California were the best we have ever held. We had twenty-one schools of our own, with an enrollment of 4,800, and cooperated with other denominations in twenty-three other schools, bringing our total Baptist enrollment to 7,800. Of all the denominations in Southern California twenty thousand attended these schools. Surely these are among the things that are worth while.

Czecho-Slovakia and the Czechs

What do you know about Czecho-Slovakia and the Czechs? A great deal more than you ever did before if you were one of those fortunate ones who attended the second Nationality Night in the series which is being put on in New York under the direction of Miss Mary Comstock, Americanization Secretary of the New York City Mission Society and Dr. Charles H. Sears, superintendent and executive secretary of the society.

Czecho-Slovakia was the subject of supreme interest at this Nationality Night. Baptists who had never thought much about the matter before learned that there were over 1,250,000 Czechs in the United States today and over 26,000 in New York City alone. They learned, moreover, that these descendants of the Thessalonians to whom Paul wrote two letters, are possessors of arts and crafts which any nation might envy and that their music is also distinctive.

The Czecho-Slovakia night was held at the Central Church, New York, on Monday evening, Dec. 19, beginning at 6 p.m., with the exhibition of Czecho-Slovakian arts and costumes, arranged by Mr. Mrazek and an exhibition of engraved glass, lent by Mr. Zahradnik. This was followed by a dinner of national Czech dishes. At 8 p.m. an excellent musical program was given, including folk songs in costume, by Miss Sranja Baverzandirch and Christmas carols by Miss Julia Viharino. The addresses of the evening were made by the Rev. Anton Hok, pastor of the Czecho-Slovakia Baptist Church in New York City and by Mrs. Charles Motak, head of the Red Cross Work in Czecho-Slovakia.

This series of nationality nights is one of the most interesting and effective Americanization programs ever carried through in New York City and is attracting wide attention.

Prayer Meeting and Thanksgiving at Calvary

BY GEORGE MCGINNIS.

It was my privilege while in Washington, D. C., recently to be entertained in the home of Dr. Frank Swartwout, who with his family are members of Calvary Church, where President Harding attends. The prayer meeting in Calvary on Thursday night was the most spiritual, soul- uplifting and inspirational in my experience. The spacious prayer-meeting room was filled and the library was thrown open to accommodate the overflow. There were probably 500 or 600 in attendance, which I am told is the usual audience. The eagle eye of the pastor Dr. William S. Abernethy sees every one, for he noticed your humble servant and J. A. Little of Chicago in the audience and called upon them to speak. In tones vibrant with a passion for souls the pastor pleaded for men and women to accept Christ and three came forward for prayers. It was a good old-fashioned covenant meeting in which the pastor read the covenant while the people stood and pledged themselves anew to live the Christian life and support the gospel.

When all visitors were asked to arise, I expected that half the audience drawn out of curiosity would stand, but not over fifteen arose and each was requested to state name and place of residence. It was an impressive sight when about twenty boys, all in their teens, as newly elected officers of the Junior Church, came forward and were introduced to the audience by the pastor.

If the dwindling prayer meetings of the nation could have injected into them the same spirit of consecration, love and desire for souls manifested in Calvary, they would not lack a good attendance. It was refreshing to find at the heart of the nation's capitol a meeting like this.

I am told the Thanksgiving service in this church was one of the most unique ever held in America and no roof ever sheltered so many distinguished persons at one time. The rain fell in torrents and Hon. William J. Bryan was speaking one-half block away and yet on overflow meeting was held in the Sunday school room, addressed by Dr. J. J. Muir, and hundreds were unable to gain entrance. The auditorium was jammed with people in every nook and corner. In addition to President and Mrs. Harding, there were in the audience, Secretary and Mrs. Hughes, Postmaster-General Hays, Sir Auckland Geddes, British Ambassador to the United States, Sir Robert Borden, Premier of Canada, Senator Schauzer of Italy, the delegations to the Limitations of Arms Conference from Italy, The Netherlands, China and Japan.

Dr. John H. Finley of the editorial staff of the New York Times and chairman of the committee on international relationship of the Federal Council of Churches came from New York expressly to attend this service and to bring a brief message to the council.

The sermon was preached by Dr. Abernethy from the text in Deut. 8:18 "Thou shalt remember Jehovah, thy God."

President Harding on the Saturday night following the service sent by a White House messenger a note expressing his sincere appreciation of the sermon and closed by stating: "I am resolved anew not to forget the admonition in your text." How many readers of THE BAPTIST express appreciation of a sermon to the pastor?

President Harding is carrying burdens and is confronted by colossal tasks such as no other President ever faced and should have the prayers and loyal support of every Baptist.

Nebraska Letter

BY R. R. COON

There is a general desire for more frequent mention of Nebraska affairs in THE BAPTIST. We cannot forget that the paper is endeavoring to cover thirty states and has an almost superhuman task—a task committed to it by its founders. Even so a state as important as Nebraska—so we think—should be allowed a column or two now and then; hence this writing.

A Grand Island associational committee recently made a tour among churches having no pastors and with little prospect of getting any. This was led by Mr. C. H. Lindburg, of Polk, for thirty years a leading layman in the state. The object of this work was to encourage and prompt to action churches that seem to be at rest. It is a matter of "sowing beside all waters"—this or that may prosper.

At the last meeting of the state board, Rev. F. W. Benjamin was elected state director of rural church work. This may help to solve a perplexing problem of too common existence. It has been publicly stated that Baptist churches in Nebraska which have ceased to exist outnumber the active churches. To revive and lead to permanent aggressive service a half dozen or so decaying churches would be an excellent result of a year's labor for this secretary.

Rev. E. W. White has done good service at Wellfleet, where Rev. B. F. Farrar is pastor. In the face of militant opposition from the first the work has progressed, a number have been baptized and the unified church under a wise leadership is hopefully moving on. Dr. White has worked with us in three revival meetings; in presentation of gospel truth and in telling personal appeal at 70 years of age he has the power he had at 40.

Other revivals have been held or are now in progress. At Polk, Rev. W. O. Samuelson has aided the pastor, Rev. Claude Neal. Many have begun the Christian life. Revs. G. W. Stansbury and L. W. Fowle held meetings at McPherson with good results. They later went to Bignell, where the interest manifested calls for the organization of a Baptist church. State Secretary Fowle has gone there to direct in the church organization—a community church in that it is the only one in the community. At Beatrice, Pastor O. A. Broyles with Rev. F. L. Roper, evangelist, is having successful meetings. Evangelist E. S. Stucker is at work at Chadron with Rev. F. M. Sturdevant, former pastor. Great success is expected at this important center. Rockville is a village of several hundred people, where there was no protestant service whatever. Chapelcar Evangelist Blanchard came to the town, held meetings several weeks; a church was organized with fourteen members and nearly $1,000 subscribed for a pastor; meanwhile Rev. C. J. Bukoutz, of Dannebrog, regularly preaches for them. The writer preached in that town once; he heard from that sermon—the owner of the hall sent him a bill for the use of the house!

Rev. R. Richards held four weeks' special meetings in West Grand Island in the Baptist chapel built there during the pastorate of Rev. O. B. Sarber. This is located a mile from any church in the city and furnishes the only religious service for a large community. As a result of those meetings fourteen have united with the Baptist church. Mr. Richards is now holding meeting in Horace, a little town where the Baptist church is the only one. A great opportunity is here for a thorough and extensive work. Such a field approaches in character a field in foreign lands; no preaching service within natural reach of a large community.

Rev. Rolvix Harlan, secretary of rural community work for the Northern Baptist Convention, has established temporary headquarters at Grand Island, the Baptist center of Nebraska, while he directs this work in the state. Mr. Benjamin, state director in that line of work, is laboring in Elyria.

Grand Island has become a convention city: On Dec. 8 a new political party for the state was organized here. It is called the Progressive. A similar organization has been formed in five or six other states. The object is economic and moral reform. While many Nebraska farmers are compelled to burn corn because of the most exorbitant price of coal, while thousands more must mortgage their farms to pay taxes, hail any enterprise that aims to lighten peoples' burdens! Judge A. G. Wray, a Baptist of York and a man of marked ability and undoubted character, is accepted leader of the new party.

Rev. Wilson Whitney, of Bedford, Ind., was graduated from college, married and ordained in the summer of 1871. As a memorial of these events he has sent to his friends—there are a lot of them—a pamphlet including a strong sermon: "Un-changing faith the outcome of fifty years of Bible study." During the years 1882-1885 we were under the rule of Mr. Whitney as state missionary of Minnesota. He was a kind ruler. We recall his sympathetic consideration of missionary pastors, his encouraging attitude to weak churches and his unbounded faith in God. In this day of universal unrest it is pleasant to think of a life of fifty years of unbroken, faithful, honorable service.

4-11. Services of great blessing to church and town were held every evening except Saturday. Many decided for Christ and will come into the church as opportunity is given. Through the efforts of Rev. Earl Smith, pastor, Dr. Myers, who is in California for a year, was secured.

MAINE

A RECENT SERIES of revival meetings at Millinocket Church, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Raymond W. Cooper, and termed by him a "home-made revival," resulted in ninety-five decisions for Christ, thirty-seven have already been baptized and others will follow. Early in the fall preparations for this revival began with group prayer-meetings. During Mr. Cooper's pastorate, beginning May 1, 1921, the church membership has increased from 132 to 175. The evening congregation taxes the capacity of the house, 475 being present at a recent service. Prayer-meeting begins at 7 o'clock with forty-five minutes for praise, prayer and testimony, then follows an illustrated missionary lecture. A lantern was presented by a church member and the Board of Promotion furnishes the views. At a recent missionary prayer-meeting 230 persons were present. A valuable work in missionary education is going forward. Preparations are now on for another series of meetings. The canvass for funds will place first emphasis on the New World Movement, second on current expenses, third on building fund. An ever-increasing proportion of the people of the town are becoming associated with the church. The men will affiliate with the National Laymen's Council.

CONNECTICUT

VOLUNTOWN CHURCH has suffered a seemingly irreparable loss in the demise of Mrs. Josephine Gallup. Mrs. Gallup was not only devoted to the church's every interest and prominent in all its activities, but she was also superintendent of the Bible school, and rendered most efficient service in that department. Her daughter, Miss Bertha Gallup is clerk of the church. Rev. E. E. Gates, pastor-at-large, conducted the funeral services, November 16.

REV. F. H. WILKINS, formerly pastor of the German Baptist Church, New Britain, is now pastor of the Bethel German Church, Buffalo, New York.

NEW YORK

EVANGELIST J. ROY WEAKLAND of Elmhurst Heights, N. Y., assisted by his singer, Mr. Martin Seadeek of Titusville, Pa., just closed two weeks' campaign in the church at Trumansburg, N. Y. Rev. Hugh W. Stewart, pastor, with gratifying results. The purpose in holding the meetings was to stir up the church people as well as to gain converts. Besides the two dozen or so decisions made during the campaign, the earnest Christian spirit of the evangelist won many to renewed interest and effort. People came for miles to hear the gospel message in song and story.

In Memory of Dr. Strong

A service in memory of Dr. Augustus Hopkins Strong was held at Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, Dec. 6. Faculty, students and Rochester alumni were present. The hymns sung and the scriptures read were chosen in harmony with Dr. Strong's ruling religious ideals.

Former students of Dr. Strong who were present recalled the days they had spent in the class room of the great teacher of theology, and paid affectionate tribute to his personality and his influence upon their lives. The following took part in the service: F. S. Lawrence, class of '81; Claiborne M. Hill, '84; A. P. Brown, student '89; Albert H. Ehrigott, class of '93; H. W. Davis, '97; F. C. Lovett, '99; J. W. Johnson, '06. Dr. Hanley, until recently Dr. Strong's pastor, spoke briefly and offered prayer.

These tributes revealed the fact that the speakers had been so strongly impressed by the character and teaching of Dr. Strong that, though many years had passed—in some cases thirty-five or forty—those impressions were still vivid and and directing if not, indeed, commanding.

Some of the qualities of the great teacher, preacher, and leader which the speakers dwelt upon were: Dr. Strong's rare intellectual gifts; his clear thinking and expression; his administrative ability; his marvelous industry; his preaching power; his breadth of mind and love of truth in every realm; his loyalty to the scriptures and to Christ who was to him literally all in all.

Reference was made to the series of articles now appearing in the denominational press, the latest work of Dr. Strong, and the conviction was earnestly expressed that these offered a basis of unity in our denominational life. If so these last labors will be by no means his least.

ONTARIO CHURCH enjoyed a treat in having Dr. Portland Myers, pastor Tremont Temple, Boston, with them Dec.

way, Mrs. E. M. Finn and Rev. E. P. Roberts. Week-day religious instruction was foremost in the discussion. Practical methods of organizing schools and conducting schools in vacation, and throughout the school session were presented. Expressional authorities were discussed and exemplified, in handiwork, dramatization of Bible stories, story telling and the like. This intensive course proved a valuable supplement to the general work in religious education already offered to the students.

THE CHURCH AT TARENTUM, Rev. L. F. Taylor, pastor, will cooperate in a school of religious education to be opened in that city early in January.

REV. L. L. BRADLEY begins his pastorate with the Saltsburg church Sunday, Dec. 18.

THE PRIMARY DEPARTMENT of Canonsburg Bible school, Rev. W. J. John, pastor, conducted the opening exercises of the prayer-meeting, Wednesday, Dec. 7.

REV. GEORGE BUCK is serving as stated supply at Sharpsburg while the church is without a pastor.

FORD CITY CHURCH, Rev. A. B. Bowser, pastor, lost by death, Dec. 12, its last charter member, Mrs. A. J. Crawford. She was a devoted servant of her Lord and an active member in all departments of church work. She faithfully attended Sunday services, Bible school and prayer-meeting. Her loss will be keenly felt.

REV. J. R. ROUTLEDGE, of Midway, extended the right hand of fellowship to seven new members at communion service, Dec. 4, and to two at prayer-meeting the following Wednesday. Mr. Routledge has started a young people's Christian training class for ages up to 15, with a membership of twenty-two. The class meets Wednesday afternoons at 4:30. A course of twelve lessons as arranged by Dr. T. J. Young is being followed.

THE ADULT DEPARTMENT of Linden Avenue Sunday school, Dayton, is composed of three large Bible classes for men and women. Mr. W. D. Rogers, long an active member of the church, is the recently appointed superintendent. The evening of Dec. 16, the first of a series of get-together meetings was held at the church, when Mr. Rogers introduced Dr. F. G. Barr, food and health expert, who gave a talk on the importance of the right kind of food, stressing the fact that spiritual energy is the stronger for a well-cared-for body.

AFTER HAVING SERVED Immanuel Church at Portsmouth for six years, Rev. M. H. Bridwell accepted a call to the First Church at Pomeroy, beginning his work there Nov. 20.

Cleveland Notes

EVANGELISM WILL BE the dominant note in the Cleveland churches until Easter. Two successful series of meetings have just been concluded.

AT THE CHURCH OF THE MASTER, Dr. Franklin W. Sweet was his own evangelist, assisted by a chorus choir under the guidance of a gifted leader. The meetings attracted widespread attention.

DR. STARK, Glenville Church, called to his assistance for a three weeks' campaign Dr. Clevenger, who proved to be a winning personality, depending upon the written Word for his message. About sixty people made definite profession of faith, many of whom will unite with the church.

ON DEC. 14, the First Church held its annual meeting. The spacious dining-room was not large enough to seat the membership present. Optimism pervaded. The operating budget of $20,000 was fully made, and $40,000 was contributed, largely through the New World Movement, to wider kingdom enterprises. Ambros Swayse, known throughout the world as a scientist and mechanic, who presided, has been a member of the church for forty years. Members took occasion of his approaching 75th birthday to express in formal resolution their love and appreciation.

AT EUCLID AVENUE CHURCH scores of people are turned away every Sunday evening. Even the Masonic Temple proved too small to accommodate the numbers anxious to hear Dr. Bustard's discussions of civic issues. That his sledge hammer blows were felt is evident in the fact that subsequent to one of these meetings an attack was made on his home. Dr. and Mrs. Bustard were not at home at the time and no serious damage was done. They who thought to silence criticism by terrorizing were poor character readers.

THE CLEVELAND BAPTIST ASSOCIATION is assisting in three building enterprises. The Madison Avenue people are making extensive alterations and additions, the association contributing $5,000 toward these improvements. This church has not had the bright history but it is situated in the midst of a number of middle class homes where the aggressive work now being done will no doubt prove fruitful. The association has recently let a contract for the building of a chapel for Roumanians. There are about 6,000 in Cleveland and we are the only protestant denomination doing work among them. Some time ago a number of Italian Baptists mortgaged their homes to build for themselves a small chapel. Even after making this sacrifice, on account of so many being out of work, they were unable to complete the enterprise. The association has now come to their help, and will purchase the building, pay the outstanding indebtedness and free the homes of these people from the mortgage indebtedness incurred.

ABOUT TEN DAYS AGO Rev. H. C. McLendon, pastor of Calvary Church, greatly surprised and saddened his people by tendering his resignation. Mr. McLendon's intention was to conduct some special evangelistic work before entering upon a new pastorate. His people, however, have unanimously requested him to reconsider his resignation. Mr. McLendon has an enthusiastic body of people about him, who greatly appreciate his ministry.

MINNESOTA

CANBY CHURCH, Western Minnesota, has existed since 1896 with more or less difficulty in its earlier history, striving to live in a community overwhelmingly Norwegian Lutheran. The church is fortunate in its present pastor, C. H. Davies, who, with his wife, is providing a leadership and a program which promises to yield disciples for our Lord, recruits for his service and a far-reaching influence on the community. The church is enjoying a revival in connection with an evangelistic campaign held in December by an evangelist of the State Convention. Nineteen candidates for baptism have been received, and four others have made public confession of their faith. Eight members of a girls' class were won for Christ, the sole remaining member being already in the church. A large factor in the tangible results of the campaign was the constructive preparatory work done by Mr. and Mrs. Davies among the young people, from which group most of the converts came. The harvest was fast ripening through their educational and social work and their spiritual influence.

A hopeful feature of the New World Movement is the facility which is afforded State Conventions for providing for such fields as Canby a minister who can supplement the pastor's work by an intensive period of preaching and personal evangelism and thus assist the church to attain permanently a higher level of abiding interest in evangelism and the world-enterprise to which our denomination is committed.—Geo. E. Burlingame.

INDIANA

THIRTY-FIRST STREET CHURCH, Indianapolis, Rev. J. J. Patterson, pastor, is rejoicing in a total pledge of $40,010 toward a new church building, made on Dec. 4 as the climax of a week's preparatory services conducted by Rev. S. G. Huntington. The building committee is representative of all the activities of the church. The new building will provide for a departmental Sunday school, with a capacity to house at least 700. It will contain also an assembly room for prayer-meeting, B. Y. P. U., and other organizations, a gymnasium, ladies' parlor, kitchen, heating plant and about a dozen adult class rooms.

KANSAS

A TWO-WEEKS' revival service at Elmhurst Church, Chiles, under direction of Rev. J. E. Woods, of Alta Vista, Kan., and C. H. Guthrie, of Manhattan, Kan., evangelistic singer, has closed with twenty-seven additions to the church, twenty-three by baptism. Two others made profession of faith. The winning of several families is considered an especial blessing. Rev. W. Harley Smith, pastor, did good preparatory work for two months sowing the seed.

MR. RUSSEL A. RAPSON, who recently closed his work in Roodhouse, Ill., preached Dec. 18 at Fort Leavenworth for Chaplain Rideout. Mr. Rapson may be secured for special meetings or supply. Should the Lord lead he would consider another pastorate. He may be addressed at Roodhouse.

THE ARGENTINE CHURCH, Kansas City, Rev. L. M. Denton, pastor, had two-weeks' services led by Chaplain Frank C. Rideout, of Fort Leavenworth. Twenty-nine have been received by baptism.

SOUTH DAKOTA

THE CHURCH AT MOBRIDGE, organized last February, has secured as pastor Rev. J. O. Parrott, of Spencer. He will settle on the field Jan. 1. This important new railroad town offers a most promising field for the development of a Baptist church seeking to minister spiritually and educationally to a neglected community. Mr. Parrott is a graduate of William Jewell College, was for several years pastor at Spencer, and has also served on the faculty of the Spencer high school.

PASTOR P. C. LARSEN of the American Church at Dell Rapids, in the Big Sioux valley, is happy in a fine spirit of growth and activity among his young people, ten of whom he has baptized during the past year. The attendance at all services has steadily increased and the church is the leading Protestant body in the town. The spirit of evangelism abides and plans are under consideration for special efforts for ingathering this winter.

SOUTH DAKOTA'S SUPERB BIG CHIEF among Baptists, State Supt. B. P. Shaw, of Sioux Falls, is compelled by serious illness to sojourn for a time at the Mounds Park Sanitarium at St. Paul. His gifted and gracious leadership is greatly missed by the churches and interests of the state where he has built and guided so wisely.

PASTOR A. PIERCE WALTZ, IPSWICH, is working along the line of a carefully prepared program which devotes December to missions, January to intercession, February to stewardship, March to evangelism and April to benevolence. Pulpit work and prayer meeting themes are correlated with this program of which the primary aim is the salvation of souls. The pastor reports Sunday school and church attendance still on the upward grade with 132 recently present in Sunday school. Over-crowded conditions make improvements essential as soon as finances improve.

WISCONSIN

A BANQUET to acquaint foreign students of the University of Wisconsin with the significance of Christmas was given Dec. 15 by the Foreign Students' Committee of the Young People's Cabinet of First Church, Madison. Covers were laid for 100 young men. Each of fifty young men of the society brought a foreign student as his personal guest. China, Japan, the Philippines, Mexico, South America and South Africa were represented. The banquet was served in the church, women of the Mission Circle preparing it and young women of the C. E. society serving it. Rev. Joseph B. Gleason, university pastor, gave the address of welcome. Rev. J. Sherman Wallace, church pastor, spoke on "The Origin of Christmas." Short addresses were given by the young men of the society upon the spirit of Christmas and the influence of Christianity on the home, on economic life, on social relations and on international relations. Several musical numbers were given, besides the singing of university songs. It is planned that each young man who acted as host to a foreign student will cultivate friendly relations with his guest throughout the remainder of the school year accompanying him when he is entertained frequently in the same Christian home.

RICHLAND CENTER CHURCH, Rev. C. L. Gibbens, pastor, has recently paid off the debt on the property. A number of young people have united with the church and a list of subscribers equal to more than 10 per cent of the reported membership has been secured.

FIVE WEEKS OF SPECIAL MEETINGS, three at First Church and two at Mission Church, have closed at Marinette, with thirty-four conversions, several church members reclaimed and a general revival of the work. The church has raised $333 for the purpose of installing electric lights in the church building.

ILLINOIS

AT ITS ANNUAL business meeting First Church, Decatur, reported a total of $30,000 received from all sources during the year, with all departments in an encouraging condition. The pastor, Dr. Marsh, assisted by the young people, has put on a Bible reading campaign, through which 750 persons have been reached, 350 signing enrollment coupons. Among the first to complete the course were Prof. Richeson, superintendent city schools, and Dr. Milliken, president James Milliken University. The spiritual life of the church is being strengthened. Following a sermon on stewardship by the pastor, eighty members were enrolled in a tithe's league. Dr. Marsh is beginning the seventh year of his pastorate at the Decatur church. A striking feature of his evening audiences is the large number of men.

CENTRAL CHURCH, QUINCY, Rev. Robt. Van Meigs, pastor, has been holding a "go-to-church" revival of several weeks, leading to revival services beginning Jan. 1 to continue at least two weeks.

Woman's Mission Union

The January meeting of the Woman's Mission Union will be held at the New North Shore Church, Berwyn and Lake-wood, Chicago, Jan. 10. To reach the church take Northwestern "L" to Edgewater Beach station, walk three blocks west; or Broadway car to Berwyn Ave., and walk two blocks west; or Clark St. car to Berwyn Ave., and walk three blocks east. The morning and afternoon program should be of great interest to every circle. The meeting is called to order promptly at 11 o'clock. After the usual opening exercises Dr. Frederick F. Shannon, of Central Church, will give an address. Roll call will be taken, and the guests receiving favors will be Elmwood, Judson Baptist, Barrington, Batavia, Bethany, Elgin Immanuel, Harvey, La Grange and Lorimer Memorial. Luncheon will be served at 12:30 for 25c per plate. The afternoon program is planned as follows: Mrs. Robert Hilton brings a message of the Continuation Campaign; Mrs. Andrew Mac Leish, president of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society is the principal speaker of the afternoon. A reception follows for Mrs. Mac Leish.

MICHIGAN

Meeting of Woman's Board

The Executive Board of the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Michigan met Tuesday morning Dec. 13. Mrs. Edward Wilson, president, presided. Mrs. Bowen read extracts from last district meeting. A home for missionaries has been purchased at Winona for $5000 and $1500 spent on repairs. Any missionary of any evangelical denomination may rest there. A Baptist missionary and wife were the first to accept its hospitality. Miss Helen Hudson is now publicity secretary for Continuation Campaign and Miss Harriet Ethel Clark has been chosen as acting administration secretary.

Miss Howell reported the organization of five new children's bands. The children have been allotted $6000 as their part of $100,000,000 fund; $600 is district's share. Each C. W. C. is to be responsible for a foot of dimes, in containers representing a foot rule.

Miss Mary McDonald has been appointed young woman's secretary and Mr. R. E. Mallory, children's secretary of Detroit Association. Mrs. Leslie N. Smith is acting young woman's secretary for state.

Miss Bromley, mission study secretary, gave an interesting talk regarding her work.

Mrs. Wreggit, secretary of literature is urging sale of Book of Remembrance and calendars.

Mrs. Warren of Adrian, sister of Mrs. T. T. Leete and Miss Cooper, passed away after years of invalidism. We extend sympathy to our sisters and other members of family.

Miss Cooper sent report stating that many toys have been donated to the city missionaries for distribution. Mrs. Ingersoll, of Detroit, was chosen as trustee to fill vacancy.

The White Cross and box and supply work are now under one head. Miss Marie Heaton, chairman; Mrs. Bassett, vice-chairman. Miss Heaton's address is 50 Charlotte Ave., Detroit. Box supply goods and cash sent out during month totaled $284.30.

Miss Grant told of trip to Chicago and plans for work on Continuation Campaign in Michigan. Beginning January first Mrs. Wadsworth, of California, will spend three months in the state.

Mrs. Adah Boyce was present and spoke briefly as did also Mrs. Whitaker, of Ann Arbor. After a season of prayer meeting adjourned.—Janet Burgess, Cor. Secy.

German Baptists

The association of German Baptists of Lake Erie and vicinity convened with the church at Lansing, Nov. 14-16. According to custom, one of the pastors is appointed to serve the church the preceding Sunday, so Rev. H. Sellhorn, Akron, Ohio, preached two practical sermons. On Monday the delegates of northern Ohio and eastern Michigan assembled for the opening sermon of Rev. Theo. Dans, Cleveland; text, Gen. 32:24-32. Pastor Wm. Ritzman, of the entertaining church, welcomed the delegates in appropriate words, responded to by Rev. G. Fetzter, editor, of Cleveland.

On Tuesday morning, after a consecration meeting, the session was opened with the local pastor as chairman. Reports from churches were encouraging, and a longing for a revival in all the churches was manifested in speech and prayer. Rev. J. G. Drawel, Detroit, read a treatise on the Holy Spirit, followed by Rev. M. Wolf, Beaver, Mich., on "The operations of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of believers and unbelievers." Rev. G. Mengel, Alpena, Mich., spoke on the great need of an awakening among church members for greater efficiency. Rev. O. Schroeder, Cleveland, gave a practical essay on the responsibility of church members of means toward God and his kingdom.

Rev. C. A. Daniel, Detroit, gave an instructive and edifying exposition from the epistle of James, while Rev. R. F. Fehlberg enlightened the brethren on deaconship, and Rev. B. Graf, Detroit, showed the difference between hearing the word of God and doing it.

Rev. Wm. Kuhn, Chicago, general secretary of the German Baptist churches, gave a stereopticon lecture on our mission fields in Europe—Siberia, Russia, Roumania, Hungary, Switzerland, Poland and Germany. Rev. G. Fetzter closed the session with an evangelistic sermon from Isa. 12:32. Collections taken amounted to nearly $60. The guests were entertained hospitably in the homes of the members with meals during the day at the parsonage.

IOWA

THE NEW PASTOR of First Church, Cedar Rapids, is getting the work well organized. The recent every-member canvass resulted in an increase in current expense pledges of 53 per cent.

FOREST AVENUE CHURCH and Des Moines College have long been closely associated.

Many denominational leaders — among them Dr. Aitchison of the board of promotion and Rev. J. A. Curtis of Donakonda, South India—have gone from this college. So the feelings of our people must needs be mixed, when a new church was organized at Des Moines University, at its new home in Highland Park—sorry to lose the inspiration and help of students and faculty—glad that the enlarged student body has a church more fully its own, and that the Baptists of Des Moines are awakening to the possibilities and obligations of an enlarged work. At the annual meeting in September, pastor Dr. H. R. Best, laid before the church a definite program for enlarging and strengthening the work of the church for the immediate community. A survey is now being made by a large corps of visitors and cards are being turned in for each family. The church voted a budget larger than last year. While it has not yet been subscribed in full, we have reached last year's total and hope to make the advances dependent on the larger income. About 125 new members were received the last year. The Sunday school is striving for an average attendance of 400—now somewhat less than 300. The B. Y. P. U. is humming with enthusiasm. The Women's Union has united all the women of the church in well directed work for missions, local service, White Cross, and cooperation in all church activities. The Brotherhood is better organized than ever before. An effort is to be made to do more for the boys of church and community. The W. W. G. Girls are much alive. We are fortunate to have as musical director, Dean Raymond Carr, head of Fine Arts School of Des Moines University.

"High Spots" in Cooperation

By L. C. BARNES

Several of them—by no means all even of the highest—were touched in the recent annual meeting of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America held in Chicago Dec. 14-16. The keen columnist of THE BAPTIST asked for them in those very words, "High Spots."

The welcome of the Chicago Federation was the first and not the least. Pres. Howard Agnew Johnson and Sec. Nee, with facts and figures behind them typified what for years has been a growing demonstration of solid spiritual values of Christian co-operation in a great city.

Twin peaks were climbed by the Commission on Evangelism and the Commission on Social Service. The Federal Council truly represents its twenty-nine constituent denominations when it plants high both standards, divine discipleship and human service.

The Secretary of the Commission on Evangelism, Dr. C. L. Goodell, personifies the highest type of evangelism, "pastoral and personal evangelism." His book of that title, written from much experience while he was still a pastor, is one of the best helps to be had. Let a few sentences from the annual report in Chicago suggest that the reader ask for the whole and for more too:

"This has been the greatest year in ingathering which the Christian churches of America have ever seen. This ingathering has not been made by a few mass meetings under a few great leaders. The plan on which the campaign has been carried forward has been that of pastoral and personal evangelism.

"While there is room for diversity in method, there is apparent an increasing unity of spirit. Denominations are saying, 'If thy heart be as my heart, give me thy hand.'

"The Presbyterian church plans to have each church in each presbytery visited, wherever desired, by workers and speakers from without to the end that every church in the denomination may catch the evangelistic spirit. The Baptist churches have a dozen states already organized under proper leadership, in which each Baptist church in the state will be reached. The Methodist church has its direct organizations where far-reaching plans have been put into execution, so that the humblest church in the connection may feel a vital relation to the whole body and catch the spirit of aggressive evangelism.

"The Presbyterian church in the United States (south) has sent us an overture suggesting that this year be a year of preparation for the greatest evangelistic movement of the centuries, that the church shall give itself to such preparation as will fit it to be an instrument in the hands of God for work of grace unequalled in the history of the land. To this appeal our hearts must beat a tumultuous response."

The glowing discussion of the report was opened by an Episcopalian bishop (!) and closed by our own Dr. Stilwell. One speaker told of the city in which the churches this year united in a tabernacle campaign with the most winsome of all the well-known vocational evangelists and followed it up carefully with the result of forty-eight accessions to the forty-eight uniting churches. The previous year each church doing its own work in its own way, coordinated by the Federation of Churches, twenty thousand new members were received.

The Commission on the Church and Social Service likewise is conducted by Dr. Worth M. Tippy not from the viewpoint of academic theory, but from that of eminent pastoral service. Every pastor ought to have its bulletin of information which is issued twice a month. There is nothing like it for keeping us in sympathy with obedience to the second half of the religion of Christ. The department is preparing text books of inestimable value and timeliness. In conferences it is actually bringing employers and employed together in the name of Christ.

One session of the annual meeting was almost apocalyptic in its revelatory vision. The speakers were J. W. Kline, President of the International Blacksmith's Union, and Arthur Nash, President of the Nash Clothing Co. It was at the end of a long day of taxing attention to manifold absorbing details that Mr. Nash held the company of seasoned convention experts till 11 o'clock in growingly rapt attention as he told his personal experience in getting the golden rule into actual industrial operation on a rapidly expanding scale. No conception of that high-tension hour can be reported in a few sentences. Get a copy of "The Golden Rule in Business" by the Arthur Nash Co., Cincinnati. One can be had for the asking.

We are obliged to skip many really high spots, such as the report of the Commission on Councils of Churches, Roy B. Guild, secretary, the telling address of Rev. B. F. Lamb of the Federation of Churches in Ohio, and the report of the Commission on Negro Churches and Race Relations. Three distinguished southern whites, a layman, a minister and a woman talked in such a way that some of northern abolitionist heritage wondered if we could catch up with them in real sacrificial devotion to the Negro; and two Negro bishops lifted us into unwonted heights of understanding and determination.

Naturally at such an hour of human history as the present the highest intensive level repeatedly reached was in connection with the manifold activities of the Commission on International Justice and Good Will. Its secretary, Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, brought to adoption far-reaching measures of many kinds. The closing session of the meeting had inspiring addresses by Chinese and Japanese representatives from the Conference at Washington, and a truly prophetic deliverance by Sherwood Eddy against war, although he has written a book on the right to fight. His indictment of war demands nothing less than its complete and everlasting condemnation and banishment from our planet.

The commanding impression of the three days on the mind of one who had not attended a meeting of the Federal Council for a number of years, is the unmistakable fact that it has developed great ministries in the kingdom of God, essential to its coming, which could not possibly be performed without some such coordinating body. Genuine co-operation, eschewing all chimerical attempts at consolidation, is indispensable if evangelical religion is to make its due and deeply needed impact on the general public.

After College—What?

Christian Social Service is a new profession open for college men and women; and those thinking of making their life contribution in this sphere of usefulness will be interested to learn of the graduate course in religious education and social-religious work, leading to the master's degree, which is now being given at Teachers' College, Columbia University.

The course of study includes from one to two years of graduate study, according to the ability of the student, and covers such topics as the following: Bible study, religious education (theory and practice), child psychology, boys' and girls' club work, Christian Americanization programs, assimilation of the immigrant, industrial and household arts, nursery and physical education. An announcement of the courses may be secured upon application to Miss Adelaide T. Case, Department of Religious Education, Teachers' College, New York City.

Opportunity is given each student to do practical field work, under supervision, in one of the Christian centers maintained by the Affiliated Baptist City Societies—for which Teachers' College gives credit.

The Baptist boards offer a limited number of scholarships to Baptist students desiring to take this course. These scholarships include tuition and a liberal cash allowance to assist the student with his or her personal expenses. Further information about the scholarships may be obtained from Miss Jessie Dodge White, candidate secretary of the Woman's Home Mission Society or from Stanley B. Hazard, director of religious education of the Affiliated Baptist City Societies—both at the Baptist Headquarters, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

I find most valuable—district nurses, school nurses and social workers of all kinds. All these can give testimony to the good effects of prohibition legislation on families, chiefly families of the working men. A district nurse recently called on a woman who was expecting her confinement. The woman said to her visitor, 'I have got four children, already. This one that is coming will be the first born above ground.' The nurse did not quite comprehend, but the woman went on: 'The only way I used to be able to get money was to take it out of my husband's pocket when he was helplessly drunk in my room. I took what was necessary, but I never could get enough to hire any room that was not in a cellar. All my four children were born underground. This one is going to be born above ground.'

'The district nurse followed that case through confinement and had the pleasure of seeing the husband attentive to his work and bringing all his earnings to his wife. Then on the last visit the nurse made, she had the pleasure of seeing him holding his little girl in his lap. She was very neatly dressed. It was Sunday morning, and this father, who had never given a cent to his wife until the prohibition amendment came, was curling the little girl's hair in order that she might look pretty when he took her to Sunday school.'

Saving the Babies

Infant mortality rates have fallen in 512 cities from 101 in 1916 to ninety in 1920. At this rate 25,000 fewer babies died in 1920 than would have died had the same conditions existed as did four years before.

Dr. Thomas A. Hyde of Christ Hospital, Jersey City, N. J., writes under date of Sept. 17, 1921: "As a hospital executive, I would have you know that I regard the prohibition movement as a tremendous humanitarian blessing. The passage of the eighteenth amendment brought an instantaneous change in the character of our work. Our men's ward since the enactment of it has not been comfortably filled, which prior to that time was filled to overflowing. The ambulance was accustomed to answer ten or a dozen calls on a Saturday night; one or two calls soon became the rule. Neither did we experience a 'dope' epidemic."

Tuberculosis is showing a marked diminution in the number of deaths since prohibition. In Chicago there were 1175 fewer deaths than in 1918.

"There is a decrease all over the United States, but not so marked as here. This is due in part to prohibition. People are getting more sleep and are not carousing and drinking so much."

Insanity is on the decline, for the first time in years, since prohibition went into effect. Fillmore Condit, an expert in figures on insanity, has shown that prohibition checked the increase and turned the scale downward in the number of cases of insanity. In 1917 New York had 391.9 insane for each 100,000 of the population; in January, 1920, 374.6. In California there were 1,094 less than there would have been if the normal increase had continued. The California lunacy commission recently stated that the taxpayers are saving about two million a year in the care of the insane.

It is often claimed by the wets that drug addicts have increased. This claim also is shown to be without foundation: "In New York a regulation requiring registration of addicts who wished to buy drugs went into effect about three weeks after war prohibition became effective. The United States Treasury Department commission quoted estimates ranging from 80,000 to 4,000,000 addicts for the entire country; legislative investigations in New York brought out the opinion that, roughly speaking, there were from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 drug addicts in the city, then a wet city in a wet state. Since July 19, 1919, drug addicts have been required to register, and the records show about 13,000 users in the state, besides probably 26,000 unregistered cases who obtain drugs illicitly.

Minnesota had committed twenty-six addicts to state institutions in 1918, seventeen in 1919, and four in 1920. Chicago had an average of 12.5 cases per month at the house of correction in 1919, and 11.25 cases per month to May 1, 1920."

One of the clearest testimonials comes from Evangeline Booth of the Salvation Army, who, if any one, ought to know the facts of prohibition:

"Our social secretaries tell us that drunkenness among the men frequenting our hotels and industrial homes has almost entirely disappeared; that men who previously had not enough money to pay their way from one day to another now have money in the bank. In one of our hotels there are 120 men with banking accounts of considerable amounts, who previously could not keep a dollar for twenty-four hours.

"In another hotel twenty-five men, who before prohibition could not muster a dime among them, have deposits ranging from $100 to $500. Paul Stoker, a man who drank every cent of his earnings, has saved $700 since prohibition came into effect. An increase in prosperity and thrift is universally acknowledged. The state of Minnesota reports a saving increase of $17,000,000 for the year.

"Needless to say, the experience of our own slum officers emphasizes these benefits. 'Father buys us clothes, since prohibition; he used to drink all the money up,' said a little girl of six in Hell's Kitchen last week. They find the home better cared for and less divided, and where they used to get mother and children only to the meeting, the whole family now attends.

"The entire army world seems to have heard of our boozers' day—how year by year we have celebrated Thanksgiving holiday from six in the morning, collecting drunks from the park benches, feeding them and sobering them up, and saving them with huge and lasting results. But last year they were not there, and so we gave the day to the poorest children in the great city."

Can not each loyal Baptist who reads these words write to his local paper, calling attention to them? Send a copy of the paper to friends; discuss it in the Sunday school class. If he be a pastor, preach about it. If she be a woman, talk about it at the next missionary or club meeting. Everybody spread the glorious proof that PROHIBITION REALLY PROHIBITS!

class is one feature of the work being done in our young people's department of the church. We are operating on the departmental basis. We have two young men's classes and two young women's classes meeting in the morning on Sundays. In the evening these four classes meet for the B. Y. P. U. devotional and expressional service. Mrs. Lulu Wallace Smith, the pastor's wife, is the principal of the young people's department. This class is a feature of the department's work. It meets every Monday evening from 6:30 to 8:30. I teach the one period and Mrs. Smith the other. We will soon finish the first two books in the Baptist Trained Leaders' Course. The books we are taking first are: "The Life of Christ" and "Distinctive Baptist Principles." Will you please send me the examination questions for these two books?

Our high school is the Chaffee Union with 1,200 students. Mr. Merton E. Hill is principal. He is giving credit for this work under the subject of citizenship. Now it takes only sixteen credits to graduate from the high school and he is giving these young people one full credit for this course with its eight books for the two years' work covering thirty-six weeks' work each year. This means we must give eighteen lessons on each book. As there are not enough chapters in the books we are making two lessons out of some chapters and adding some lessons. I do not know of another school in the country that is doing what Chaffee high is in this regard. All of the young people except two are in the high school and junior college.

Any book with the imprint of this author deserves attention; this set of connected short stories, or character sketches, are many-faceted tales of London life during the world war, or just after. They accent the reactions upon the minds and souls of the persons so masterfully limned.

The Triumph of Virginia Dale, by John Francis, Jr.; Boston: The Page Company, $1.90.

"Another Glad Book" with a good spirit and much interesting material, although with an impossible heroine. The book is declared to be the author's first work of the kind. We commend it for its atmosphere rather than as a finished work of fiction. Undoubtedly many people will find it exactly suited to their frame of mind. As a book well made up.

A Daughter of the Middle Border, by Hamlin Garland; New York: The Macmillan Co., $2.

This is not a companion volume to "A Son of the Middle Border," but rather a continuation. The book takes up and carries on the story of Isabel McClintock and Richard Garland. It deals also with the story of the author's literary beginnings, his effort to maintain the homestead in Wisconsin, his life in Chicago and friendships with well-known men. Some will welcome it as a story; others will value it as an intimate picture of the social life of the Middle West. But it is certain to be valued. To the reviewer this is one of the most interesting books of the kind he has had for some time.

The Federal Administration and The Alien, by Frances Kellor; New York: by George H. Doran Co.

The high praise awarded to the epoch-making volume—"Immigration and the Future," by Frances Kellor will naturally be given to the booklet noted above, a supplement to the mother volume. No publication of recent years can approach these two books, really two volumes of the same work, in importance or authority. A perspective of historical accuracy, apparently unmoved by partisan prejudice, keenly alive to the meanings of race movements with their conflicting interests, a simple, pungent style, courage to state facts, no matter how unpalatable for the reader—these factors make a work destined to be one of the landmarks of political and economic literature. In these days of asinine pseudo-statesmen, and yellow-press propaganda for personal purposes, such a reservoir of facts so masterfully set forth is a fount of knowledge for the seeker after truth and justice.

Buff—A Collie, by Albert Payson Terhune; New York: George H. Doran Co., $2.00.

Dog-lovers will relish this volume of short stories woven around individual collies. If some of the exploits seem incredible at first glance, the art of the writer, and the verity of the animal psychology soon change mild skepticism to admiration and belief. A book for all ages—to be really enjoyed by all.

Jess of the Rebel Trail, by H. A. Cody; New York: George H. Doran Co., $1.90 net.

A not-too-successful attempt to plot an old-time Cap. Collier series of thrills into a modern-action novel. If you are not too fussy about the fine points of story writing, and can overlook ragged handling of plot and caricaturing of characters, the book will pass a few leisure hours. The story is clean, even naive. When your daughter finishes "Main Street," give her this book to rest her weary brain.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY

THE APPEARANCE OF A CHOIR

How often have I sat in the congregation and been amused at the appearance the choir presented. Red hats, black hats, blue hats, and all colors of hats and dresses. How much nicer the singers would have looked if they had removed their hats, even if some one does say, "Oh, no, my hair just looks awful." By all means, make it well known that your choir sings with their hats off so they will not have any such excuse.

Some choirs do not pay any attention to the arrangement. It is very embarrassing for a tall person to be placed beside a short one or vice versa, as it emphasizes their stature and is noticeable to the congregation. So as near as possible, without separating voices, arrange according to size. Short people look better on the ends of lines.

The behavior of the choir to me is essential. How disgusting to have to sit and look at a choir that insists on giggling and whispering. It diverts the attention of congregation from the sermon and also makes it difficult for the minister to hold the attention of his congregation. I know, many amusing things happen, but if the choir could sit in the congregation and look at themselves, they would soon try to control themselves. I know a group of girls that have a reputation of spoiling a song almost every time they sing, because they try to laugh and sing at the same time.

This does not refer to all choirs, but mainly to small, inexperienced ones. I believe music is half of the service and why not have every detail correct instead of having it appear haphazard. —KAY HUMISTON in The Choir-Leader.

MUSIC IN EDUCATION

England, as well as America, is becoming more and more alive to the value of musical instruction in the schools. The "Educational Times" of London says: "Sir Henry Hadow, in an address at the annual meeting of the Manchester High School for Girls, made a special plea for the inclusion of music as a properly recognized part of our educational system. He said that some people did not understand what a musical education really was. Many thought that it consisted in teaching reluctant people to play the piano rather badly. He would gladly sweep away ninety per cent of the piano lessons now given. What was wanted was an appreciation of music rather than executive ability. Music ought not to be regarded as something which foreigners made and England paid for. It had exactly the same kind of appeal as great literature, and everything that could be said in favor of the inclusion of Shakespeare in an educational system could be urged equally for great music. It was to be noted also that music was most prominent in those periods of history which were the most splendid and full of life and happiness. For our comfort Sir Henry expressed the view that things are improving as compared with his early days, when, he said, 'every girl was disgraced who could not play the piano, and every boy who could.'"

"These opinions have a special interest as coming from the Vice-Chancellor of Sheffield University, and the chairman of the Consultative Committee of the Board of Education. One way to give them effect would be to give proper recognition to music as a subject in school examinations. Another would be to secure that music in public elementary schools be taught by competent musicians who are also efficient teachers."

GOSPEL SONG COMPOSERS WANTED

In a recent issue of "The Gospel Choir" appeared the subjoined article. It deserves reprinting because of its honest statements, based upon the views held by the so-called "gospel-song" composers and publishers. As many who read this column will agree, I do not agree in toto with many of the conclusions—or even premises—set forth in this clipping, but it is interesting, at least, to present the varying viewpoints.

"The self-complacency of the capacious musician, the loquacity of the cynic, the pedantry of some ministers of the gospel, and the imitative propensities of many choir leaders have kept up their insistent railery against gospel songs until the production of this class of music has practically ceased, and the church today faces the possibility of a songless tomorrow.

"Those who should have nourished, encouraged, helped and stimulated the growth of this marvelous agent for the uplift of humanity—this wonderful force in teaching and preaching the gospel—have throttled, maligned and belittled its usefulness until the young musician, realizing the attitude of those who frame the music policies of the church, has passed by the great field of sacred song and entered the wide inviting acres of symphonic concert, jazz and 'popular' music.

"These defamers of gospel song, when compared in number with those who are truly interested in church work from a Christian point of view, are as drops of water to the sea, but they have their contaminating influence with a certain class of people. They, as a unit, are ignorant of the origin and development of church music as we know it. Some of them, we must admit, possess musical education. A few of them have grown beyond the simple song of the people because of their study of the works of the old Masters and their association with cultured musicians. They forget that a child must pass through the a, b, c stage in learning to read, and that the masses of the people must have easy music in order to be able to 'sing praises unto the Most High.' Many of the tunes found in our various denominational hymnals are so difficult that congregations cannot sing them, and these same agitators do not call for them.

"In some manner the church must be awakened to the importance of this subject. Of the writers who developed and gave to the church this class of song, but five are living today—Wm. J. Kirkpatrick, George C. Stebbins, E. S. Lorenz, J. H. Fillmore and E. O. Excell—all of whom are on the sunny slope of life. Their work is done, and it was well done; done in a manner that challenges the salute of the entire Christian church; but, there are no new writers following in their footsteps or even fitting themselves to take up the burden these old 'War Horses' have borne so long and which they must very soon lay down."

Twenty-five Years among Bohemians in Chicago

BY ALBERT H. GAGE.

The First Bohemian Baptist Church is twenty-five years old. This event has been recently celebrated by Chicago Bohemian Baptists. Today there are four established churches and four missions in the city, the First Church being the mother, not only of the Bohemian churches in Chicago, but also of the Slovak Church with two missions. From this church have come most of the Baptist leaders of Bohemian work in other cities. The story, of these twenty-five years reads like a modern chapter out of the Book of the Acts of the Apostles and shows the value of work among foreign-speaking groups in America.

Twenty-five years ago Rev. Jacob Meier was pastor of the First German Baptist Church of Chicago. Among his members were two Bohemian women who were constantly praying that something might be done for the Bohemians, who were coming to Chicago in large numbers. Dr. Meier fostered their hopes and began work among the Bohemians. Later he helped to start work among the Hungarians, the Poles, and the Slovaks.

In September, 1887, an industrial school was opened by the Women's American Baptist Home Mission Society and later a Sunday school was started in a rented store on Fisk and 18th Sts.; the school was in charge of Miss G. Meier, assisted by students from the Baptist Missionary Training School.

In 1888, Rev. Lany from Baltimore was called as the first worker. In February of that year occurred the first baptism when a young husband and wife were baptized; the following October six others were baptized. The attendance soon outgrew the store, and Dea. Lingle of the First Church built a chapel on Throop Street near 16th.

Rev. Lany resigned in February, 1890, and Bro. Schultz the first deacon of the mission, conducted the services. In May of that year Bro. Kluzak began work, but remained only six months. Bro. Schultz was elected assistant pastor, but soon resigned. During this period of frequent change the work did not prosper.

In February, 1891, Bro. Kejř from Budapest became pastor. He found the condition of the little mission very dis-

Dedicating All to Christ

Last September at the Roumanian Baptist Convention in Akron, Ohio, a young Roumanian, thirty years of age, who had made as much as $1000 a week in his grocery stores and who had been recently converted was so impressed with one address that he resolved there and then to return to his city, sell out his stores, and other interests, go at once to the Baptist International Seminary at East Orange and take the full course of study in preparation for preaching the gospel to his own people in his own home at his own expense. Arrangements have already been made for his studies in the seminary.

It is unfortunate that many individuals, both men and women, young and old, never come into touch with the relation of property to life and to the kingdom of God until after they have become so much older than this young Roumanian, that it is almost impossible for them to make necessary adjustments to receive the value of real stewardship. Stewardship must mean the right relationship of life to God or else it is not real stewardship, for no one by any gift of money can buy his way into the kingdom of God. Every Baptist ought to give heed these days to the question of whether or not his life is really lived according to Christ's principles of stewardship.—G. N. BRINK, Chairman of Stewardship.

couraging. Out of thirty-six members only six attended and they were not on good terms with each other. In spite of difficulties he worked faithfully and the Lord gave him great success. In 1892 the Woman's Home Mission Society appointed Mrs. Cepelak missionary. She lived only a short time and then the society appointed Miss L. Vedral, a graduate of the Baptist Missionary Training School; Miss Vedral is still doing a valuable work among the women and girls. A B. Y. P. U. was organized in 1894, which remains until this day a flourishing organization.

Up to this time the work was under the supervision of the First German Church. In 1896 it dismissed eighty members to form the First Bohemian Baptist Church of Chicago.

The First Bohemian Church has been a mother of churches. On Aug. 8, 1902, forty-three members were dismissed to form Immanuel Bohemian Baptist Church. In 1904 a mission was opened on 41st Avenue near 14th Street. This is now known as Merigold Mission. It has the largest Bohemian Sunday school in the city. Plans are already being made to form it into an independent church. A mission was started in Cicero. In 1918 the Immanuel Baptist and the First Bohemian Baptist dismissed many of their best members to form the Third Bohemian Baptist Church, the First Church donating the lots. In 1911, the Berwyn Baptist Church erected a chapel among the Bohemians in that community, and in 1920 members were dismissed from three Bohemian churches to form the Czecho-Slovak Baptist Church in Berwyn. In 1915 members were dismissed also to form the Immanuel Slovak Baptist Church.

Pastor Kejř resigned in July, 1900. A unanimous call was extended to Rev. V. Kralicek of Bohemia. His coming marked a new day for the work. He is a man of ability, splendid Christian character and far-seeing wisdom. When the Home Mission Society established the Nat'l Baptist Slavic Training School in Chicago in 1914, Dr. Kralicek became one of the instructors. Fourteen young men have been prepared in this school for work among the Bohemians and Slovaks. The school has now been transferred to East Orange, N. J., as a part of the International Baptist Seminary, with Dr. Frank L. Anderson as president.

When in 1921 Dr. Kralicek resigned as pastor, two of his students, Mr. Edward Catlos and Mr. George Hadraba, were ordained Oct. 16 as joint pastors of the First Bohemian Church. A week later another student, Mr. V. Shuldes, was ordained as pastor of the Czecho-Slovak Church in Berwyn.

Twenty-five years among Bohemians in Chicago show these interesting results: First Bohemian—Pastors, Rev. Edward Catlos and Rev. George Hadraba; three centers with three Sunday schools—Throop St., Millard Ave., and Merigold; membership 214; Sunday school, 600 average attendance. Immanuel Bohemian—Rev. V. J. Vita, pastor; two centers, home church and Hamlin Ave. Mission; membership, 377; Sunday school attendance, 300. Third Bohemian—Rev. John Fort, pastor; two centers; membership, 109; Sunday school attendance, 150. Czecho-Slovak, Berwyn: Rev. V. Shuldes, pastor; Sunday school attendance, 100.

The Baptist Executive Council of Chicago actively co-operates in the Bohemian work. Frank Cech is the Bible worker among all four churches. Last summer six daily vacation Bible schools were conducted, enrolling about 1,000 boys and girls.

The spirit of the Bohemian work is well expressed in these words from Pastor Catlos, who furnished most of the facts for this article: "Are not these great things that our Lord has done within such a short time? I ask you to rejoice with us. I feel personally the importance of Christian ministry during these days as I never did before. I only wish that prayers would be known to God for our work in the future. We as workers are all young. I think I am the youngest, placed to serve the oldest church—a twenty-five-year-old church has a twenty-five-year-old pastor. And so it is with Brethren Hadraba, Fort, Vita, and the rest—all young in years and experience; therefore I ask you for your prayers."

THE "STAR IN THE EAST"

WHEN American relief was undertaken for the purpose of saving from wholesale starvation the children of Bible lands made orphans by war and deportation, the organization for this purpose chose as its symbol a star. This emblem is worn on the uniform of the relief workers and is painted on the auto trucks which carry the food supplies. In most parts of the Near East it is a badge of safety for the wearer and the children know it means life and protection for them. Last July when some Americans visited Alexandropol, where about 18,000 children are housed in the buildings formerly used as Russian barracks, 6,000 little girls marched out on the grounds and formed this star and the letters which signify the organization to which they owe their lives.

Clergy fare certificates are being issued by the same roads and on the same conditions as last year. Application blanks may be secured at any ticket office and when filled out are to be mailed, together with one dollar, to the proper bureau. Applications for an Eastern Clergy Fare Certificate should be sent to C. L. Hunter, Eastern Clergy Bureau, 143 Liberty St., New York City; for a Western Certificate to Eben E. MacLeod, Clergy Bureau, 2162 Transportation Bldg., Chicago, Ill., except that persons residing in Arkansas, Louisiana, Mexico (eastern portion), Missouri, Oklahoma and Texas should apply for these to J. E. Hannegan, Southwestern Passenger Association, 704 Compton Bldg., St. Louis, Mo. Clergy rates are not granted on railroads operating in New England.

Rev. G. H. Schneck, recently pastor of the Second German Baptist Church, Chicago, has accepted a call to the German church in New Britain, Conn., and has already begun work.

At the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, Ohio, Dr. W. W. Bustard baptized forty-four candidates on Christmas morning and gave the hand of fellowship to 108 new members. A handsome amount was paid in as a Christmas offering towards the erection of the new church buildings.

Rev. J. L. Meads, of Benton, Ill., for nine years pastor of the First Church at Benton, has returned to independent evangelistic work. His next engagement is at Robinson, Ill., after which he will be at liberty to make arrangements for special meetings with any church desiring his message.

News has reached this country of the death at the age of eighty-one, in Rangoon, Burma on Dec. 14 of Dr. D. A. W. Smith, the son of Dr. S. F. Smith and himself in the missionary service for a period of fifty-nine years. Since 1876 he has been president of the Karen Theological Seminary and a great power for good among the Karen people. The last few years, during which he has been in ill health, have been largely used in translation work. His wife was Miss Harriet Stevens, a daughter of Dr. Edward A. Stevens, who held a prominent place in early missions in Burma. Two of their daughters, Miss Anna H. Smith and Mrs. Harry I. Marshall are missionaries in Burma. A son, A. W. Smith, M.D., is in America. Dr. W. H. Allison of Colgate is a son-in-law.

Delegates to the Des Moines convention will remember that its president, Hon. Ernest L. Tustin, was taken ill during the sessions. He died on Dec. 18 in Baltimore, following an operation performed the preceding day. Mr. Tustin, who at the time of his death was director of the department of public welfare of Philadelphia has had a long record of civic usefulness. His service to Christian enterprises has been equally marked. He has been prominently connected with our Publication Society, a trustee of Crozer and Bucknell and president of the Northern Baptist Convention. He was a fine Christian gentleman and leaves a host of friends.

After a remarkable pastorate, extending over twenty-two years, with the First Church, Xenia, Ohio, Rev. Albert Read has resigned to accept a call to the First Church, Van Wert, Ohio. He will finish his work at Xenia on Jan. 15. Because of his long service and cordial interest in all public matters, he has held in the city a unique position which it will be impossible to fill.

Rev. W. B. Lipphard expects to sail from Havre, France, on Jan. 7 and is due to reach New York on Jan. 14. Mr. Strzelec writes that Mr. Lipphard was able to secure the active cooperation of the headquarters of the American Relief Administration at Danzig, with the result that the ten carloads of supplies for distribution in Poland will be handled by the railways as far as Warsaw and Lodz without charge, effecting a saving of possibly $2000 in the distribution of supplies in Poland alone.

A paper like "The Baptist" is a valuable denominational record and should not be destroyed. It is almost certain to be lost, however, unless some form of binding is resorted to. One of the most convenient of the binders which has come to our attention and one which is in use in the office is an expansion binder, put out by the Dowst Magazine Binder, 120 Ann St., Chicago. The price of one binder is $1.75, or two can be had for $3. By a simple arrangement each magazine can be put into the binder as it is received, giving a file which is always up to date.

The office of "The Baptist" is receiving occasional calls for copies of the issue of Nov. 26 but is unable to answer because the supply is exhausted. Subscribers having copies of this issue for which they have no further use will confer a favor on the editors if they will send these in to the office.

Mr. S. Coffman, aged 86 years and three months, writes: "I have taken the Standard and THE BAPTIST since Jan., 1860. I was baptized by Prof. F. A. Marsh in Granville, Ohio, in 1854. William Ashmore was my Sunday school teacher in 1844 and I heard Dr. John G. Onchen in the First Church, Columbus, Ohio, when on his tour of the United States in the fifties. I have been in bleeding Kansas fifty years and have clerked for Jewell Baptist Association thirty-six years, thirty years without compensation. Selah!" Now we ask again, is there any brother or sister who can beat this record?

Rev. D. D. Proper has given up the Omaha office of the Home Mission Society and is spending a few months at headquarters in New York City, helping to make out the assignment papers transferring

As the Twig Is Inclined

A WELL-TO-DO deacon of a city church who had for years tithed his income was visiting a country church in the summer.

This city deacon was familiar with some of the problems of that country church. One day he said to the pastor, "Do you see that boy," pointing to his son about 21 years old, "the first salary that boy ever earned he brought it to me so that I would take one tenth of it and give it to the church. That boy is the only member of our family who is not a professing Christian. He has seen it done in our home and believes in it."

The deacon then went on to urge the pastor to teach the people of that country Baptist church to give one tenth of their income to the Lord.—From Gilbert M. Brink, chairman of stewardship.

Assuming one of his privileges and forgetting the empty treasury with the suffering and paralysis of work which this emptiness entails, the treasurer of the Board of Promotion sends you his Christmas wish.

May the New Year be full of joy and gladness. May all differences be forgotten in united action and aggressive service for Him whose birth we celebrate today.

If to any of us is given a broader spiritual vision, let us remember that beliefs which to us seem of minor importance, to many are fundamental, that to attack or belittle such beliefs is to desecrate the sanctity of the Temple.

If any of us insist upon a literal adherence to the theological statements of our fathers, let us look with leniency upon those whose mental and spiritual make-up compels them to question and explore; who have a kind of spiritual wanderlust which keeps them ever wandering into the unknown.

Our Father's house has many mansions, our Savior's love is very broad.

"There is a wideness in God's mercy, Like the wideness of the sea."

May the love without which all gifts profit nothing, which suffereth long and is kind, which believeth all things, hopeth all things and endureth all things, be yours through the coming year.

the society's equities in edifice properties to the various state conventions. Some months ago he made request of the society to retire from the work May 1, 1922, which will be the fortieth anniversary of his beginning general work in the service. On account of the failing health of his wife in 1889, he dropped out of the general work for one year and nine months, in the pastorate at Atchison, Kan. Previous to beginning work with this society he spent two years and seven months in the service of the Publication Society as state Sunday-school missionary in Iowa. Thus he has spent a little over forty years in general traveling work. Since June 10, 1875, after leaving the Chicago Theological Seminary, he has not lost a single minute of time between appointments in service. When he closes his work in New York, he expects to return to Omaha and will be available for supply services as opportunities may offer.

With genuine regret the Tabernacle Church of Chicago, announces through its moderator, the resignation of its pastor, Rev. Louis J. Velte, who came to it from a war chaplaincy. The moderator's letter says: During his ministry he has endeared himself to the church and community, as much by the simplicity of his preaching as by his genial and sympathetic personality. Both Pastor Velte and his excellent wife have brought to the task well-trained and able minds and have demonstrated their ability to carry on all phases of work in an aggressive spiritual well-organized church. Pastor Velte is also identified with Baptist affairs. He is secretary of the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Chicago, and chairman of the religious education committee of the Baptist Executive Council. Through his efforts the first community school of religious education was established in the Garfield Park District and he was honored by the community by being elected its director.

They Are Off

The young people are out after new subscriptions to THE BAPTIST. Before the formal announcement was made subscriptions began to come in from our young folks. Rev. C. W. Atwater of Cincinnati, president of the B. Y. P. U. of A., has the honor of sending in the first subscription in this new campaign.

A New Year's Resolution

The editors are human beings whose editorial experiences have not quite placed them beyond feeling. Therefore we resolve to make no editorial mistakes in 1922. We will make an ideal Baptist newspaper (as far as resolutions go). Of course it may be necessary for us to define such a journal for there are very few such in existence. It should be said that a newspaper may approach the ideal and at the same time say and do things with which individual subscribers do not agree. This may be one such instance. It may say things which hurt and at the same time edify. Now, this is hard doctrine but no harder than some others which have wide currency. Do you not remember when your father used the strap and after nearly wearing it out would say, "Now son, this is for your good"? Poor human nature is prone to approve of things it likes and to praise those with whom it exactly agrees. This in itself would not be so bad were it not equally true that this same human nature is prone to censor those with whom it disagrees.

Dissertations on Dignity

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Smith of Framingham, Mass., in registering their vote on the Kollum wrote a long letter in which they commend its "humanity" and vote for its continuance on the ground that it is the most "human" column in any Baptist newspaper. For the benefit of the clergy we pass on some of their remarks on "Dignity." "Dignity is a mannerism which is dear to the hearts of some ministers. The average layman counts it small. If a man pleases to clothe himself in dignity even to the point of stiffness, that is his right and none should say him nay; but he should not account that dignity unto himself for righteousness nor demand it of anyone else. Most people in the pews agree with that wise old Southern layman who said, 'Dignity is no more evidence of wisdom than a paper collar is of a shirt'."

We Say So

"My own opinion is that the column has too much 'shop talk.' Still if you have the space the objection is not 'irrefragable.' Of course you will do as you feel inclined about it. I am reminded of a sage remark of Abraham Lincoln: 'For people that like that kind of a thing I should think that it is just the kind of a thing they would like.'"
—R. R. Coon, Nebraska. There you have it. This kindly criticism shows how miserably we have failed. There is no reason in the whole wide world why this Kollum should exist except to talk "shop."

Administrative Committee Actions

The following reports were unanimously approved by the Administrative Committee at its meeting held in New York Dec. 28-29, and are given to the denominational papers for publication at the request of the Administrative Committee. The facts contained in the reports have an important bearing upon the present denominational program. It is the desire of the Administrative Committee that these reports be read by all subscribers to the denominational papers and it is suggested that pastors read them in full also to their congregations.

Laymen Suggest Important Changes—Administrative Committee of Board of Promotion Approves and Adopts Them

One of the most significant steps taken at the November meeting of the Board of Promotion in Indianapolis was the formation of the National Laymen's Council. The Executive Committee of the Council met on December 16. Mr. James C. Colgate presided. Laymen were present from eight States.

Former Governor Milliken of Maine, though unable to be present, strongly advocated action which was eventually taken by unanimous vote of the Committee.

In view of the financial situation in the nation and the world, it was agreed by the Executive Committee that it is necessary to provide at once for the obligations immediately pressing upon the denomination rather than literally to adhere to the program adopted at Des Moines. In other words, our churches must raise and pay by the end of the present fiscal year the amount necessary to meet the operating budgets and to cancel the debts of the Board of Promotion and of all our cooperating and affiliating organizations. This amount will not exceed the $20,000,000 which the Des Moines Convention approved as the objective that we should undertake to raise this year. The exact details of the amount required for each organization participating in the New World Movement will be submitted to the Northern Baptist Laymen's Council at its meeting to be held in Chicago, Jan. 20.

This program calls for the full payment of such part of every pledge already made as falls due during the current fiscal year and in addition thereto the sum of approximately $8,000,000 in new pledges, payable before April 30.

Happily, it was possible at once to confer with representatives of the Continuation Campaign Committee of the two Women's Societies. The women agreed that cooperative action was wise and cheerfully made the necessary changes in their plans. There was no need to change one of the objectives for the present year, namely the payment of $2,000,000. Pledges covering the three year period will be welcomed, but are not now the main objective.

These plans as jointly agreed to by the Executive Committee of the Laymen's Council and the Continuation Campaign Committee of the Women's Societies were communicated to the Administrative Committee of the Board of Promotion, and after full discussion they were unanimously adopted. In taking this action the Administrative Committee desires clear understanding on the following points:

1. This change of plan in no way affects pledges already made to the New World Movement of Northern Baptists.

2. The organization already set up in many States should be utilized to the full to carry out the changed objective.

3. If any state organization so determines, new pledges for the remaining three year period may still be taken.

4. This modification of previous plans necessitated by prevailing financial depression involves a similar campaign in each succeeding year of the five year period. The $100,000,000 goal remains unchanged. This is a further step toward its attainment.

Because of apparent misunderstanding on the part of some, the Administrative Committee wishes to emphasize the fact that the collapse of the Interchurch World Movement in no way affects pledges already made to the New World Movement.

work to be kept in touch with the work for which their gifts are used.

Having this vote in mind, your committee conceives of its functions at the present time to be:

- a. To stimulate special giving by individuals and churches for both general and specific purposes.
- b. To pass, with power, upon requests from all organizations having in mind programs for objects already included or not included in the Survey, and to report to the Administrative Committee.

It is most desirable that special giving be stimulated and that such giving be directed along the proper lines in order that the best results may be obtained. In every program for special giving the following general principles must apply:

- a. The annual budgets shall be emphasized as the first obligation upon the denomination.
- b. The debts of the societies shall be emphasized as the second obligation resting upon the denomination.
- c. That in accordance with the spirit and plan of the cooperative program of the New World Movement all participating organizations shall present with their special appeal the whole program to the churches. Churches or individuals in accordance with the spirit of the Indianapolis vote, in November, 1921, may designate their gifts for specific purposes included in the New World Movement.

The committee has been charged with the responsibility of stimulating special giving and it proposes to aid as follows:

- a. To request the societies to furnish lists of their most urgent and vital needs, both foreign, home and local, within the Survey askings, which shall be supplied to all solicitors of funds.
- b. To request the executive secretaries of societies and affiliating organizations to furnish detailed information regarding these special needs as such information may be required.
- c. To request cooperating societies to make available their officers, members of boards of managers, missionaries and others specially qualified for the promotion of this program, either in public address or private appeal.

The committee also feels that all solicitation of designated funds must be carried forward in cooperation with the promotional agency of the area.

It is understood by the Committee that the Board of Promotion shall through other departments notify each State of its proportionate share of the annual budget and of the accumulated debts.

Respectfully submitted,
A. L. Scott, Chairman, A. M. Harris, Mrs. John Nuyven, Mrs. N. R. Wood, J. H. Franklin, C. L. White, Miss Nellie G. Prescott, Mrs. K. S. Westfall.

Report of Committee on the Department of Special Gifts

The first program for this committee was presented to the Administrative Committee of The General Board of Promotion at its meeting in New York on Sept. 20, 1920, at which time it was voted that the Special Gifts Department should:

1. Relate the present giving to designated or specific objects in connection with the work of the different societies, boards and institutions.
2. Be prepared to suggest specific objects included in the survey askings of the various societies, boards and institutions to those wishing to designate their gifts to some definite purpose.
3. Arrange for givers who have become identified with certain phases of the

Other Signs of Hope

THERE has been for weeks talk of a crisis. The talk is based upon hard facts as shown in the condition of our various societies and boards the reports of which have appeared in recent issues of THE BAPTIST. The societies and boards without an exception do face a crisis. This means that Northern Baptists face a crisis for most of these institutions were established years ago by our Baptist fathers or grandfathers to carry forward the world interests of Baptist churches. Outside the bounds of our local churches we have no other agents for Christ's work.

Since the publication of the material referred to, new signs of hope have been constantly coming to light. At least one minister's conference in a great metropolitan center sent out a special call for a meeting for prayer and conference. In all of our states district conferences are being held. Many, like those in New York state, have been meetings of unusual spiritual power. In hundreds, if not thousands, of our churches the officers of the church have been summoned by the pastor and the exact situation has been placed before them. The results of their conferences have been brought to the churches and almost without exception as far as the reports which have reached us are concerned we have the best of evidence that the spirit of heroism is not dead. Again and again it has been true that the churches which entered most largely into the New World Movement campaign have indicated their purpose to go the second mile. Another sign of hope is the fact that voluminous correspondence makes clear that there is an honest effort to analyze the situation upon the part of many pastors and churches which have not entered enthusiastically into the movement.

One of our faithful ministers has written in the best of spirit urging that we modify the editorial on "Who Made the Crisis?" by calling attention to the following considerations: "Some men and churches did not join hands in the N. W. M. because no direct appeal has been made for them to do so." Let state and associational directors of promotion take notice. This pastor has placed his finger on a weak place in our campaign. Even in churches which have done well in the campaign there are many individuals and families where the same thing holds true.

In the second place he urges that "some were contributing to the limit of their ability when the appeal was made to them. In many instances a few faithful ones are toting their churches along from year to year with heroic effort." It pains us to record this suggestion, for it is shamefully true. All honor to the "few faithful ones" but they are only a fraction of our total membership. Who dares say that those who are giving "to the limit of their ability" number 10 per cent in the average church? It is often easier for the few faithful ones to pay up the deficit at the end of the year than it is to give themselves to the more vital task of patiently teaching and leading the membership to a genuine stewardship of life and money.

The third suggestion it seems to us is of doubtful value. It is suggested that there are churches which have needed "every available dollar for the purpose of construction or reconstruction of their own church edifices." The necessity for maintaining the home base is always taken for granted. The files of THE BAPTIST during the past two years record scores of instances of churches struggling with building enterprises which have felt the pulsations of new life as they threw themselves into the effort to help others whose conditions were even more desperate. It has been proved "there is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

World Survey Number

THIS number will help Baptists to take account of stock and to learn how matters actually stand with them all over the world.

Owing to the mass of material available, the survey must be given in two installments. The reports of the states and other material will appear in the issue of Jan. 14.

It is necessary to postpone until another week the final chapter of Dr. Strong's "Primer of Theology." Certain departments have also been omitted and the news curtailed. Even the editorial pages are devoted to important material which reached us at a late hour.

A study of the reports will show a splendid spirit at home. Seldom have we had such a year for evangelism and seldom have there been so many baptisms. Everywhere we find evidences of quickening due to the New World Movement.

As to 1922 we are optimistic. We believe that we have passed the depths of the period of depression. We think that the corner has been turned. And as business conditions become better in the country the spirit which is in our people will result in such an outpouring of money and life in Christ's service as we have not yet seen. There is hard work to be done; there is sacrifice to be made; there are perhaps bitter cups which we must drink. But, at the same time, there is victory ahead for Northern Baptists if they are willing to pay the price. And we are going to pay.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society— The Achievements of the Year

By CHARLES S. WHITE, Executive Secretary

THE seal of our Lord's approval is stamped everywhere, we believe, on the work of The American Baptist Home Mission Society during the past year. It has been a period of stress and sacrifice. Our missionaries have toiled in Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Central America, among the Indians, in our many mission schools and among English and foreign-speaking populations with great fidelity and rare consecration. Our colporter-missionaries, too, have labored in the neglected areas; our evangelists have presented to the people clear, evangelical messages that have won the hearts of a multitude to Christ, and our secretaries and those who have helped them in their offices have toiled with unremitting devotion in the performance of those heavy Christian tasks which have never become irksome. A spirit of unity and intelligent cooperation has pervaded our many-sided mission work.

There has been no attempt in the departmental reports which follow, each of which has been prepared by the secretary administering the work, to separate the accomplishments which have been made possible through the gifts provided under our regular budget, and the important steps forward and upward that have been financed through the income on certain designated funds not counted in the receipts of the New World Movement.

English Speaking and Indian Missions

By LEMUEL C. BARNES

WE HAVE taken a decidedly new grip on the difficult situation in Utah and expect in the coming year to put it into more effective condition than it has been for a long time.

The Every-community Service in Montana has been strongly confirmed during the year, and it is now believed by those best acquainted with the situation to have passed beyond the experimental stage. In the year to come that unique, successful experiment in the aggressive, and at the same time, economic extension of the kingdom is to be advanced. In the past year the "Inland Empire" section of the country has asked for a similar undertaking there to be put into operation in 1922.

We have been cooperating closely with the Committee on Social and Religious Surveys in utilizing the results of their findings both in Indian and in white work. Plans are matured for prosecuting this process of utilization extensively in white and Indian fields the coming year.

The transference of the Congregational missionary work among the Crow Indians to the care of our Society and the transforming of it into Baptist work is one of the phenomenal events in the history of the kingdom of God. There is every reason to believe that we shall be able this year to prove to all concerned that this was a great step forward in the Christianizing of a needy tribe.

At the urgency of the government Indian service we have taken up vigorously the providing for spiritually destitute bands of Indians in the state of Nevada. They are responding wonderfully to the endeavors we are making.

Much remains to be done among Indians in various parts of the country if our denomination is to do its share in removing from American Christianity the shame of leaving scores of tribes and bands utterly without the gospel at the end of three centuries of Protestant Anglo-Saxon occupation of the country.

City and Foreign Speaking Missions

By CHARLES A. BROOKS

THE Department of City and Foreign Speaking Missions rejoices in the appointment of Rev. R. J. Inke as general missionary among the Russians in America. He has commended himself to the Russian brethren and all others who have come into contact with him and given assurance of great usefulness at a vital point.

An outstanding event in the division of Christian centers is the purchase of a splendid property in New Haven for an Italian church and Christian center which will house the Italian church and furnish an adequate plant for community work. In this the Connecticut Convention and the Woman's Home Mission Society have shared with the local Baptist Union and the Home Mission Society. Plans are drawn and accepted for three other important community centers at Rankin, Pa., Wierton, W. Va., and Locke, Cal.

The chapel car "Glad Tidings" has been set apart for work among Mexicans in the United States with Rev. A. B. Howell in charge. Its work began in Arizona in September and most gratifying response has been met with everywhere.

One more Negro Christian center has been opened, this time in Detroit in co-operation with the Detroit Baptist Union. Steps have been taken looking toward the organization of a Negro Baptist education board to cooperate with the two Home Mission Societies in the establishment of a Negro Training School which is contemplated in Chicago. The Negro Baptists are coming into their own in the North.

Social Service and Rural Community Work

By ROLOIX HARLAN

DURING the year 1921 the department has succeeded in carrying out its plan of placing directors of town and country churches in five of the most distinctively agricultural states. A man who from practical experience and intensive study is a specialist in the town and country church, is at work in these states to demonstrate to our churches the possibility and value of community service, and to lead in the rehabilitation of the country church.

A distinctively rural demonstration parish has been organized at Arnold, Neb., and cooperation given in the securing of a well-equipped building for community service. It is known as the Nebraska Rural Parish. The parish includes the church at the center and four outstations. The work is developed through a carefully organized program under the lead of an experienced pastor, with a living salary, and an automobile for use in parish work.

Successful conferences dealing with the church and industry have been held, and it is felt that a real contribution has been made toward a Christian solution of the most vexing of our social problems, namely, that of industrial relations.

Comprehensive surveys of two large cities have been made—Buffalo and Rochester, N. Y. On the basis of these surveys our Baptist work in these cities has been reoriented.

The Judson Health Center has been organized in connection with the Judson Memorial Church of New York City, and a program of preventive health work and community service, in what is known as the Health Desert of New York, has been set up. It is to be a demonstration of the healing ministry of the Church of Christ.

Baptist Brotherhood Federation

By J. FOSTER WILCOX

WE HAVE now enrolled nearly 800 groups of men. (67 groups have been enrolled since December 1, 1921, less than a month.) These groups contain thousands of Baptist men. We have two Brotherhoods with a membership of 1,000 men each, the average membership being forty. We reach these groups through 2,500 selected leaders. Thousands of pages of informational and inspirational literature have been mailed to these men, and various denominational societies have sent literature through our office. We keep in constant touch with these groups. The director is speaking constantly to groups of men in Northern Baptist Convention territory. We have made a careful study of the men's work in the various denominations, of the English Brotherhood movement, and the Canadian Brotherhood work, and are constantly passing on to our groups the practical methods discovered.

Opened Camp Oswegatchie in the Adirondack Mountains for the training of selected Baptist Boys. We entertained boys from fifteen states, the District of Columbia, from China, Japan, Korea, India and Burma. Many denominational leaders lived with the boys as members of the faculty. We are now keeping in touch with every boy entertained. A monthly letter is sent to each lad. Several decided to enter college, and some are now preparing for service in the home and foreign fields.

Department of Evangelism

By HERBERT F. STILWELL

THE year stands out as the year of greatest ingathering of souls in our denominational history. It is the year in which evangelism has come to be recognized as necessary to every form of religious activity; like the silken thread running through the bank note, it indicates its genuineness. It has been the year of greatest interdenominational fellowship. Whatever the distinct differences in church doctrines and policy, there has developed a remarkable unity in this matter of soul winning. There is no discussion as to the fact that this is the primal work of the church. In a perfectly natural way our department has shared in this general impulse.

Very incomplete reports would indicate that approximately 120,000 have been added to the churches of our Northern Baptist Convention in 1921. There has grown a decided conviction that the evangelism we need is pastoral, personal and cooperative. More pastors than in any previous year have met in conferences to consider this phase of church activity. There has been a decided revival of the witnessing church—the personal testimony of the experience of Christ in the life. This is the attractive evangelism of the church.

The year has witnessed a growing disposition toward evangelism as a kingdom interest rather than merely a local church concern. More than ever our State Conventions are adopting for their goal "evangelism in every church." Churches are releasing their pastors for limited periods for cooperative help. In one state more than 100 pastors responded to this appeal "willing to go anywhere." In a district in the same state in this way forty-two series of meetings were concluded in six weeks; the entire financial expense less than $500. The need is for inspirational and directive leadership. If we could double our present staff of workers we could sweep the field of the Northern Baptist Convention like a prairie fire.

The outlook for 1922 is full of encouragement and progress. Churches and pastors are yearning for a revival of soul winning. Our British Baptists and other evangelical bodies are in the midst of a revival of lay and personal evangelism. The Presbyterians of our Southland are urging for the coming year the greatest evangelistic effort in their history. These are "the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees." It is the Master's call. Let us go!

Latin North America

BY CHARLES S. DETWEILER

THE outstanding achievements of the year 1921 in the Department of Latin North America are as follows:

1. Two churches in Cuba and two churches in Mexico attained self-support, releasing funds of the society for the enlargement of the work in other parts. In addition to one such church in Porto Rico previously reported and another in Mexico, there are now six self-supporting Baptist churches in our Latin-American fields.

2. Two important church buildings were completed in strategic centers. The larger of these is at San Juan, and includes a residence for pastor and missionaries of the Woman's Society, together with rooms for industrial classes, kindergarten and other forms of community service. The other building is in San Salvador, Central America, and was dedicated Dec. 11.

3. During the year the society voted to come to the help of the British Baptists in the rehabilitation of the Baptist Mission in Jamaica.

4. The reports from the churches in all our fields indicate the largest number of baptisms yet reported for the first six months of the present fiscal year. The prospects are that our mission reports for 1922 will record the largest ingathering in Latin America up to the present time.

Our outstanding needs for 1922 are missionary reinforcements for Central America, a training school for pastors in Central America, and new buildings for our college at El Cristo, Cuba.

Education

BY GEORGE RICE HOVEY

I SUGGEST the following as the outstanding achievements of the year 1921 in the department of education:

1. In connection with International Baptist Seminary—(a) the establishment of a new department of foreign-speaking people—the Roumanian; (b) the combining of six foreign-speaking schools in the one seminary at East Orange; (c) the purchase of a new building for the seminary used temporarily for the Italian department; probably ultimately to be used for a woman's department; (d) the bringing of eleven Russian war prisoners from near Metz to the International Baptist Seminary, and their excellent progress and fine spirit during the six months they have been here; (e) the establishment of a Spanish-American department of this seminary at Los Angeles, Cal.

2. In connection with Indian work—(a) the erection of the Samuel Eastman Richard Memorial Hall at Bacone College, for which an Indian (Eastman Richard) contributed $50,000; (b) a second contribution of $50,000 from an Indian for Bacone College; (c) contributions of $100,000 from Indians for the Murrow Indian Orphans' Home at Bacone College.

3. In connection with Negro work—(a) the completion of a science hall at Morehouse College, with money given by the General Education Board; (b) an architectural study of several of our colleges for the purpose of harmonious and artistic development in the future by our Department of Architecture; (c) the beginning of a study of the needs of the Negro schools for equipment in science, under the direction of the General Education Board.

4. In connection with our Spanish-American work—(a) the purchase of thirty-three acres of land for an enlarged campus at Cristo, Cuba; (b) the visit of a deputation to Jamaica to consider the methods of helping Baptist work in that island and a recommendation for strengthening the training of Christian workers at Calabar College.

Among the more important items in the department of education in the outlook for 1922, the following may be named:

1. In connection with the International Baptist Seminary—(a) the erection of a new building in order that one of the present buildings already purchased may be released for a woman's department; (b) the opening of a woman's department.

2. In connection with Indian work—(a) the erection of a boys' dormitory for Bacone College for which money has been given by an Indian; (b) the erection of a girls' dormitory for the Murrow Indian Orphans' Home, for which money has been given by an Indian.

3. In connection with work for Negroes—(a) the opening of a Negro training school in Chicago in the building now occupied by the Woman's Training School; (b) the provision of scientific equipment for Negro colleges, which will enable them to meet the requirements of the standard college; (c) the erection of six or eight homes for teachers in Negro schools; (d) the securing of money and erection of a gymnasium at Storer College, a task in which the alumni of the school is showing great interest; (e) the establishment of Leland College in Louisiana.

4. In connection with Spanish work—(a) the erection of a boys' school at Saltillo, Mexico, in cooperation with the Southern Baptist Convention; (b) the establishment of a school for the training of Christian workers in Central America; (c) the establishment of a school in Haiti; (d) the beginning of our assistance to the Baptists of Jamaica.

A Chapel Hospital in China

IT is alleged that now and then people go to sleep in their pews in churches in America, but a very different reason for sleeping in them is given in the following extract from a report by Rev. A. F. Groesbeck, D. D., evangelistic missionary in Chaoyanghsien, China:

"We have no building for medical purposes but we use the chapel. The pews are fortunately movable and during the week two of these are placed together and make, from a Chinese point of view, a very comfortable bed. On these lie a great number of sick, halt, lame and blind, but mainly, as I have learned, hook-worm patients. For years and probably for centuries the people in this region have suffered from the hook-worm disease with absolutely no hope for cure. Now it has become known that this disease can be cured in a short time and cured permanently. This is bringing great crowds to us. If we had the room to accommodate them hundreds would undoubtedly come to us for relief. The work is entirely in charge of a native physician and is proof that the Chinese can do things when they are properly trained. The Chinese have already subscribed $10,000 for the development of our educational and medical work. Although the amount is not large, it will give us some relief.

The quarter closed with ten baptisms.

One was a boy whose life we saved while he was a baby by feeding him condensed milk and barley groats. I suppose this was a sort of casting bread upon the waters which has now returned after many days. One of those baptized was the teacher of athletics in our school. He was a captain, I think, in the Chinese army when we engaged him. At first he seemed to have no interest in the gospel, but he has entirely changed the last few months. Recently he said, "If I had known this gospel sooner, it would have saved me years of life and thousands of dollars." His face fairly shone when he gave his testimony before the church at the examination. The other eight candidates were school boys and with one exception they were from non-Christian families. The grandfather of the boy who is the exception is the leading head man in a large village down the coast, a man who was responsible for the looting of our chapel years ago. The boy's father was an opium smoker who was converted and afterward became addicted to the drug again. Father and grandfather were sworn enemies during life, but as the father approached death they became reconciled and he gave a testimony and urged the grandfather and children to become Christians. The boy recently entered our school and is now carrying out the instruction of his dying father.

A Survey of Baptist Progress for 1921

What have Baptists been doing during the year? What advances have been made? What is the outlook for 1922? Here are answers from all parts of the far-flung battle line.

General Denominational Organizations

Northern Baptist Convention

THE chief enterprise during 1921 has been the New World Movement. The convention officers, and those of the co-operating organizations and boards have given themselves without reservation to the promotion of this great objective. The failure to realize our aims rests in no measure upon those who have been entrusted by the denomination with the management of its missionary, educational and philanthropic enterprises. They still hope and work and pray for God's blessing upon our entire constituency.

What is needed more than anything else in our judgment is the Holy Spirit in our hearts leading us to vitalize our plans, and to consecrate ourselves to their achievement. No methods are perfect, but no perfect methods could succeed without the divine power in our own hearts.

We are much bereaved by the death of Hon. Ernest L. Tustin, the last president of our body, and the first of our presidents to make his exodus to his heavenly home. The corresponding secretary bears witness to his intense interest in our work, the wisdom of his mind and the generosity of his hand. All others who have been presidents of the convention survive. We are grateful for their ministry.

The earnest prayer of all the members of the executive committee is that our fellowship in Christ may be realized in love for one another, mutual forbearance in the face of differences, the kind of affection which our Lord urged, and which the great apostle described in First Corinthians, thirteenth chapter. With such a divine gift as this nothing would be impossible for the constituency of the Northern Baptist Convention.

St. Louis, Mo. W. C. BITTING.

General Board of Promotion

THE year 1921 has meant for Northern Baptists great achievements and searching questions. In the perplexities of the present it is well not to forget the victories of the past. A year ago this column reported the subscription of the largest amount ever pledged for our denominational work. Since then we have seen the close of a fiscal year, during which Northern Baptists paid into the treasuries of their missionary societies, educational institutions and other denominational agencies, more than $12,500,000, an annual contribution unprecedented in Baptist history. Payments on subscriptions during the same period, including advance payments, amounted to 92.6 per cent of the total estimated to be due. According to figures compiled by the United Stewardship Council, our denomination, with gifts amounting for each member to $10.05, was first, in per capita giving for missions and benevolences, among bodies having more than 400,000 members.

These are arresting figures, representing substantial advance on the records of the past, but as with individuals, so with denominations, growth brings increased responsibilities. With the knowledge of possibilities such as these, we cannot without betrayal of our trust and disaster to our cause be content to walk again on the old levels. Are we going to measure up to our new responsibilities and continue to realize our new found possibilities?

The old year closes without a satisfactory answer to this question. Collections for the current fiscal year are only slightly more than half those for the corresponding period of the preceding year. Our beloved denominational organizations are faced with blighting deficits unless our contributions equal or exceed those of last year.

The ultimate answer depends on individual Baptists from Maine to California. The facts have been given in the denominational papers and elsewhere. Plans are under way for presenting the needs to every church and every member within the next four months. Signs of economic improvement are not wanting, but whatever outward conditions may be, we shall reach our objective only as we enter into the sacrificial spirit of our Master and work together for the establishment of his kingdom. The future rests with the Baptists—and with God.

New York City. J. Y. ATTCHISON.

American Baptist Historical Society

THE year 1921 marks an epoch in the work of the American Baptist Historical Society. This beginning of a new period in our service to the Baptist denomination results from our recognition in the plans of the General Board of Promotion, as an outcome of which we receive some assistance toward maintaining our activities in behalf of Baptist history. While this aid is a relatively small amount and its use by us will not be felt among the manifold activities of Baptists, it furnishes a hope for Baptist history which means large things in the years to come.

Because of the recognition received from the General Board of Promotion in 1921 the outlook for 1922 is unusually bright. In addition to maintaining a wide correspondence and the current routine library work undertaken heretofore, we shall be able to bind considerable of the invaluable minutes, reports, magazines and newspapers which have long needed this protection and have suffered from its absence. By this binding the newspaper material particularly will be come accessible for use as it has not been in the past.

It is hoped also to prepare an index of the church and personal names in David Benedict's monumental work, a general history of the Baptist denomination in America. This will be prepared on cards arranged alphabetically and has become imperative if we are to meet the requests which are coming concerning the Baptists of America previous to 1850. To this will be added as soon as possible a similar index of the works of Morgan Edwards, the priceless register published by John Asplund from 1790 to 1796, and other early documents.

These will be achievements in access to Baptist history and may justly be a source of satisfaction.

FRANK GRANT LEWIS.

Chester, Pa.

1921 in Baptist Schools

THE New World Movement embodies a new policy for Baptists of the North in relation to their educational institutions. We now realize that the schools are part of our program and that we must think in terms of our whole constituency in building up a system of schools and colleges which will properly represent Baptists, and adequately serve our purpose.

The second year of the New World Movement has been a time within which the schools have enjoyed some of the benefits growing out of this campaign, and are thus enabled to meet the enlarged demands made upon them by the greatly increased attendance this year. They have not increased their resources and equipment to the extent which they had expected. The failure to complete the hundred millions, limited their development; and the fact that they received about one-half of their share of the money collected was a further limitation on expansion.

Three schools were reopened this fall: Keuka College for women, Vermont Academy and Cook Academy. Berkeley Divinity School is now occupying a new building erected at a cost of more than $100,000. Ward Science Hall was completed at Ottawa, Kans., at a cost of $136,000. Alderson Academy, after years of most inadequate accommodations, has completed its splendid new building. Bucknell has made an addition to its chemical laboratory and work is progressing on one wing of an engineering building to cost $100,000. Other schools are increasing their equipment and almost all of them have been able to make some addition to their permanent endowment.

But the great event of the year was that the schools and colleges gave up temporarily their full share of receipts in the New World Movement. They have received about 13 per cent instead of 30 per cent which their percentage in the survey would give to them. This readiness to bear the burden of the denomination and to surrender their rights is due to the feeling that they are a part of the denominational life and as other organizations were in need they were glad to help bear the burden; since the way to enlarged life is through sacrifice for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake, this surrender of claims for the good of the whole will mean more to the schools than buildings and endowment.

New York City. GEO. R. BAKER.

Baptist Young People's Union of America

FOR the past year our organization has worked along the following lines: 1. City Union and Associational Organization; 2. Baptist Tithers' League; 3. Quiet Half-Hour League; 4. Life Service League; 5. Social Service. During 1921 there was an ever-increasing interest on the part of the young people in the great denominational affairs. The outstanding achievement was the great educational campaign in the interest of tithing and stewardship. Following the Cincinnati convention great emphasis has been placed on evangelism and many young people have been won to Christ. The outlook for 1922 is exceptionally bright in spite of the general financial conditions. The Union is co-operating loyally and heartily with other agencies at work within the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention. Through the young people's directors and state promotion offices a large service is being rendered, especially in behalf of the big stewardship campaign put on by the Northern Baptist Convention. The big event for 1922 will be the thirty-first anniversary convention of the Union to be held in St. Paul, Minn., June 28-July 2.

Chicago. JAMES ASA WHITE.

The National Baptist Convention

THE activities of the convention cover such a vast territory, that it is not an easy matter to point out the most notable achievements for 1921. The work of the National Baptist Convention is done through six boards: The foreign mission, home mission, educational, B. Y. P. U., Sunday-school and benefit boards.

These boards make a report of their work to the convention at the annual session, and it is from these that we are able to get a general survey of the entire field. The phenomenal growth of the denomination still stands out as one of the most important features in our denominational life, which is due largely to the aggressive spirit of the leaders in every section of the country, and to the further fact that Negroes, as a rule, believe in the simple story of the cross as found in the Bible, and the doctrines as promulgated by the Christ of the Bible. Also, much of the progress of the past year was due to the evenly distributed Baptist leaders in all parts of the country. In nearly every community the one outstanding leader is a well-prepared Baptist minister who has had training in some of the best schools of the country.

Six years ago the denomination suffered somewhat from a rupture in the convention. One of its most important boards withdrew and organized a rival convention. For awhile this had a considerable following, but by persistent effort on the part of the leaders in the National Baptist Convention, most of those who went out have returned and the convention is stronger and more influential than at any period of its history.

The progress of the work in Africa and South America, under our foreign mission board, is commensurate with the men and means at our command, as its report to the last meeting of the convention shows.

The outlook is indeed bright, with a practically united Baptist family pushing a budget of $5,000,000 to be raised in the next four years; the building of a theological seminary at Nashville, Tenn.; the building of a $300,000 publishing house, and a few minor enterprises are in contemplation for 1922. In the building of the theological seminary, we have the co-operation of the Southern Baptist Convention, which has agreed to put $200,000 in the project. It has been proposed to establish a national training school in Chicago, and it is hoped that we may have the cooperation of the Northern Baptist Convention in this project.

Helena, Ark. E. C. MORRIS.

The National Baptist Convention (Unincor.)

THE National Baptist Convention of the U. S. A. (unincorporated) held its last session at New Orleans, La., in September. Three thousand delegates from all parts of the union were present. Rev. Thorburn, our missionary who is stationed in Panama, reported more than 100 additions to his membership. We were able to furnish him with a boat by which he will be enabled to cross the lake to a new mission recently established by him. Our publishing plant at Nashville, Tenn., distributed fully 5,000,000 tracts of a religious nature, and the receipts from all sources totalled $225,000 which is the largest amount reported for any twelve months since its organization twenty-five years ago. Our school at Nashville, Tenn., known as the National Baptist Theological Seminary and Training School ended its third year of operation. Many were refused admission because of inadequate facilities. The property is valued, including buildings and a campus of eight acres, at $250,000, all of which has been paid except $12,000. Our missionaries in Africa are doing splendid work and many conversions have been reported.

Dr. C. J. W. Boyd, our educational secretary, was accidentally killed on the closing day of the convention. In the death of Dr. Boyd our convention sustained an irreparable loss. Dr. G. A. Long was elected as his successor.

The Progressive Baptist Convention of Arkansas paid $6,000 cash for a tract of land near Little Rock, upon which they will erect a school.

New impetus was given to the project of erecting a home for aged ministers and the needy ones. This proposition has been received with every prospect of success. Our evangelistic board is strenuously laboring to add 100,000 converts to our various churches throughout the United States and an educational and civic commission composed of 100 leading pastors was elected. They are preparing to visit Jerusalem as well as parts of Egypt. The various phases of our religious activities need improvement, but considering conditions the report which showed a total income of $331,000 is encouraging. Fully 15,000 Sunday schools and B. Y. P. U.'s are supplied with literature. Secretary R. H. Boyd, of Nashville, is optimistic as to the future. The opportunities for world evangelism loom large in proportions, and the means for its accomplishment deserve greater consideration.

Evanston, Ill. EDWARD P. JONES.

The Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention

A BRIEF statement of the work of our board during the year 1921 is as follows:

1. More and more the work of this board has been laid on the hearts of our people. It is now ten years since it began, and a process of education was necessary before its purposes, methods and objectives were understood. I am glad to say that the condition today is infinitely better than it was ten years ago.

2. Permanent funds increased by gifts of $1,668,871.34, most of which was reported to the Northern Baptist Convention at Des Moines. Up to Oct. 31, $1,021,741 had been withheld from the receipts of the General Board of Promotion at the direction of the Northern Baptist Convention which, if we had received it, would have been made a part of the permanent fund of this board. This was the outcome of "preferential treatment." We are hopeful that adjustments may restore this amount.

3. Our beneficiaries have increased until they now number more than 1250. We are finding the experience of other denominations verified in the number of ministers' widows. In several of the denominations these outnumber the men on the beneficiary list; in our own the numbers are nearly equal.

4. The retiring pension plan has been meeting with a steady and increasing response. In this line of our work also education was required. Our ministers now are steadily joining. At no time, if the experience of other denominations is any guide, will all our ministers be members. Perhaps it is not strange that the majority of the men who are joining are from those who have had a more complete preparation for the ministry. Women missionaries who have been regularly commissioned by authorized denominational boards are also eligible and are joining.

5. Many churches are sharing in the work by making provision in their annual budgets for the retiring pensions of their pastors. The cost to the minister is heaviest in his first year. The board hopes to provide a large part of the cost of carrying the pension, but for the sake of the minister as well as the churches it is necessary that a part be provided outside the board. The Congregationalists who have recently adopted this identical plan are following the same method. The plan has been pronounced the cheapest and best among the denominations. There is a halo about the outgoing missionary which is lost when the same missionary returns broken and worn out. There is a special interest in the young man preparing for the ministry. When these same men have grown old in the service and broken by life and their labors of love, apparently much of the interest has departed. This board is glad to honor every new missionary and minister, but its supreme purpose is to honor the men who already are ministers and missionaries and have given their lives to a service which cannot be measured by money. The board stands ready to help just as far as the churches help the board.

New York City. E. T. TOMLINSON.

Southern Baptists 1921 and 1922

Southern Baptists in 1921

AMONG the outstanding achievements of Southern Baptists during the year 1921, we mention the following:

1. All Baptist educational institutions report record-breaking attendance, the three theological seminaries having a total of nearly 1400 men and women in attendance at the present time. 2. The growth of the membership and work of the B. Y. P. U.'s continue to be remarkable, the membership now approximating one-eighth of the total number of Southern Baptists. 3. The organization of student activities in Baptist schools and colleges of the South was completed and Mr. Frank Leavell of Atlanta elected director. 4. The headquarters of the W. M. U. of the South were removed from Baltimore to Birmingham, Ala. 5. Foreign mission work was launched in the following new fields during the year: Hungary, Jugoslavia, Roumania, Siberia, Spain, Ukraine and S. Russia. 6. Complete reports of the special evangelistic campaign over the South are not yet available, but the partial reports indicate that 250,000 persons were baptized in 1921. 7. The growth of teacher training and organized class work in our Sunday schools continued to be phenomenal. 8. The increased output of Southern Baptist authorship has been notable in 1921. The receipts of the Baptist Sunday-school Board, for the first time in its history, passed well beyond $1,000,000, showing over 30 per cent gain over 1920. 9. An increased demand has been brought to bear upon our schools and colleges that their teachers and teaching should be distinctly and positively Christian. 10. The efforts to redeem the pledges of the $75,000,000 campaign have been truly heroic and though the collections fell 25 per cent short last year, due to the financial distress of the South, yet, on the whole, the people remained loyal, united and determined to carry out the great program. 12. The recent meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention expressed itself favorable to the establishment of a new theological seminary and a southwide university. 13. All relief work carried on by Southern Baptists was placed under the direction of the Foreign Mission Board at Richmond. 14. A campaign for the enrollment of 500,000 tithe has been concluded, though the returns from the campaign are not yet available. 15. Another unit in the great tuberculosis hospital being built at El Paso, Texas, by the Home Mission Board, has been completed and opened for service. 16. The large and growing attendance upon the meetings of the Southern Baptist Convention forced consideration of the question of reducing the representation or providing for greatly amplified facilities for holding these meetings. 17. The Department of Survey, Statistics and Information functioned in its first year's service and issued the "Southern Baptist Survey Handbook for 1921," the "Baptist Survey Bulletin," etc.

Southern Baptists in 1922

The foregoing achievements of Southern Baptists in 1921, along with the general situation over the South, point to larger achievements and better things for the year 1922. In fact, apart from the financial pressure on our people—and the South now bids fair to recover sooner than some other sections of the nation—the outlook for Southern Baptists was never brighter. More people are being won to Christ, more splendid meeting houses built, more Sunday schools thoroughly organized and aroused, more B. Y. P. U.'s brought into action, more students crowding into our schools, colleges and seminaries; more work is being done, more information gathered, and in spite of the hard times, more money given to Christ's cause, than at any time in the history of Southern Baptists. The way before our people in 1922 is difficult, but challenging and triumphant.

Baptist World Alliance

THE most outstanding feature of the Baptist World Alliance during 1921 is the fine service rendered by Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, European commissioner, who serves our foreign boards in this country, in Great Britain and also the World Alliance. His visit to this country last summer and the addresses made in different parts of the country not only introduced him to American Baptists, but won for him a very large place in our confidence and esteem. He is in closest touch with Baptists in the near east, and in addition to the information which he brings to us concerning conditions there he has been able greatly to strengthen and encourage our denominational interests in those lands.

The executive committees of the Alliance in Great Britain and America have voted to hold the next meeting of the Alliance in the summer of 1923, and have accepted an invitation from the Baptists of Stockholm to meet in that city. Those who were fortunate enough to be present at the European Baptist Congress held in Stockholm in 1913 will not need to be assured of the splendid hospitality which characterizes the Baptists of that beautiful city. It has also been decided to hold a meeting of the World Alliance Executive in London next summer, probably early in July. Such a meeting seems to be demanded by the many difficult problems connected with our work on the continent of Europe and in order to make sure that the Stockholm meeting will be furnished with all the facts concerning our work in the lands so sorely affected by the great war.

American Baptist Publication Society

I HAVE your request of Dec. 5 for a brief statement, not to exceed 500 words, answering for the American Baptist Publication Society: 1. What are the outstanding achievements of the past year? 2. What is the outlook for 1922?

I wonder if you realize the difficulty of making, under present conditions, a statement that will serve the purpose which I assume you have in mind in presenting the survey of our whole denominational task to our people. You probably have the statement of the American Baptist Publication Society relative to its present situation, which is to be printed together with like statements from other national societies and boards. In the face of the situation as therein set forth, what can one say as to the outstanding achievements of the past year when, because of diminished receipts, we have been obliged to reduce our field force in every department, are compelled to exercise the most rigid economy in every detail and have been obliged to borrow heavily to meet the current charges of each month as they become due. As I look back upon the months just gone, it seems to me that perhaps the most outstanding achievement is the fact that we have been able to come through these months without an actual collapse of the work. We have not got through without severe sacrifices that have cut the going work to the quick, but as yet it has not resulted in any disorganization of the work.

As to the outlook for 1922, it is as dark as the failure of our people to pay their pledges to date, and at the same time as bright as the promises of God. If our society receives this year its full quota, or its share of the balance of the money already pledged on the New World Movement, it will be able to: 1. Wipe out its entire indebtedness. 2. Fill all vacancies created by resignations this year and last. 3. Appoint directors of religious education for the states that are now pleading for their appointment, but whose applications we have not been able to approve because of insufficient funds. 4. Appoint directors of religious education for three of our large cities that have been waiting for more than a year for the society to send them some one to lead them in this work. 5. Make a slight increase in our Bible work at home and in Latin America, where the society has recently been compelled to reduce its staff because of the shrinkage in its receipts. The accomplishment of these things will put new life and hope in all our workers, and a new power into the work itself.

If the $30,000,000 additional pledges are secured, the Publication Society's share of it will enable it to do its part in reaching the 27,000,000 boys and girls in the United States who do not attend Sunday school. With 20,000,000 children from six to twelve years of age in our land who are not under any religious instruction, we shall save ourselves from becoming a nation of religious illiterates only by placing religion on a par with other interests in the education of the children, and by going out after those who have not been reached. The $30,000,000 pledges, if secured, will enable the Publication Society to do a more intensive, as well as a more extensive work in the promotion of religious education in our churches, Sunday schools and communities, as the agent for the denomination in this particular task.

With its share of the $30,000,000 additional, the Publication Society will be able to: 1. Increase the number of its Bible workers by nearly 50 per cent. This will mean more men of God distributing God's word among our religiously destitute population. It will mean doubling the present number of these workers in Latin America. Thousands upon thousands of homes will be reached which do not now know the word of God. 2. Increase the number of Sunday school field workers who seek out communities without a Sunday school and organize schools for them. 3. Multiply its various training schools, institutes of instruction, schools of method, summer assemblies, and conferences in which educational vision and detailed help are given our church workers. 4. Provide for each of the great sections of the country, specialists who will bring their help to the schools of each state and for each state, a strong staff of experts. 5. Furnish the local church, when requested, survey workers whose services will be available for the local Sunday school when planning to reorganize or to put on a special campaign for advance. 6. Provide the funds required to enlarge its teacher-training work, extend its daily vacation Bible schools, and add to its Sunday school work for new Americans and for Negroes.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society

THE Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society hesitates to speak of "outstanding achievements" in 1921 in view of the fact that our work has been seriously held back by lack of funds. There are, however, some interesting developments which merit attention.

1. We are steadily moving forward in meeting the needs of Negroes in the North. A Christian center in Cleveland is ministering to the needs of a large community in a variety of ways. The Girls' Industrial School, the W. W. G. and C. W. C. are reaching the girls and children, and much "friendly visitation" is done by eight women who have volunteered to serve as friends to those who need them. In Detroit we have the beginnings of a Christian center in that a building is secured and a worker is on the field. It is expected that this work will speedily become a fully developed Christian center for a ministry of helpfulness and love to a Negro community which is one of the largest in the North.

The largest forward movement of the year in this branch of the work of the society is found in Chicago. Since the recent Negro migration from the South to the North, the Baptist Missionary Training School has found itself surrounded by the resulting large Negro community. The work of the training school will be transferred to another part of the city at the beginning of the next school year in September, 1922. Plans are under way whereby the attractive and commodious building now occupied by the school will be taken over jointly by the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, and a body of representative Negro pastors and laymen of our denomination, to be used for a training school for Negro young men and women. There are many and urgent calls for thoroughly trained young men and women for service among their people in churches, in Christian centers and in other lines of Christian and social activities. We believe this to be a great and promising step forward.

2. Great opportunities and many open doors lie before us in 1922, but the acceptance of the opportunities and the entrance into the open doors wait for financial relief and for larger funds. We look for steady progress in 1922, a holding fast and a strengthening of the work now under way, but great gains and new achievements must wait until that glad day when debts are paid and the treasury is reinforced.

Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

The Old Year

THE Golden Jubilee of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society was celebrated by special meetings in ten districts and in the sessions of the Northern Baptist Convention at Des Moines. The Jubilee Fund was oversubscribed and overpaid by more than $100,000. Seven young women came as guests of the society, from Japan, China, Burma, India, Poland and Czecho-Slovakia—visible proof of what the Christian message can do for the women of other lands. Jubilee meetings were held by the Christian Baptist women of Assam, Burma, Bengal-Orissa and South India and special contributions were sent to America for the Jubilee Fund.

The Telugu Baptist Woman's Home Mission Society was organized in South India with forty-two members, representing twenty-three villages and towns. A Telugu woman is president of the society. Baptisms have been reported from many of our schools. Missionaries write as follows: "Rejoice with us—six fine girls were baptized last Sunday. Now all of the senior class are Christians." And again: "All of the nurses in the training school are Christians." The society has twenty-eight more missionaries than a year ago—a long list of 227 devoted women. All of our large schools are overcrowded, the dormitories are too small, and girls of the Orient, seeking a Christian education, have been turned away from our Baptist schools.

The Chinese gentry of Ningpo have expressed a desire to contribute largely to our Baptist work in the church, the hospital and the schools and the graduates of the Sarah Bachelor Girls' School have formed an alumnae society and brought to the first annual meeting $300 gold which they had collected for a new dormitory.

Ma Sein Shin, a Pwo Karen girl, after two years in Judson College, Rangoon, has gone to the Woman's Union Christian College in Madras to take her pre-medical work, preparatory to studying medicine at Vellore. She will be the first Pwo Karen woman physician among her own people and is to be supported by the Pwo Karen Woman's Home Mission Society.

The New Year

At least six of the twelve Jubilee buildings are in process of erection and the plans for the others are being made. The new work in Poland and Czecho-Slovakia has been started, five Christian nurses and Bible teachers are helping the women and children, and orphan boys and girls are soon to find a refuge in a new home just outside Prague. Opportunities for preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ have never been so numerous as at this time, for people of all classes and ages are turning from their non-Christian religions to seek the truth. With the successful conclusion of the year's campaign for raising the balance of the funds required, the Union

Christian Colleges for Women in Japan, China and India will have their first necessary buildings assured and will be in a position to command the respect and confidence of the people of the Orient.

All the urgent needs of the society, including not only operating budget in full but also the most imperative of its buildings and equipment, can be provided if the money is given by Northern Baptists with intelligence and understanding of the great size and importance of this task—of preaching and teaching Jesus Christ to the ends of the world. The outlook is a wonderfully inspiring one—there is almost no limit to the extent to which Baptists can go in the work of evangelizing the world if they give freely of their time, their interest, their money and their prayers.

American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

NO adequate report of the foreign mission work during the year 1921 can be written immediately. Several months must elapse before the annual reports of the missionaries on the most remote fields can reach America. However, some of the more notable achievements may even now be chronicled.

The statistics compiled in 1921 for the year immediately preceding show that exclusive of results on any of the European fields, 10,483 converts were baptized that year by the missionaries and native workers in the several missions of the society. Not often has the number of baptisms been so large. And now comes the report that within the territory of a single station of the Congo Mission about 1,500 converts have recently been added to the church. Rev. William M. Young, of the Burma Mission, who has recently opened work across the line in China, reports 400 baptisms on one tour through this section, and several hundred others awaiting baptism. Many of the schools of the Orient have been centers of evangelical and evangelistic fervor in 1921 as in other years. It is evident that the increased emphasis on the development of training institutions has not weakened the evangelistic passion of the missionary forces.

Within the last two years the general society and the woman's board have appointed nearly 200 new missionaries, and several Chinese, Japanese and Filipino students, after securing the best education offered in American universities and theological seminaries, have returned to their native lands to assume a large measure of responsibility in the evangelization of their own people. Nearly twenty other picked young men from oriental fields and European countries are now studying in American universities and theological seminaries, with the assistance of the Foreign Mission Society, preparing themselves for places of large responsibility in connection with the missionary program.

In 1921 substantial progress has been made in the realization of the ideal of native leadership. In one academy in China four Chinese college graduates have been added to the faculty of the institution. More men are now entering the Christian ministry who have had both college and theological training. Shanghai Baptist College and Seminary reports more men with college education studying for the ministry in that institution than is true of any other school in China. This increased emphasis on native leadership is exceedingly fortunate in view of the rising tide of national consciousness which is found on almost every mission field.

The ideals of political self-determination and the growing resentment in oriental and African countries of anything approaching control by foreign representatives, is accompanied by a desire on the part of the Christian churches for greater autonomy. The nationalistic movement in India and the Ethiopian movement in Africa are presenting problems of peculiar acuteness. Many of the foreign mission problems of today are entirely different from those that were faced twenty-five years ago. The most careful study of these problems is required, and it is fortunate that Secretary Robbins is in India just now, and that Secretary Lerrigo has just completed a visit to the Congo Mission. It is fortunate also that Prof. H. B. Robbins, a member of our board of managers, was able to make an unhurried study of conditions in the Far East. His report is regarded as one of extraordinary value. In Burma Secretary Robbins found 3,200 delegates enrolled at the annual meeting of the Baptist Convention.

With the exception of the opening of two new mission stations in British India, the work of Rev. W. M. Young, already mentioned, and the enlargement of assistance to Baptist groups in Europe, there has been no territorial expansion of the society's work for several years. There is increasing conviction on the part of the missions and the board of managers that an intensive development of the fields already occupied, with a view to training native leaders for the extensive evangelization of their own countries, is a wise policy.

During the year there have been some large gifts made by the Chinese for use in the erection of hospital and school buildings.

The program of relief work in Europe, supported by the society in cooperation with Baptists of the South, Canada and England, has been notably successful under the direction of Rev. J. H. Rushbrooke, Baptist commissioner for Europe. It is evident that the contributions of our people have done much to relieve suffering, not only among the Baptists, but among others as well.

While a comparatively small amount is being expended by the society in assisting European Baptists in the conduct of their work, the esprit de corps and solidarity of Baptists on the continent have been notably increased. Statistics for the year 1921 are not available as yet, but reports which have reached us indicate excellent growth in several countries. The wise leadership of Commissioner Rushbrooke during the last twelve months is largely responsible for the improved conditions.

The response of the denomination to the appeal, "Fill a Ship in Fellowship" resulted very successfully. In a few days Asso. Secy. W. B. Lippard is expected to return from Europe with an account of the distribution of the supplies.

During the last few months of the year the large indebtedness of the society has cast its shadow in many directions and must have affected the morale of the forces on the fields. However, the work has gone forward and the missionaries and the board face the future with confidence.

Southern Baptists in Education

SOUTHERN Baptists have come to have a commanding place in education. They have 119 schools under direct control and ownership. These include academies, junior colleges, senior colleges, theological seminaries and missionary training schools. We give a few outstanding features of the Baptist educational situation in the South.

1. Enlargement.—In the program of the $75,000,000 campaign for benevolences, education was apportioned $20,000,000. The payment of the campaign pledges has enabled the southwide institutions and the institutions in the individual states greatly to enlarge the material equipment and endowments. For the session of 1920-21 the valuation of these schools amounted, for property, to $26,181,401, for endowment $11,323,993, total $37,505,394. This makes the investment in education by Southern Baptists greater than that of any other evangelical denomination in the South. The total enrollment was 31,956. There were 2,417 volunteers for Christian service and 2,466 ministerial students enrolled; this was a large increase over the previous session.

2. Educational solidarity.—The Baptist school men of the South accept now as never before the unity of the entire Southern Baptist educational need and program. The day has passed for unwholesome rivalry among the schools. The sense of solidarity of school interests has come to the front.

3. Appreciation of developing standards.—Southern Baptist educators have the noble ambition to make Baptist schools comparable in grade and efficiency to any other school. They are not willing to put a premium upon inferior work and yet at the same time they accept the fact that conditions in the South demand a flexible educational program that will be progressive in its standardization and sympathetic toward schools that are struggling with problems of equipment and endowment.

4. Recognition of an educational conscience.—Our educators are setting themselves, along with the various educational organizations, to the task of creating a vital and vitalizing conscience on education among Southern Baptists.

5. Standardizing Christian ideals.—Southern Baptists have no inherent opposition to education under state control, but they believe that Christian ideals of character should enter into the school life in order that the eventuating product may be consonant with Baptist ideals. This is not to present a curriculum or college spirit inferior in quality to those presented by state institutions. It rather means a liberal education plus the Christian impact, impulse and inspiration.

6. Standardization.—At the annual mid-winter conference of the Southern Baptist Education Association in December, a great forward step was taken. A committee was appointed to outline a system of standardization for Southern Baptist schools, suggesting a plan by which these schools should receive proper funds to give them adequate material equipment and endowment to enable them to meet standardizing requirements. This means that Southern Baptists will address themselves definitely and loyally to the task of making their institutions competent to do work equal in grade to that offered by other institutions.

7. The Education Board.—The Education Board of the Southern Baptist Convention is set to the purpose of creating an educational conscience that shall function in a way commensurate with the needs and opportunities of the South. It cooperates with the state boards of education and missions in bringing Christian education to the commanding attention of Southern Baptists.

Foreign Mission Board, Southern Baptist Convention

Outstanding Achievements of the Past Year

THIS board has endeavored to advance the work on all its fields in concert and maintain a just balance of attention to the needs of each mission. We have sought to keep this ideal before us even during the past year when the new territory assigned by the London Conference has been so alluring and has presented such great opportunities and needs; I think, therefore, that among the achievements of the year we may record this: That with increased resources we have reinforced the older mission stations, furnishing large numbers of new missionaries and adding substantially to the equipment of our schools, hospitals and publishing houses, while contributing $278,721.34 to relief in Europe and China, besides a large quantity of clothing sent to Europe. As a natural result following such response to the needs on the fields, there is evident a great heartening of the missionaries, a quickening of spiritual life and benevolent impulse among the native Christians, and a new record in soul-winning and additions to our churches.

The Outlook for 1922

If we think of the home base, the prospect is not as bright as we could wish. The cotton belt of the South has suffered severely from the boll-weevil and the distressed cotton market. As we approach the new year there seems to be a brightening of prospects. Most of the state conventions picked up in their collections at the end of their convention periods and the conventions closed with a fine spirit among our people which promises renewed effort to carry our $75,000,000 campaign to successful issue before the five-year period closes. Without exception the work of this board in every one of the eighteen nations included in the field of our activities glows with promise. An unusual evangelistic spirit characterizes missionaries and native workers, and the people everywhere seem ready to hear the gospel and multitudes are receiving it with joy.

Another prospect should be mentioned—never in the seventy-five years' history of this board have we catalogued so many volunteers for mission service as we are registering at this time. Many of these are in college grades and some of them are still in high school, but the large number of those who tell us that God has called them to foreign mission service is an inspirational fact in our denominational life. We have sent more men and women by far to the foreign fields during the past two years than in any similar period in the history of the board, and the prospect is that we shall shortly have applicants which for number and quality will exceed anything we have known in the history of this work. Most of these volunteers have adopted foreign missions as the ideal for their service, while they are yet young enough to make thorough preparation for the work.

The Danish Baptist General Conference

OUR bi-annual general conference in Chicago, Sept. 14-18, was one of the best we have had, and was marked by unity, spirituality and desire for progress, much emphasis being laid on the need of personal evangelism. The general workers gave a very favorable report. $2,400 was raised to carry on the work for the next two years. The past year has been marked with spiritual blessings to the churches. In Iowa especially a large number have been added by baptism, far exceeding many previous years, and thrice as many as the year before.

There is a need for more ministers, some churches not being supplied, but our seminary at Des Moines reports an increased number of students for the ministry this year. We have a corps of good, earnest, general workers in the field, and hope soon to secure an additional worker for young people's and Sunday school work. In general there seems to be a "sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees," and we are looking, praying and hoping for a spiritual harvest.

Roumanian Baptist Association of America

ROUMANIAN Baptist Association of America held its annual meeting Sept. 2-6, 1921 at First Roumanian Baptist Church, Akron, Ohio. Encouraging reports concerning the Lord's work were presented from the churches and missions. Although the burden has been great, sixty-six have been added by baptism and seventy-eight by letter during the year. Total membership in our association is 570. $15,255 has been raised for the current expenses of local churches and mission work.

We have eight students doing a wonderful work. Four are at International Seminary, East Orange, N. J., three at Denison University, Granville, Ohio; one at Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky.; seven of our students are preparing for the ministry. Our association is helping them as much as it can and encouraging them in their work. Two of our students were graduated last year from Baptist Seminary, Louisville, Ky.—J. R. Socach sent to Roumania by the Southern Baptist Convention to help the Lord's work there, and Vasile Prodian, our representative at International Baptist Seminary, East Orange, N. J., helping our Roumanian students there.

Our conference is thankful to the American Baptist Home Mission Society for the help given to our churches for carrying the gospel. Especially it is thankful to Dr. Charles A. Brooks for his love toward our Roumanian people. The conference recommended the International Baptist Seminary, East Orange, N. J., to our brethren who desire to prepare themselves for gospel work.

We regret the passing from this life of our beloved brother, Dr. Charles Justus Ross, of Granville, Ohio, who has been a great friend of the Roumanian people and who did much good for our people in this country.

In 1922 our association will raise $3,000 for mission work in this country. Out of this fund will be helped our small missions without pastors; also the educational work for our students.

Akron, Ohio.

German Baptists in North America

AFTER a history of more than seventy-five years as a foreign-speaking group in America the German Baptists can still report numerical progress. We have a membership of more than 32,000 in the United States and Canada. In the very nature of things an increasing number of our churches have become bi-lingual. In the period of transition our German-speaking churches are fulfilling an especial mission.

At our triennial conference in 1919 we resolved to contribute $1,000,000 for our missionary, educational and benevolent work. On Dec. 31, 1921, there had passed through our treasuries about $815,000, leaving $185,000 to be contributed before July 31, 1922. Notwithstanding the present business depression, we are very hopeful of reaching the goal.

In the last fall we have had a large class of nineteen entering the preparatory department of our seminary at Rochester, N. Y. We have a total enrollment there of sixty-five students. Rochester is not a co-educational institution, but we have about twelve young women preparing as missionaries and deaconesses. Our deaconess home in Chicago, Ill., provides these students a dormitory while preparing at the Northern Baptist Seminary and at a hospital in one of the suburbs of Chicago.

We are glad to report that we have surpassed all of our previous efforts in our own missionary administration. We have two general evangelists under appointment who serve all of our churches under the direction of our general missionary committee. We have also taken the forward step of appointing Rev. A. P. Mihm and Rev. F. A. Bloedow as Sunday school and young people's secretaries. The former gives his time exclusively to our churches in the United States, while the latter is responsible for our Canadian field. Our missionary society is cooperating in the appointment and the support of eight women missionaries who labor in our churches. For our seventy home mission workers we have a budget of about $75,000 a year. In addition to continuing our cooperation with the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society in our foreign work, we have assumed an independent responsibility for a growing foreign work. In the Far East Republic, formerly Siberia, we are supporting eight missionaries; in Bulgaria, ten; in Roumania, three; in Hungary, one; in Switzerland, six; in Poland, thirty-one; in Germany, eight missionary colporters; in Brazil, two, and another under appointment. We have recently made appropriations of considerable sums for chapel buildings in these fields.

Although German immigration had practically ceased years ago, our mission is not yet finished. We are adapting ourselves to local conditions, and using both languages in many of our churches. Our people believe in the validity and the reality of the mission of our organization; and they are proving their faith by their works. Since 1919 our contributions have been trebled as compared with the same period before that date. For the sake of efficiency we must maintain our independent organization, while in spirit and faith and life we are an integral part of the great body of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Hungarian Baptist Union

WE have passed through a critical year. The financial condition of our country affected most of our churches. Some of our churches had 70 per cent of the members out of work; in one only five out of eighty-six members were working; in another some of the members were supported by the church to keep them alive. The income fell far below the needs of the churches and they maintained their existence by making loans. Owing to these conditions our churches could not do a progressive work, but still we have many occasions to thank God for his special spiritual blessings. We had a number of baptisms and a spiritual awakening is already manifest everywhere among our churches. We made a progressive step toward educating our Sunday-school teachers under the splendid leadership of Dr. Sly and Rev. Andrew Toth, one of our missionary pastors. This year the union of our women's circles supported entirely a missionary in Hungary and in Slovakia among the Hungarians. This organization of our Magyar Baptist women has a splendid program for benevolence and missionary enterprise for the war-torn Hungarian Baptist mission.

For the future we are preparing as never before to start an evangelistic campaign among the Magyars in this country. We strive to establish new missions and Sunday schools, everywhere around our present churches. Which agency should have the most influence on the foreigners, especially the Magyars here in this country? Shall we let them be a prey of the Bolshevik agitators? Would it be the right attitude for us to sit down and say: "We are not well situated financially; we have to leave the Magyars under the influence of infidelity and disturbing elements?" It is true that we have churches among the Magyars: Roman Catholic, Greek Catholic, Lutheran, Reformed, Presbyterian and Episcopalian, but most of these are hardly able to evangelize their own members. We are ready to do evangelistic work among the Magyars. We have missionary pastors who are not sitting in their offices, but are to be found among the people. We have a conviction that a church has no right for existence unless it is doing evangelistic work. Therefore, our church members are ready to go, after the hard toil of the day, to visit their fellow-men and read the Bible to them.

We are well organized among ourselves; we are well supervised by your great societies; we are inspired by God. The only other thing we need, in order to go ahead and work out our plans, is money. We need money to rent halls for presenting the gospel to our countrymen, to open new Sunday schools for the Magyar children and teach to them the Bible. We need funds to pay the carfares for our volunteer workers and to supply them with our Magyar literature. Without the financial help we are handicapped. The foreigners will be Americanized gradually. If we Baptists can get hold of them it will be a gain to our denomination. If we do not receive the needed support, it will be a loss for our denomination for the future. Please help us through the city, state and national societies.

East Orange, N. J. STEPHEN OBOSZ.

Norwegian Baptist Conference

OF outstanding achievements in the past year we would mention the appointment of a general missionary and evangelist for Western Canada in connection with our conference and the Baptist union. This is something we have prayed and labored for for years. We are thankful to God for this and look upon it as an answer to prayers and earnest effort. God has richly blessed the work of the brother appointed. In nearly every place he has visited some have been saved. This opens to us a wide and ripe field for great service. It will strengthen our new and weak churches and give us new ones without a doubt.

We have dedicated our new church building at Minneapolis, Minn., virtually without debt. This is now our finest church home in the conference, well located and equipped, in a city centrally located for our work and a point of great importance. Rev. O. Breiding became pastor nearly a year ago. The Sunday school has grown, the church has increased, with additions right along. Best of all, a revival spirit prevails and people are asking for prayers in the regular services on Sundays and during the week.

We have had one of the greatest revivals we have ever had in one of our country churches. Over sixty were added by baptism in less than a month. The revival came spontaneously when the church was without a pastor. One of our students was there for the summer and had just started. Rev. Breiding was called in to help and God used him. It was harvest time after many years of sowing. Both these churches are in the New World Movement. We rejoice to say all our churches are in line on this. We have had a similar experience with a little church in Canada in that a revival has come spontaneously when we had no regular work and no pastor. They write me it is going on again this winter. A revival is coming in our churches, and I believe we are going to see the best time we have ever had.

As to the future, we are getting in shape for harder work than ever before. With our churches in the New World Movement, we are never going back to the old method or old amount of giving. God forbid! We are not, however, going to trust in money for success—it is only a means to an end—but in Almighty God, Jesus his son, and the Holy Spirit. We are going to work harder than ever before. We need more students for the ministry and we are going to get them because we need them. God is back of it. He has helped marvelously in the past, and he is going to do it in the future. This is sent with full assurance as to the future, and with a deep feeling of gratitude for all his kindness in the past.

Mexico

Outstanding Events of the Past Year

A BETTER understanding and, accordingly, a closer and more cordial cooperation between Mexican and American workers on the field. This means much to the future of the work. 2. Enlargement of the work among the native Indian tribes of the country. Two natives were already at work among their own tribes and a third began January 1. 3. The development of the principle of self-support. 4. The organization of a church of seventeen members in Guadalupe Hidalgo, the very heart of Catholic superstition in Mexico. If there were "saints in Caesar's household," why may there not be saints—real gospel saints—within a stone's throw of the spot on which the virgin appeared (?) to the simple Indian, Juan Diego, and imprinted her image on his blanket?

The Outlook for 1922

It was never better. Rome's hold on the masses was never weaker. They are tired of papal domination, of Catholic miracles, ancient and modern, and are feeling their way to better and higher things.

Our Chief Needs

1. Four-day schools, running through the sixth grade, for Mexico City, San Luis Potosi, Aguascalientes and Tampico; and others running through the fourth grade in half a dozen smaller towns. (Let our noble Woman's Society take notice!) 2. A high-grade woman's college in Mexico City, in which Northern and Southern Baptists are to cooperate and which should by all means be opened by February, 1923. 3. A well-equipped, wide-awake man of some experience in the ministry to open English work among the 6,000 Americans in and around Tampico. The forces of evil are in fine fettle and with high hand are waging wonderful warfare among our countrymen of this rich oil center. Is there no healing hand to help? 4. A young man of burning missionary zeal, ready to lay his life on the altar of service for Mexico's redemption, to settle in San Luis Potosi, or some other central point, and take up at once the study of the language and the problems incident to the evangelization of Mexico's millions.

To you, young brother, just graduating from the seminary; to you, young pastor, with a year or more of experience in the ministry; to you, strong of body and intellect and of soul, I send this appeal! What an opportunity awaits you! Will you come?

The Republic of Cuba

BAPTISTS are the leaders in evangelical work in eastern Cuba. It is now a little over twenty years since we first entered the field and in that short period we have grown from nothing to a present church membership of over 2,000, a Sunday-school enrollment of 3,000 and more than 1,200 pupils in our day and boarding schools.

In April, 1920, our native churches organized a Cuban Home Mission Society. The object was to undertake the support of a part of the field and in general to encourage the church to look forward to the day when it would be completely self-supporting. A budget of $2,000 was set as a goal for the first year. At our general convention held in April, 1921, the society reported that it had met all obligations and recommended a budget of $5,000 for the year 1921-22. At the time of writing, December, 1921, all obligations for the current month have been met. The effort made has reacted beneficially on the churches. In helping others they have helped themselves, and two of our congregations have entered the list of self-supporting churches. Others are almost within sight of the goal and all of the churches are raising larger amounts toward self-support than ever before. Present financial conditions have greatly reduced the incomes of all of our church members, but their faith is strong and they will not turn back.

Our schools have always occupied a prominent place in our mission work. During the past year practically all of them were full to overflowing and we were constantly under the necessity of turning pupils away. This was especially true in the case of our central boarding school at Cristo. God has given us a great opportunity in our school work, but our equipment is altogether inadequate. We can double the work if you will only make it possible.

Our churches and schools have a hard year ahead of them. Cuba is in the midst of the greatest financial crisis ever known here. Men who yesterday thought they would soon be millionaires are having a hard struggle to keep the wolf from the door. In some of our churches every contributing member is out of work. The new sugar harvest which is just beginning will bring some relief, but the wages given at present will not provide more than daily bread. Pastors, churches and schools are all bound to suffer before the year is over. The marvel of it all is that our churches are fuller than ever and conversions and baptisms are frequent. Last year the people were in danger of forgetting God in the midst of their great prosperity. Today they are hearing his voice anew, "Come take up thy cross and follow me."

Cuba has long been noted as the one field in Latin America where we, as Baptists, were placing a proper emphasis on educational work. Our most pressing needs for the coming year lie in the direction of a large extension of this most hopeful work. We need better buildings and more complete equipment all along the line. These may have to wait for better times but more consecrated men and women we must have. We expect to reopen our normal work just as soon as we can find the proper person to take charge of it. The Bible work in general and the theological work in particular should be strengthened. We need two men—college and seminary graduates for this work.

We are near at hand—just four days from New York or two from Florida. Any one interested in missions will find a visit to eastern Cuba well worth while.

Cristo, Cuba. ROBERT ROUTLEDGE.

El Salvador

AFTER many attempts at a political union of the five republics of Central America, three of these, Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador, formed a Central American republic in September, 1921. The two republics of Costa Rica and Nicaragua still hold aloof from this union. I mention this because it has been the occasion of a struggle with regard to the religious status. The Roman Catholic clergy has tried its utmost to do away with religious liberty and unite the state and church in the new republic. This sent the evangelical churches to earnest prayer and activity for the upholding of what we have enjoyed under the old regime, and the clergy has received an ignominious defeat. A new temple, school room and pastor's residence has been erected in San Salvador at a cost of $22,500. This gives us one of the best equipments in Central America. It was inaugurated Dec. 11, and opens a new epoch for our work in this capital.

It is the opinion of a number of workers who know Central America that the outlook in El Salvador is as bright as in any part of the isthmus. The people are hungering for the gospel and the country is wide open to us as in few places. The native churches are also in a good attitude for doing their part in the evangelization of their countrymen. Their confidence may be held and their full co-operation realized by wise leaders of the evangelical type.

Our chief needs are men with the old gospel who are willing to let go luxury and to work and suffer for the gospel; a training school for our native brethren where they may get a better knowledge of the word of God and be mentally and spiritually equipped for the work of pastoring and leadership; schools and teachers.

San Salvador.

The Maritime Provinces

IT can hardly be said that in our religious life of the year gone there has been any peculiarly outstanding event. The year has, in most respects, been a good average year. In the raising of funds for home and foreign missionary endeavor the goal set in the five-year program has been exceeded. In the number of students sought for our schools of higher learning we have gone beyond what was aimed at. On the other hand, the ingatherings into the churches have fallen below expectations. The $1,000,000 campaign for Acadia University has been somewhat held up by the existing financial circumstances. Just at present a special effort is in progress for a large increase of the subscription list of our denominational organ, "The Maritime Baptist." It is increasingly felt that in a good religious paper pastors have one of the strongest of all allies.

The year 1922 seems full of promise. Within it we expect to see rising on the Acadia Hill at Wolfville, a fine administrative building that will put us in a better situation than we occupied before the destructive fire of a year ago. And not far off, too, we see a new edifice taking the place of the present Ladies' Seminary. Meanwhile our schools are pushing ahead with customary vigor, showing a large attendance and zeal in the regular work.

Victoria

IN a population numbering about 1,500,000 the Baptists of Victoria, Australia, number roughly 7,600, a proportion of one in every 188 persons.

The year 1920-21 has shown a general improvement both in the work actually done and in the spirit of enterprise for the future.

Financial returns have increased as have the numbers of baptisms and conversions. For years past a decrease in church membership and Sabbath school scholars has been reported, but the tide has turned.

For all purposes 16,323 pounds sterling have been raised during the year, an increase of virtually 25 per cent and in actual cash amounting to nearly 4,000 pounds sterling.

The various states of the commonwealth have federated for the management and extension of the foreign field in Eastern Bengal, India. Every year gives added testimony to the wisdom and effectiveness of this step.

Amongst the home mission and church extension enterprises a work of consolidation and decided advance has gone on. Numbers of conversions have been scheduled and the income has increased by over one thousand pounds sterling. Reports to hand state that in one station where there have been practically no conversions for years, a complete change has come.

The foundation and part of the superstructures of three new schemes have been commenced:

1. The Baptist Boys' College or Academy. The denomination in the state has awakened to the fact that the system of secular education by the government is an unsatisfactory base upon which to build a hope of future leaders for our church enterprises. We are convinced that no true education can be assured when the culture of the religious side of our youthful life is overlooked in our day schools. Hence a scheme has been agreed to raise £20,000 to found a school for advanced education. Already some thousands of pounds are to hand and it is anticipated that next year will register a commencement.

2. The Union has become responsible for an important piece of Christian social service in one of the poorest quarters of our capital city, Melbourne. The Bourverie St. Kindergarten has been at work there for a number of years. It is proposed to extend the work by expenditure of several thousands and already a considerable proportion of the necessary amount is in hand and next year will see its completion.

3. The ministerial settlement scheme. This covers as its main objects the problems arising from changes in pastorates and will arrange for the grouping of churches in districts or circuits so that the stronger may support the weaker. It aims at securing a living salary with allowances for all ministers, an insurance scheme and support for the widows of ministers. A system for superannuation of aged ministers will be part of the scheme and likewise ways and means to finance churches newly opened.

When faced with the question of the greatest need of the hour, it may be truthfully stated that it is not primarily financial; for practically every demand upon our members' generosity has been met.

One need is an awakening to that sense of responsibility which does not end with a full offering plate; but which lies deep down in a spiritual stewardship and a sense of the challenge of Christ to the individual to give himself to the source of the sin-stricken world. Surely it is easier to pay than to plead.

Another need is for the acquisition to the church ranks of men who will combine earnestness and devotion to God with a highly trained and educated mind. Such men we need for service both at home and abroad.

In fact what the church of God, placed as we are amongst the southern seas, is looking for is God's Spirit, a passion for men's souls amongst our membership, and the time when history will be repeated and we may again say they added to the church daily such as were being saved.

Queensland

THE year ending June 30 has been one of aggression and advance. A handful of 5,000 Baptists in a population of nearly one million, and in a state so extensive that at the rate of seeing 200 square miles per day for ten years you would cover it, seems but a drop in a bucket.

Our Achievements

We have nevertheless increased our membership by 100 and built four new churches. We have thirty-two ministers in full status, twelve pastors in training and eighteen other students preparing. Yet the association is overwhelmed with new opportunities it is unable to serve. We not only sustained our work, but contributed £500 to our home missions and £1,200 to our foreign work. Our superlative work (plus the rest) during the past year was the sustaining of a state evangelist. In Rev. T. McColl we have a man splendidly fitted for his task. He is a live soul winner, a straight gospel preacher, genial and gracious, but also a man who seldom fails to grip both the town folk and the country people. During the year he conducted sixteen missions. His large marquee sadly suffered from wind and rain and the work was at times disappointing, but in every place visited living records testify of the effective work done. He has also broken new ground for permanent work. Many hundreds of "decision" cards were signed and returned and the converts are being specially cared for.

Our Outlook

The new year faces us with great opportunities and glorious tasks. Sixteen missions are being planned and carried out. Three new home mission centers are being opened, our college work looms ahead with new possibilities, our foreign work demands a new missionary, whilst the united churches anticipate a great membership rally.

Our Needs

(a) We seek your cooperation in prayer for sinners and saints alike, that the outstretched hands of the one may be grasped by the needy hands of the other and both find their place at the feet of our glorious Lord.

(b) We need money to support a college principal. We have the students and we have the principal, backed by a fine body of voluntary helpers, but we are unable to release the principal from his church work to devote his strength to the college. Consequently the men are inadequately trained and the principal overworked. A principal's chair would be a grand investment. Will some American do it?

(c) Two large unoccupied (by us) cities by no means overchurched, are asking for a Baptist church and a minister. To commence work in either place without a good building and a first-class minister would be to attempt a third rate cause, dependent on the center here for several years. The Baptist witness is called for and granted a good start our evangelistic fervor would soon win its way. We believe in evangelistic aggression as the scriptural method of growth and quickening.

Apart from these two big city opportunities we have at least six country townships appealing for churches and ministers. We have the men in training, but not the finances. Today is our time of opportunity. The Romanists and Russelites are flooding the country, the one with churches and convents and the other with false teaching and literature. We must advance or perish—therefore we have decided to advance. If any American Baptist can help us with the finances we can go ahead as never before.

In Asia and Africa, Mighty and Restless

Japan

DURING 1919-20 the income of the Japanese churches doubled. The year 1921 has been a year of severe business depression, yet the new standard appears to have been maintained. Naniwa Church in Osaka has this year attained financial independence and others are not far behind.

The society has been faithful to Japan in building. Critical needs have been recognized and some have been adequately met. The work for Waseda University is now splendidly housed in Scott Hall. The Mabie School, though only two sections are completed, attracts attention throughout Japan.

The years of pleading for church buildings are bearing fruit. The New World Movement provided funds for one new structure in Tokyo and another to replace the disgraceful hut at Shiogama. The first church building in the Inland Sea has been completed, the result of a special gift. Himeji church has been enlarged, the members bearing half the expense.

We cannot report a great increase in baptisms such as gladdens the American church. But with our new equipment and more which we expect from the New World Movement, we may soon report substantial spiritual progress. The number of our seminary students is increasing. The girls' schools plead for new quarters, promptly overflow them and call for more. Their fruits amply justify the investment of life and money.

Long indifferent to Christianity, Japan is now awakening spiritually. An unprecedented series of scandals in public life has shocked the public into consciousness of moral weakness. A vigorous moral and spiritual message meets a thoughtful response. Had we enough spiritually-powerful Japanese leaders the Kingdom of heaven would be vastly extended. If we could only bring our missionary force back to former numbers, and adequately equip each missionary! A year or two ago we were down to half our old-time numbers. Enough new missionaries have since come to fill us with hope, for in a few years they can bear some of the burdens of the older men. If these young people receive proper equipment we can do our share to direct the spiritual awakening toward Christianity.

Japan's economic revolution means that it costs more to work, more to live than in the United States. The increases in Japan mission appropriations barely keep the old wheels turning. Efficient maintenance of our work will test the power of the home church to "carry on."

The Mabie Memorial School is a tremendous enterprise. We have embarked and cannot turn back. Each year the school admits a new class, and this will continue till the five years' course is filled. We must provide the buildings or be swamped. There are now three classes. A fourth enters in April. A year later a fifth will complete the student body. We dare not fall down on the building program: we have committed ourselves before the empire.

The Mito field is not poorly equipped: it is not equipped at all. The mission unanimously agree that the outstanding need of our field work is the new church building at Mito. We look to the New World Movement to consolidate the labor of years in a fitting structure.

Equal in importance are new mission residences. The housing of missionaries seriously hampers their work and endangers their welfare. We have a few suitable residences, but so few! We repeat our former plea for houses in Morioka, Yokohama, and Himeji. These are only our sorest points, not all our needs!

In 1922 we ask your support particularly for these three things—the continuation of building at Mabie Memorial, the Mito church and the three most urgent residences.

Yokohama.

East China

READERS of home newspapers will find it difficult to appreciate the fact that, owing to the size and loose-jointedness of the country, we in the lower Yangtse valley have remained relatively unaffected by the famine and wars, political confusion, and economic chaos which have been rife through China.

Steady progress has been registered in all the work of the East China mission. A deeper appreciation of our fundamental evangelistic problem prevails; baptisms double the number reported a few years ago; large ingatherings in our schools, seventy-five at Shanghai College alone; our great city problem has been seriously attacked for the first time in the vigorous opening of community social work at Hangchow and Ningpo.

A new type of self-reliant leadership, both preachers and laymen is emerging; and the field is opening for co-operation with non-Christian Chinese. At Dinghai, the metropolis of the Chusan Archipelago three-fourths of a $100,000 plant and endowment for schools just opening is furnished by wealthy citizens.

All our schools are full. The growth of Shanghai College, union with Southern Baptists, has been notably rapid. Property expansion of the immediate past and future involves over $200,000. With 450 pupils, it stands among Christian schools in China second in number of college students, first in college-grade students for the ministry.

We face 1922 with a spirit of larger harmony and stronger hope. Our trained workers are increasing in number and efficiency. We expect several back from American study this year. Already second among missions in China as to college-trained ministers, we expect to add four this year from our graduate theological school.

The Intermission Conference to effect closer cooperation between our Northern Baptist missions in China; the National Christian Conference—the first expression of the new native Christian consciousness; the visit of the educational commission headed by Dr. Burton with the prospect of readjustment leading to real cooperation of the Christian colleges in this region—all these events of the near future are pregnant with large meaning for our work.

Needs—1. A leveling up of our evangelistic work to the new standards of our educational system, especially more trained preachers and adequate chapels, equipment and support.

2. Buildings to house our growing academies.

3. A deeper consciousness of the vital truths of evangelical Christianity and a more solid grounding of our essential evangelistic purpose, on the part of the missionaries and more especially by the Chinese church.

PERCIVAL R. BAKEMAN.

South China

THE erection of the Institutional Church building at Swatow was, in last year's survey, called the "outstanding advance" in this field during the year. Getting the institution under way with its kindergarten, girls' and boys' schools, business course, community doctors, every-night religious services and lectures is the most striking achievement of 1921.

Raising funds from Chinese for schools and hospitals is not so much an achievement in itself as a revelation of how far we have already succeeded in winning the hearts of the people. At Chaoyang $10,000 has been subscribed for school and hospital enlargement. Ungkung has given $1000 for another ward in the hospital. Swatow Academy has secured subscriptions amounting to $30,000 for a new building. These gifts are almost entirely from non-Christians.

From what has been said, one would naturally infer that the outlook for 1922 is unusually promising. Every boarding school is now crowded to its utmost capacity and 1922 will see many applicants turned away. In out-station primary schools the number of pupils has almost doubled in two years, and we may reasonably expect this increase to be maintained if we are able to meet the demand for teachers. Already non-Christian schools are asking for Christian teachers, and their number is bound to increase.

The educational success is in this instance the gauge of the evangelistic opportunity. The sentiment that sends a boy to a Christian school comes from open-mindedness toward the Christian religion.

The chief need in the South China Mission is reinforcement for our evangelistic work. What is wanted is not evangelists to stand on the street corner or in the market place and harangue the crowds, but men with wisdom and tact to take advantage of the present educational tide toward the church to bring men into the Kingdom. They should know how to do this and give inspiration and direction to the scores of teachers and preachers serving the churches. Our mission has 151 outstations and not a single missionary giving his entire time to their superintendence and training. Seven missionaries are giving scraps of time to it, but the crying need is for men, three of them at least, to give themselves entirely to this ministry. These men are needed more than money or equipment. The institutions these men would found and foster are God's own institutions, the church and the Kingdom. The harvest for which others have waited is now going to waste while we call in vain for laborers. God's call is unto you, O men, "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?"

The Philippines

I. Achievements of past year:

1. Increasing friendly attitude.
2. Intelligent participation in financial support.
3. Extension of work on initiative of native churches.
4. Two trained Filipinos from the States, more in training.
5. Strengthening of Sunday-school work.

II. Outlook for the coming year:

1. Splendid opportunities among students.
2. Development of C. E. work.
3. Bible study followed by ingathering.
4. A developing consciousness of responsibility.

III. The most imperative needs:

1. A real spiritual awakening.
2. Trained workers.
3. Equipment.

Invitations to preach in Catholic villages, applications for us to perform weddings where both parties are Catholics, and the institution of private schools where once we were called devils are fine signs. Undertaking long journeys on train, by auto and on foot at their own expense, or else being financed by some church, developing an organization whose main purpose is to preach the gospel to nearby villages and aid weak churches and build strong permanent chapels, and the attempt to pay regularly a constantly increasing portion of their pastor's salary are most hopeful, especially when not urged by the missionary. Individual initiative has never made such an advance in the history of the mission as during the last year.

Two well-trained young Filipinos have just come to us from the States, one a teacher, the other a preacher. Then there are two more in the States and three have been sent to school in Manila. How encouraging this is to some of us who have almost felt at times that this day would never come!

The possibilities of C. E. work and Bible study among the young people in English is almost boundless. The campaign now that is on for special classes and the sending of delegates to the annual convention of this section and the student conference in Baguio make our hearts rejoice, even if only half the plans are realized. Never were so many in whom lies the hope of the future interested.

If out of it all there may result a deeper appreciation of the fundamental virtues of Christianity, a real genuine spiritual enthusiasm that will bring us all into a closer fellowship with the Master, then we shall realize our hopes for more trained Filipino young men and women whose vision will lift them above the worldly ends that bulk so large just now. Then too we are praying that this may extend to you folks at home for we cannot get along effectively without the following equipment:

A boys' dormitory, chapel, residence and Ford for Bacolod; a boys' dormitory, nurses' home and residence for Capiz; a dormitory, a classroom building, a kitchen and dining hall and residence for the Jaro Industrial School and a chapel for the church in Jaro. Write the Board for a complete list for the entire mission.

Iloilo.

A. E. BIGELOW.

Assam

THE year 1921 has been one of faithful activity on the Assam field. The gaining of six new families and five single ladies, as well as the return of former missionaries from furlough has given us great cause for encouragement.

We have been able at last to fully man the staff of the Jorhat schools, thus putting the departments in the way of becoming the great factor that we expect them to be in our work. Much-needed buildings on the Jorhat campus are nearing completion.

In Manipur State a mass movement has taken place among the Tangkhul Nagas and entire villages are coming over to Christianity. These people have been rather slow to come, but having made up their minds they are losing no time. They have in them the making of fine Christians. We expect them to be a worthy addition to our Baptist constituency. We regret that very little literature is available for them.

Our medical work is making rapid strides. We have secured land in Jorhat for a large general hospital. The money necessary for the erection of the hospital buildings is in view. We are anxiously hoping that the donor will not fail us. Money is available for the purchase of land and the erection of a large woman's hospital in Gauhati. Both of these hospitals will be great assets to the advancement of the Kingdom. They are wonderfully analogous, these tasks of the missionary: studying, treating and healing such loathsome diseases as are found only in the East, while at the same time he is studying, treating and healing the soul disease, as old as the world itself and not peculiar to eastern countries, but through neglect irritated and intensified until it seems at times beyond healing.

Our plan for hostel work among the students of Cotton College, the government college in Gauhati, has taken definite shape with the opening of the new hostel. This is a splendid building on the mission compound, with every convenience for the accommodation of students. Nineteen young men live here and are under the supervision of the missionary.

Our building operations are going forward as rapidly as the leisurely East with some American push behind it will allow. We have several excellent new buildings to our credit.

Our chief needs? It is difficult to state them in the order of their urgency. First, I would say, we need more men and women with the tender loving heart of the Master, with the longing and the power to win souls for him. Soul specialists, we need. Second: we need a substantial sum of money set apart for the preparation and circulation of good Christian literature among our people both in the hills and the plains. Third: we need educated leaders from our Indian community. Men and women of strong Christian character who are also educationally qualified to be leaders.

Gauhati.

Bengal-Orissa

1. Outstanding Achievements.—None. How could there be with but a handful of missionaries (nine families and six single ladies) scattered over an area as large as the whole state of New Jersey and much less accessible? Nevertheless we note: a movement toward Christianity among teachers and well-to-do workers in two of our centers; the sale of thousands of gospels and other Christian literature; the undertaking of our churches to raise 1 per cent of evangelistic expenses; the maintenance of nearly normal attendance at our schools in spite of the campaign of non-cooperation which wrecked many; etc., etc.

2. Outlook for 1922.—In some respects brighter, in some darker. Some of our strongest men are seeing that "Faith without works is dead" and are earnestly preaching and practicing accordingly; a committee appointed to lead a forward movement recommends a thorough campaign to Christianize our "Christians," thus showing a recognition of disagreeable facts and a determination to set our own house in order; and finally, a spirit of consecration is beginning to manifest itself among our laymen. On the other hand, we face 1922 with a decreased staff; we expect hostility from non-cooperators, some of whom are against everything and everybody foreign; and, finally, few suitable young men are offering themselves for the ministry.

3. Chief Needs (in order).—Men—but I only dare to mention them first because of their greater opportunities in this land of despised womanhood; men looking for a big job, but not so big that towns of 50,000 and rural parishes of half a million make no appeal to them; men of average ability also, for there is plenty that they can do (the writer knew a young man who waited long before offering himself because all the appeals he heard were for "big" men); and in the light of recent experiences it seems wise to recommend married men (recently two single men left us, one to go to another mission where, we hear, he gets a wife, the other to America, but we don't know why); and, finally, many men—this mission is responsible for 4,000,000 souls.

Women—unmarried women, for only they have the time to do the work which only women can do here; many women—for the reasons given above.

Money—but get the men and women first and—soon!

Balasure.

South India

1. There is no marked outstanding achievement in the Telugu mission for the year 1921. There has been much faithful work done by the depleted missionary staff and by all ranks of our Indian co-laborers. The aftermath of the great war is still with us and political disturbances and much anti-foreign propaganda have acted as a drag on some forms of work. Nevertheless there have been a goodly number of baptisms and something like a revival on the old Nellore field, where in one part a company of thirty-six persons made their confession and received immersion. Rev. Wheeler Boggess, evangelist-at-large, reports a good reception for himself and his message over the entire mission. The famine, which clung to the Deccan for the past three years, has been broken by abundant rains. The cooperative effort in theological education by the Canadian mission and ourselves at Ramapatnam continues happily; and the high school and hospital work of the mission on the whole keeps up to standard, the Nellore hospital has recently added five new wards to its buildings.

2. The outlook for 1922 is much of the same hue as the paragraph above. The skies are not all clear; the clouds are not all black and forbidding; neither are they resplendent with red and gold. We are facing momentous changes in the thought, life and political status of the people; and the times seem to summon us to a review of all our methods and plans, and perhaps to the adoption of new methods more suited to the new day and its needs. But we feel neither helpless nor hopeless. Our strength is in God.

3. Our chief needs are (a) a mighty outpouring of the Spirit of God upon us and upon the people; (b) a fresh empowering in evangelism and Christian service; (c) a great reinforcement of missionaries. For years we have been undermanned and underequipped. In consequence our vitality has been sapped and our efficiency weakened. We need a fresh infusion of new, strong, red-blooded and eager young missionaries who shall help us to press forward all along the line. Will they be forthcoming from our Baptist hosts in America?

A Letter from Burma

The Noncooperators are not getting along as well as they had hoped, so must think of something new. So now they are preaching against wearing European made clothes. And those who now wear them are told to burn the filthy rags. Some suggest that they be given to the poor. But where has charity a place when patriotism is concerned? So every now and then at a gathering coats, neckties, collars and others are enthusiastically torn off, piled in the center and after a few tins of American kerosene are poured on are joyfully sent up in smoke. The papers do not state how the self-sacrificing patriots get home. As a matter of fact, the Noncooperation movement is going where everyone predicted it would, into violence and a regular row is on in South India now and the government is planning action. It looks as if Ghandi and some others will have to face a court.

In the meantime the new national college has opened in Rangoon. The ceremonies were held on Sunday, which is a good sign at any rate. A sermon preceded the other speeches, although it was by a Buddhist monk. Finally the names of the faculty were read. The list is impressive with B.A.'s and M.A.'s, some from England. But the most interesting thing, that is how many have matriculated, they do not state. In the meantime Judson College and the government college have more students than they ever have had before.

One of the four corners of the earth is occupied by Kengtung. One travels as far as he can, and then just beyond he finds the place. Thus they are going to have their own Seminary rather than send their workers to Insein. These are really Bible Schools, since higher criticism has not brought them the dignity of a seminary. At any rate, it is a move in the right direction, training the men on the field in their own language, and it ought to be a success. One of the hardest things about the frontier work is the training of workers. When the stations are founded the Karens are the evangelists, who are practically missionaries. But the training of the people themselves to be pastors and evangelists is a task which is both difficult and very expensive, since few if any can afford to go, to Burma to study.

And speaking of Seminaries Dr. Smith at Insein has published the notice of the completion of a new commentary, that on Luke. Although physically unable to continue his work in Seminary he is perhaps doing a still greater work providing the tools with which the Karen pastors can work. He has been so long at work in Burma that the date of his arrival is sort of "shrouded in the mists of antiquity."

Lac Ntomba District, Belgian Congo

UP to the present seventy-seven have been baptized this year. We have had nothing of the nature of a revival, but we have constantly some inquirers coming from all parts of our field. Routine work has been the order of the day. The telling of the story of God's wondrous love to men in the gift of his Son, is the main part of our routine; but we have as "feeders" school, medical and industrial work.

By looking back and noting results we find there is much to encourage us to go on in the Name of the Lord.

Our chief needs from the home churches are workers and more workers, who from love to God and man will come here to witness by a Christ-like life to the power of the Gospel of God. Another great need is your constant, continued prayer for the missionaries and natives of this field that the grace of God may abound unto them.

Congo Conferences

General Conference

The Congo General Conference of Protestant Missions met at Bolenge, Oct. 29—Nov. 6. It was attended by 103 missionaries representing the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Baptist Missionary Society, Congo Balolo Mission, Disciples of Christ Congo Mission, Christian and Missionary Alliance, Swedish Mission, American Presbyterian Congo Mission, Methodist Episcopal Congo Mission (North), Methodist Episcopal Congo Mission (South), Cooperating Baptist Mission of North America, Ubangi-Shari Mission and Kongo Evangelical Training Institution. Letters of greeting were read from Africa Inland, Garanganze Evangelical and Heart of Africa Missions and the Seventh Day Adventists.

Such a large and representative gathering is remarkable in that they came from all over a territory equal to one-third the size of the United States; some travelling 1000 miles over Congo foot-paths and waterways, forced to be absent from their stations for months; others traveled as far but made the journey in connection with the trip home on furlough. The delegates made the journey by means of every known method of African travel, including even the bicycle, while the hydroplane passenger service from Kinshasa on the Upper River was a debated possibility.

From the moment the Conference opened to its very close it was evident that these 100 or more missionaries had not traveled so far and at such great inconvenience for any other purpose than serious mission business. They gave most earnest attention to and participated in thoughtful discussion of missionary survey of the whole field; the literature committee's report on the literature necessary for the intellectual advancement of the native; the missionary development of the native in Congo; the worth of the native to the colony and to the church; growth of missionary cooperation; the function and scope of the general conference and continuation committee; medical cooperation and policy; mission educational policy; union higher schools; building the church among village communities; Congo official languages; can missions profitably enlarge their industrial and agricultural work?

Three sessions were given to woman's work, discussing kindergarten methods in Congo, the best way to train girls as evangelists' wives, medical training for girls, cooperation of Christian women, suggestions for the treatment and training of our station girls, girls' recreation, how to reach girls and women in the outlying districts. Can you think of any other big, serious problem which they ought to have taken up?

Their conclusions, if put in operation, will, we believe, lead to far-reaching results. They were profoundly concerned with the future while decidedly practical about the immediate present. No one seemed to imagine that we could escape our immediate, definite and difficult problems by any aeroplane method; neither did any one think it wise to continue our work on the basis of hammock travel when the aeroplane should become safe and accessible. The spirit of cooperation prevailed. The number of topics in which the idea of cooperation appeared in the above program has only to be noted to realize that the "get-together" idea was prominent. # Europe in the Aftermath of War

The Year in European Baptist Reconstruction

By CHARLES ALVIN BROOKS

IN compliance with the editor's request for up-to-date information concerning European Baptist affairs it gives me great personal satisfaction to be able to register my gratitude over the progress of plans which I spent a strenuous year in helping to shape.

First, I want the denomination to know that the response on the part of the Foreign Mission Society has been far more generous than I had dared to hope possible. I have spent much time reviewing the reports of Commissioner Rushbrooke and I wish to take off my hat in profound gratitude and respect to the Foreign Mission Society for the way it is carrying out the program of the London conference in the lands for which it became responsible. I must repeat that same sentiment regarding the Woman's Foreign Mission Society.

The reports of Dr. Rushbrooke indicate the value of his services to the various unions during this period of reconstruction. The administration of relief, involving large sums of money, is being carefully reviewed and checked most methodically and thoroughly. He reports that substantial improvements in conditions are traceable to the distribution of relief, and the gratitude to America is deep and sincere. In Vienna our relief is caring for 100 university students, assuring them food, clothes and scholarship aid upon a self-respecting basis. The German-speaking Baptists of America have made it possible for our church there to secure a most desirable and valuable piece of property for the future development of our work.

Baptists in Czecho-Slovakia are able to report gratifying progress. After fifty years of Baptist work it seems now as though we were just beginning. Everywhere is new courage and new devotion. When I visited that country in 1919 we had 1,700 Baptists. At the meeting of the union in October this year there were reported 2,300. There are six times as many salaried workers under appointment as there were then. The seminary has been organized this past year with my friend, fellow traveler and interpreter, Dr. Prochazka, as rector, with eleven students enrolled. The school is housed in the annex to our First Church and begins its career with great promise.

Several much needed edifices have been assured. One was provided by the generosity of a woman member at a cost of $1,500. It is to be furnished by each member providing two chairs, one for himself and an extra one for visitors.

A new Baptist periodical in the Bohemian language has been launched, with a paid up circulation of between 4,000 and 5,000.

A noteworthy and unique bit of publicity is carried on by our folks over there through the publication of a calendar (almanac) which contains general useful information and especially Baptist facts of interest. This is the most attractive and best edited publication of its kind in the country and represents enterprise and ability of a high order.

Perhaps the most gratifying news from Czecho-Slovakia has to do with the effective unity between the four races in the country as exemplified in our "Union." Here Czechs, Slovaks, Germans and Magyars cooperate in most earnest and happy concord: a much needed demonstration for the nation in solidarity just at this time.

From Poland comes gratifying news of a good harvest and improved conditions among the people at large. Among the 200,000 refugees from Russia, however, are a number of Baptists and in the territory ceded by the Soviet government last year from the Ukraine, White and Great Russia, there are a number of Baptists who are in dire distress.

It is a pleasure to report the recovery and restoration to active service of our representative, K. W. Strzelec, who was seriously ill for several months and so unable to administer the relief provided. His family has now joined him and he is settled in Poland for some time.

After negotiations between the German-speaking Baptists in America and the Foreign Mission Society they have agreed definitely to become responsible for the support of the mission work among the German population in Poland, leaving to the Foreign Mission Society general matters, such as training leaders, most of the relief, and the promotion of mission work among the Slav population. Our Polish congregations are growing in numbers and attendance. There is urgent need of several men from America to help in this work.

A new religious periodical in the Polish language, called Nowe Drogi (New Ways), has been inaugurated. It is well edited and has proved popular. The new publication society has been obliged to enlarge its plant and has all the business it can care for.

The time for the opening of a seminary is not opportune, but it has been definitely decided that when it is established it will be located in Warsaw. Two promising young men have been sent to England for preliminary training.

Dr. Rushbrooke reports a most interesting visit to Latvia and a conference in Riga with the Baptist leaders. The union of Latvian Baptists is a strong body representing a number of men who hold positions of influence in the government. In proportion to the population it is probably one of the strongest Baptist unions in Europe. There have been 600 additions to our churches in the first ten months of the year and the evangelistic spirit is high. They feel the great importance of evangelism to meet the social unrest of the country at this time. The rebuilding of thirty-seven ruined chapels is one of the most pressing material needs at present.

The seminary opens in January under the leadership of Rev. J. A. Frey with twelve students, three of whom have had some university training. The associate teacher has studied at the universities of Moscow and Riga. The school will have its home in the Zion (German) Chapel on most generous terms. It is hoped that this school can provide at the same time the beginnings of a leadership for Lithuania.

I have recently sent the editor an intensely interesting letter from Rev. Adam K. Podin, of Estonia [Appearing in this issue, Editor.], which expresses the great appreciation of our brethren there for our assistance and telling of the remarkable spiritual awakening everywhere throughout Esthonia. He has had audiences numbering 3,000, eager listeners to the Word. Doors long closed have swung wide open to our ministry.

From France Mr. Brouillette reports that the experiment of conducting daily vacation Bible schools in the four Foyers and some of the churches in the devastated area, proved a conspicuous success. The relief program is supporting over 800 orphans and many of them were in our schools. Young people's work as we know it in America has been almost entirely unknown among our Baptists in France. Recently under the inspiration and initiative of Mr. Brouillette, seconded by Mr. Robert Farrelly, who graduated from Rochester last year, the first Baptist Young People's Convention was held and was attended by 200 young people. It is of peculiar interest to note that some of the most remarkable conversions have taken place these past few months in Pas de Calais, the region most industrialized and most strongly Romanist, but also a part of the occupied and devastated area where we have expended the most in relief work.

Time and space forbid more than these hasty glimpses which may be taken as typical of the way in which our Baptists are arising under the leadership of God to absolutely unprecedented opportunities which this hour presents to us in Europe. Let us not slacken our speed or relax our effort. We have won a campaign but not the war for making Christ supreme in Europe.

A Word from Latvia

The Foreign Mission Society has received letters from Asso. Secy. W. B. Lippard, written from Danzig, the port of entry for Poland, and from Libau, Latvia. At Libau he was not far from the borders of Russia and was greatly impressed with what he saw. The people in Libau, regardless of religious beliefs, gave him a great reception. As many as 5,000 people crowded into one of the large unheated Lutheran church buildings on a very cold night, and sat there for nearly two hours while Mr. Lippard's address was being interpreted by Rev. J. A. Frey, and while Mr. Frey himself preached a sermon. Mr. Frey pronounced it the greatest meeting ever held in Libau. The people were attracted by the fact that Baptists in America were making large gifts, not merely to relieve members of their own denomination who were suffering, but to minister to the most needy, regardless of racial or political differences. A part of Mr. Lippard's letter is as follows:

"Frey says we have opened the door so wide to interdenominational friendship and understanding that it can never again be closed. Never in the history of Libau has there been anything else held in this Lutheran church except the formal services. Never before in the history of Libau has there been any kind of union religious meeting. It is almost a miracle, and only the steamship Esthonia in the harbor, the bales on the pier, the American in the city and the unsectarian emphasis on our relief activity have made this possible. More than a score of poorly clad, hungry looking, aged women came with tears in their eyes and kissed my hand. I do not imagine I will ever again see such a meeting or be given such a hearing. Bear in mind also that the weather here is bitterly cold, the temperature around zero by our thermometer, and not an ounce of heat in this immense building. Frey and I stood in the pulpit with overcoats and mufflers, our breath freezing about three feet in front of our mouths; yet the crowds stood in the cold for more than two hours on a Saturday night when you would hardly expect anybody to attend."

With Polish Baptists

Evidently the large shipment of clothing and other supplies to various European countries has made deep impression. Rev. K. W. Strzelec, who journeyed to Danzig with several representatives of Polish Baptists to meet Asso. Secy. Lippard and receive 650 large bales of clothing and many barrels of soap and toys for distribution in Poland alone, has written the Foreign Mission Society as follows:

"Please extend the thanks of the Polish people to all those who have contributed the clothing for their use. I have never seen anything which moved me so deeply as the bales of clothing which I watched being unloaded from the steamship. Tears came to my eyes as I saw the barrels of toys. I know many bright children who were born in 1914 and later years who have never seen toys, and some of them are in our Sunday schools. The Fellowship Ship will go down in the history of the Baptists of Poland. Besides the needy Baptists, it will make thousands of needy non-Baptists happy. May God give to all the contributors on Christmas Day a real sense of the joy which their gifts will bring to the poor in Poland who will receive some of the clothing. I wish to all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year."

Notes on the Baltic States and Russia

I HAVE just returned from an interesting journey to Lithuania, Latvia, Esthonia and Finland. In these countries winter conditions already prevail, and I found the earth, even in the second week of November, snow covered. In Reval and Helsingfors, though the harbors are not closed, some of the minor creeks were beginning to freeze over. Signs of a hard winter abound.

The impressions with which I return are curiously mixed. On the one hand there is a quickened sense of the widespread poverty and suffering in these lands; on the other a heightened admiration of the patience and faith with which our people are bearing up and carrying on their work. I note but a few representative facts.

In Kowno, the capital of Lithuania, the one Baptist chapel in the land is in such a condition as to be practically unusable. During the war the congregation was dispersed (very largely banished), and it remained pastorless until three months ago. Now a brave man has ventured to accept a call from the little band of returned refugees, the majority of whom have lost almost their all. His settlement has been made possible by the generosity of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, but it will be long before the disastrous effects of the war are neutralized.

In Latvia I preached twice, and I could wish that any Britishers who are lukewarm with regard to the help of the needy had been present at the morning service in Riga. After my address the pastor spoke a few words of gratitude to the Americans and British who had shown such sympathy. He then asked those present who have been assisted to rise in their places. Not far from one-fourth of the people responded. I had afterwards opportunities of speaking with many of them, and shall not forget the two blind women who were led up to press my hand and to invoke God's blessing on those who had not forgotten them in their need.

Apart from the direct suffering of individuals, our church work in Latvia has been hard hit by the destruction or serious damage of buildings. No fewer than thirty-seven chapels, large and small, have been destroyed or damaged by the soldiers, and the Latvian Baptists are quite unable to bring together the £4,000 which in the present condition of the exchange would enable them to carry out renewals and restorations. The need is as real as that of Northern France—though far less has been heard of the martyrdom of Latvia—and I doubt not the Baptists abroad will meet it in the same spirit they have already displayed in France.

The deplorable poverty of the Esthonian Baptists sets in relief their heroic qualities. In this land the Baptist witness has been borne, and the ministry of the churches carried on, almost entirely by untrained laymen; it is only recently that a very few seminary-trained men have presented themselves or that organization has been seriously taken in hand. One thinks of the railway employe who, between his weekdays of hard work, and in spite of a very troublesome internal complaint, has borne his witness on the Sundays and gathered about him a church of a hundred members; and of small farmers or farm bailiffs who in the country districts are rendering splendid service. Given some measure of assistance, especially in the production of literature, the restoration of the war-destroyed churches, the setting free of some of the better qualified men to give whole-time service, and the appointment of a few traveling evangelists, great things could be expected in Esthonia. Without a doubt the Canadian Baptists, the Baptists of the Northern Convention, and our own Continental Committee, who divide the responsibility for these countries, will assist effectively. Already in Esthonia, as in Latvia, they have guaranteed the support of a seminary, which is to be opened in January.

I hesitate to write much about our work in Finland. There Britain is responsible for advising and assisting the purely Finnish-speaking work. It has suffered most gravely; after the great war, and the Bolshevik civil war that followed, it was found that one-third of the Finnish-speaking Baptist churches had ceased to exist. Certain fanatical movements—political and religious—have wrought grave mischief. Nevertheless, there is a kernel of healthy Baptist Christianity in Finland, and, under the blessing of God, our cooperation will do something to make the future brighter than the more recent past.

All through this journey I have been alert to discover any facts concerning Russia or means of reaching Russia. Documents that have come to me directly from that country, and talks in Riga with members of the American Relief Administration and persons who have within the last few days come out from Russia, confirm the fact of enormous and terrible need. It is impossible to do too much for Russia, and the American Relief Administration is working on thoroughly sound lines tested now by the experience of years. The American effort to "fill a ship in fellowship" proved so successful that, although it was initiated on behalf of other lands (Russia was not yet open), it is now found possible also to send many car loads of clothing to Russia. Baptists of the Southern Convention, led (as the Northerners were) by foreign mission representatives, are now entering upon a drive to obtain clothing for Russia. I have been assured that if British Baptists can offer similar help in sufficient quantities the American Relief Administration would undertake to deal with it from London.

Russia is now definitely opening. Letters can be sent and received freely. Already the receipt of cases of Bibles has been acknowledged, and indications point to the early dawn of a day of large opportunity. All honor to the brave Baptists and others who right through these years of confusion have kept at their posts and sustained the work of God in their land! —DR. J. H. RUSHBROOKE, in The Baptist Times and Freeman, London.

A Letter to Dr. Brooks from Esthonia

AS my dear wife and I have been at home in our own country some weeks and the relief has been received and distributed among the poor ministers and monthly distributions for widows and orphans have regularly taken place, I am glad to write these lines. You cannot imagine the joy on the faces of the brethren when told that relief had come and each one could receive the sum you appointed for them at the conference. As they were in such need, this fitted in beautifully.

It happened like this: We had a two-weeks' Bibel Cursus, or Bible study in Rothel. To this Bibel Cursus had come some 100 persons—ministers, Sunday-school teachers, evangelists and other thirsty souls. The church in Rothel gave lodgings for all, but each one had to pay for the food. At this very time the relief arrived. Some cried, some sobbed, others laughed for joy. This was a relief that filled their hearts with joy. They thought I was in some way worthy to be thanked and would have done some extra honor to me, but the president called them to thank God. No wonder they were so happy! Some wore such clothes that you American pastors in your land of liberty and plenty would not acknowledge them as your colleagues. Some had such boots on that they could scarcely reach home. One of them, a pastor who stopped at my house and held services each night at which several souls have been awakened, was nearly barefoot. My church members tried to mend his shoes to wear home. Three of our pastors that I had on my list when I put the needs before the committee did not see this day of gladness as they had been called to that land where there is no more hunger, where the Lamb shall feed them. One of those on my list came to such poverty that he sold all his belongings and went to Finland, where he has done colporteur work, besides working among the Russians, being himself a Russian marine officer. I had a nice letter from him recently. One of the above mentioned pastors died from underfeeding and some twenty to thirty church members in the same place from typhoid.

At present we can have as much food as we like, but the prices for it are most awful as nearly everything is imported from America, England, Holland and elsewhere, and our money is so cheap—1,350 mark one £. But the brethren will be helped even through this. Some going home have thanked God, blessing the American and English children of God the whole night. O, if your brethren could have seen the need and then the joy on their faces they would soon send some more dollars to lighten their faces. The widows and children receive the monthly gifts with tears. You with your visit and your brethren with sympathetic hearts have cheered up those that for years have suffered—some imprisonment, some self-denial or mockery. Nearly all have worked with their hands to keep soul and body together and preached the gospel without any wages. It is wonderful how God has used his simple servants. No one could do the work here better under the circumstances.

If I would not tire you with my long letter I would give you a sketch of my last evangelistic journey. I left March 20 with my wife on invitation to take an eight-days' mission fifty miles from my home, in a district that covered several miles. On our arrival the same night the place was full of people anxious to meet with God. I conducted the meeting, and some commenced to cry bitterly about their sin. The same night several souls came to Christ. Next day being Palm Sunday was a day that will not be easily forgotten. A pastor spoke first, then my wife, and I delivered my address last. I spoke of the incident when Jesus entered Jerusalem and how they made him their king, putting their garments and palm branches on his road. Several determined that day to be His subjects, giving themselves to Him. Next day we had the same picture and souls were saved. March 22, we had a meeting in a theatre arranged by the district people themselves. On our arrival we found the large room filled to the uttermost, with several hundreds standing outside the door and windows. We spoke for two hours while the people, with tears running down their faces, listened to the gospel truth.

Next day we traveled with horses some twenty miles to where a huge theatrium house had been arranged for gospel services. An hour before beginning the place was packed. Strong fishermen, listening to the pardoning love of God, cried like babes. When we closed our meeting some commenced in the crowd to cry for mercy. The people asked us to come again any time and we will be welcome. Next day we had a meeting in a Baptist church again some twenty miles from that place. It was a wonderful day. The meeting started at 5 o'clock and it was 11 p. m. when we closed. Thirteen souls were led to Christ and the whole church was revived. In our land we have nice revivals. Yesterday in my own church again several had given themselves to God. Pray for us.

The people show every kindness to strangers, but you must not mind if when you go to bed you find other lodgers in the same room, even women and children, and a great many of them, too.

Everything is so natural that if you say nothing they think so it is in the whole world. All dine together on strong healthy food, but you must not expect any white bread, sweet cakes and sweet puddings. Those things you will get when you go back to your land of peace, liberty and plenty.

The traveling is very difficult. To travel 100 miles with horses was more difficult than to travel from London to Revol. We started on Easter Sunday at 1 p. m. thinking to have time enough to reach our train some twenty miles away. But to our surprise we came to one small river and found that the flood and ice had washed away our bridges. Some man told us of another bridge three miles down the river. We started again, driving through deep waters as the most part of the road was under water. Passing several deeper places the bridges carried us over, but now came a small river again, the road deeply covered by water. My driver, who had in his carriage another pastor and his ten-year-old child, went ahead straight into the river as the ice and flood had carried away the bridge. The child could be rescued as the father carried him on his shoulders. To rescue the horse and wagon the two were in deep ice water keeping the head of the horse above the water. So I had to throw away the heavy clothes and go to help. The horse was rescued and it took some time to fish out the wagon from the bottom of the river, and it was all ice water. We succeeded in getting the wagon out, too, so we drove to the next Baptist church two and one-half miles away, where we changed our clothes, spent the night and preached on Easter Sunday morning. A brother took upon himself the task to get us to the railway station by some round-about way—he succeeded, too. In the dark evening we arrived at a farmhouse two miles from the station, but it was too late to catch the train. When the farmer's wife listened to our story and how it came that we came so late under the roof, she exclaimed, "I am old and could not go to the meetings; I prayed to the heavenly Father send me some child of God for these holy days. Now I am glad he has sent you." So she put the New Testament on the table asking about the coming of the Lord and we had again meeting. Next day, having refreshed us with various things, they brought us to the long desired railway station. So we arrived after three hours traveling by the train, tired but blessed and encouraged seeing many souls being saved. (Written on April 1, 1921.)

An Appeal from Roumania

The brethren in Roumania are persecuted beyond description. There are Baptist churches and meeting houses closed. Persecution ranges all over the country—now here, now there—headed by priests of the state church. Our boys are being beaten and thrown out of the public schools, while their parents are heavily fined, simply because they are Baptists and do not want to kiss the icons and make the sign of the cross or submit to baptism by the priests into the state church.

The brethren have made petition to the minister of religion, asking him to stop the barbarities, but his excellency keeps still while Baptists are being beaten on bare bodies to the bleeding point. The cry of these innocent brethren and sisters ought to reach to the whole Christian world and the Roumanian government should be brought to reason. The Roumanian minister at Washington made public denial of any religious persecution whatsoever in Roumania. His excellency either denies it wilfully or is misinformed as to this, for during the past three years the Baptists of Roumania have been continuously persecuted.

We beg you through the columns of your paper to ask the Christian people of the United States to pray for us, for our persecuted brethren, sisters and school-boys.

J. R. SOCACIN.

Congo Conferences

spirit prompted the consideration of a number of projects besides those on the program. For instance, the organization of the Union Hostel at Kinshasa was completed and one new society entered into the scheme, our American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. A similar plan was set on foot for Matadi and the same board of trustees was appointed to serve for Matadi Union Hostel. Strong recommendations were made respecting joint evangelical, educational and medical work for Matadi, and a committee appointed to study the questions involved. Progress was made in plans for co-operative medical work and a union medical school was projected at Kinshasa to serve the whole Congo field. Union medical work was recommended for other places but plans were not fully completed. Union higher schools, including the one already established at Kimpese, were proposed for four centers. These schools are to emphasize an all-round training adapted to the needs of the Congo natives.

Perhaps one of the most effective co-operative efforts is the agreement between the Congo Balolo and the Disciples of Christ Missions whereby they have adopted a standard dialect which they use in all their fields. This gives the combined field a population large enough to warrant the translation of an extensive literature for their churches and schools.

Another splendid advance was made in regard to standard lingua franca, or preferably, one only, which is possibly to be "Kingala." The conference agrees to collaborate with the state in a serious effort to produce and use a standardized lingua franca. The use of one, or at most, three standard dialects for the whole Congo would mean a tremendous saving of time in producing literature in the future.

"Watchman, what of the night?" "The watchman said, The morning cometh, and the night." But has not this dark African night been long enough? Thus appeals the Congo General Conference. It expects the appeal to be heeded by all countries represented, but their hands are stretched out most hopefully to America with its great resources of young men and women and its unparalleled wealth.

Young people of America, how much longer is the night to be?

The Six Who Tasted the Onion Stew

YOU are not to suppose from the title of this story that the six who tasted the onion stew found poison in the pot! Far from it—for it was a very good stew, as stews go; but long, long before ever an onion bubbled or boiled, there was a certain murky October evening with a half drizzle of rain and a sharp tang of frost in the air. Along a certain dingy street two men went slinking, about ten feet apart: "toughs," if ever there were persons to deserve that disreputable title, and behind them came as nice a lady as you would care to meet.

But you may guess she kept an eye upon those two ahead, and her heart beat uncomfortably fast as the street led underneath a railroad bridge, a jet-black tunnel of a place, full of grim shadows, with deserted warehouses guarding each end and street lamps flickering pale, wan lights only at distant intervals.

You must admit it was not pleasant; one wonders what you would have done yourself! She, at her wits' end, did something most peculiar—she ran ahead and grabbed the arm of the nearer tough: "I b-beg your pardon," she began, as he swung around at this unexpected assault, "but I feel a little frightened about going under this dark bridge alone, I wonder—would you mind protecting me?"

Would he? Would he?

"Why sure, liddy, sure!" he cried, and clasped a grimy hand around her elbow. And she never guessed the strange, queer thing that was happening in Paulos Nievitch's heart, so relieved was she to know she need not walk alone through dangerous darkness; but, being the first American lady who had ever spoken to him in all his nine long, lonely years in this country, you can imagine the startled pride he felt in safeguarding this rare creature! When they had passed under the bridge he said to her, awkwardly: "Just spik de word, liddy, und me no drop you sooner you gets on de place what you'se goin' to!"

"Oh, how very kind of you," she said, "I would be so glad to have you come with me."

And quite as if his shoes were winged, and his shabby clothes had turned to glistening armor, he walked beside her proudly—like some knight errant of old who had rescued a fair lady! It is also pleasant to note that she did not seem to object to his rough, run-down appearance; calmly she explained how she was a city missionary, and how she had heard of a certain family in trouble and was hurrying there to help: "But I did not realize it would be quite such a deserted neighborhood," she added, as they reached the doorstep; "how can I ever thank you for your goodness in coming out of your way to bring me here so safely?"

"No spik it!" begged Paulos, pulling off his tattered cap politely, and overcome because she offered to shake hands. "You make me awful proud, liddy!"

So she disappeared indoors to do what she would have considered her real errand of mercy; and two hours later when she came out on the sidewalk again she had actually forgotten her escort and was considerably startled to have something that looked like the trunk of a tree detach itself from the shadows and walk forward to meet her.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, "oh, you waited! But you shouldn't have done it, not in this cold, unpleasant drizzle. Why, I never dreamed of such a thing—it's very, very kind of you—"

"Dat's all right, liddy," Paulos said awkwardly, "where we go to now, huh?"

"Home," she answered, and all the way along those dark, mysterious city streets they walked and talked, while she discovered that nine years ago he had first reached this Every Man's Land of ours, a little boy of ten, with his father.

"You should to see us work on factories, liddy, me und him; say, we work und save, work und save, for to send back to de old countree for de folks. But come two year ago dat old fader, he die in accidents; so now me work und me save, all alone," and Paulos sighed as he slapped his hip pockets to show how empty they were, adding significantly: "Slow work, yes?"

He told her all there was to tell, and a lonely something that had made him hate America began to thaw and melt within his heart. And it seems to me that that was the time when the onions for the stew must have begun to sprout excitedly in some farmer's garden!

However that may be, sure it is that when the next pay-day came, Paulos Nievitch bought a collar and a necktie, and on Sunday scrubbed his grimy hands and went to church. To the church where his missionary lady went, of course—as far as he was concerned there was no other church in town, and certainly no other lady of any consequence at all.

As for the missionary, she persuaded him to go to night school, and helped him add his bank account to see how soon he could afford to send for his family in Europe. And in the course of time Paulos decided he wanted to join "her" church. His simple confession of faith won the heart of every deacon. But it just happened that on the very Sunday morning when he was to join there was only one other person to be received, and this person was a gentleman so famous and well known that if his name were mentioned here you would know it instantly yourselves, and agree with the deacons that possibly such a celebrity might not care to stand side by side with poor, rough, awkward Paulos Nievitch. Indeed, Paulos felt embarrassed about it himself! But the celebrated gentleman was disgusted with the deacons when they broached the matter to him: "See here, my good friends," he argued, "we live in a democracy, you and I, and none of us can ever claim that I am any better American or better Christian than this boy who's already gone through trials by fire and water to arrive. Who knows what he may become—a fellow who's pulled himself up this far? Gentlemen, I'm proud to be received into the membership of this church on the same day as he!"

And this word came to Paulos' ears. A great lump rose in his throat: "Sure, I makes no forgetting of this, mister!" he exclaimed, gripping the celebrity's hand in a giant clasp. So that on that radiant Sunday morning in the month of April I think the onions for the stew were ready for the market. In any case, the money for three passages across the ocean had reached a certain little town in Europe where a mother and two daughters were rolling quilts and kettles into bundles, and bidding farewells to all their lifelong neighbors.

Never was a little home of two small rooms in New York City more lovingly prepared for its new owners than the home which Paulos rented and which the missionary lady cleaned and scoured and polished. And no sooner had the newcomers landed and heard all of Paulos' tale than those onions were put on to stew! "For," as Mrs. Nievitch said, emphatically, "anybody who's been so angel good on Paulos has a right to the best supper I can cook up!"

So the invitations went out that very morning, and that evening around a bare pine kitchen table the six of them sat down to onion stew. You may think it was a curiously-mixed sort of gathering, as indeed it was: when on one side of the table sat a tired and quiet missionary with a man who was a real celebrity, used to butlers and footmen and finger-bowls, yet obviously enjoying the simplicity of onion stew when shared with such beaming souls as his host and hostesses. How can one tell in words the speechless gratitude of those three delighted women? Not a word of English could they speak, but they beamed incessantly and gesticulated with their knives and forks to express the gratitude they felt for this gentleman and lady who had reached way down to pull poor Paulos up.

Something up O Mitsu's Sleeve

IT IS not surprising that O Mitsu had something up his sleeve, since Japanese kimonos generally have sleeves about two feet long which can be the grandest pockets in the world—indeed, O Mitsu's sleeve was already jingling whenever his fan bumped against the tops and pebbles which were hidden there. Yet another crinkly something up his sleeve was newer and far more interesting, for it had been dropped by a young lady as her train went snorting and champing through his village in that peculiarly disdainful way which fast trains have.

Since young ladies do not usually drop things out of car-windows into the hands of astonished little Japanese boys, you may be interested to know exactly how she happened to be so obliging to O Mitsu. She was on a trip around the world with her father, and everywhere she went she saw busy missionaries trying to win people to God, so when she reached Japan, she said: "I do wish there was some special way I could help you dear over-worked people. But, of course, since I can't speak Japanese and am always on the 'go,' I suppose I couldn't be of a particle of use!"

Oh, how they laughed at her! "My dear," those missionaries said, "you can be of the greatest service in the world to us just by developing... dropsy!"

"Dropsy?" she repeated, turning a little pale, and looking frightened. "Why, I thought dropsy was some dreadful disease, almost incurable?"

"There's nothing fatal about the kind we mean," smiled Mrs. Missionary cheerfully, "we simply nicknamed it dropsy because we make it a habit to drop things where we go, as if by mistake, you know. Only we do it on purpose, with a prayer in our hearts that God will bless what we drop and use it to lead somebody to worship him.

The young lady's eyes were wide with astonishment. "And what, what do you drop? Bibles, perhaps?"

Mrs. Missionary reached in her pocket and pulled out a small colored leaflet. "A Bible would be rather big and expensive to drop, and it couldn't be read through as quickly as one of these tracts. See, it has only a few pages, yet it tells all about the true God. Moreover, it is so attractive to look at that it makes a person curious to read it through at one sitting. At the end are directions where to go for further information about Christianity. Enough of these scattered through Japan, and hundreds of thousands of people may begin making inquiries, you know."

The young lady smiled happily. "Just you give me stacks and stacks of them, for I'm going to develop the most desperate attack of dropsy that ever was. I'm beginning to be glad that father's business will take him to queer out-of-the-way corners of Japan where I can drop, drop, drop, drop, drop!"

There had not been a railroad passing through O Mitsu's town very long, so when the one train a day went thundering past, O Mitsu was usually sitting on a certain mossy bank thinking the most poetical little Japanese thoughts about snorting trains which puffed white clouds out of their nostrils and champed along like giant dragons with glittering scales.

Well, one day he was sitting there exactly as usual when at one of the car-windows somebody waved to him and tossed something pink at his feet.

"Banzai!" he cried excitedly, which is the Japanese way of saying "Hurrah!" for never before had a passenger noticed him. He picked up the bit of crinkly pinkness, and turned its pages curiously. Knowing how to read, he sat there staring at the strange words which told of the One True God who made everything and everybody, and expects men to worship him in the Christian's way.

"Curious!" he muttered to himself, and slipped the tract up his sleeve, which was two feet long, as you surely recall, and was already full of pebbles and tops and a fan.

All day long he was conscious of that piece of pinkness, and at night he gave it to his father, saying: "Wouldn't it be safer to us to have this honorable new God on our god shelf with the other idols?"

But his father sneered at him: "You pay little enough attention to the idols that are there now. There's no sense in having more to worship." And he tore the pink tract first into halves, then in quarters, and tossed the pieces on the matting floor as he left the room.

Quick as a flash O Mitsu collected the scattered bits, and tucked them up his sleeve, so that he might piece them together the next day, as you would match a picture puzzle. He even took O Hoshi San (Miss Star) into his confidence, since sisters were more apt to be awestruck than grown-up fathers.

"See here," he pointed; "this tells about an idol called the One True God, who made every tree and flower and bird, and you and me, too. I think we ought to have him sitting on our god shelf with the other images, don't you?"

O Hoshi San nodded her head politely, exactly as he expected her to do.

"Then listen," whispered her brother impressively; "our honorable parent does not think as we do about this, partly because he did not read this heavenly print through to the end. But it lies in my heart that a God who made us could do painful tortures to us if we did not worship him suitably."

O Mitsu shuddered. And O Hoshi San shuddered. (A genuine copy-cat, if ever there was one!)

"Therefore," said O Mitsu importantly, "we must buy this One True God ourselves, so I will need all the birthday money you received on the Feast of Dolls. Run and get it."

"Oh, dear! Oh, dear!" cried O Hoshi San, "it's such a very little bit of money, and I don't want a new doctrine that will cost me anything. I wanted that money myself, O Mitsu."

"Nonsense!" he said scornfully; "what a selfish, miserable person you are. Couldn't I use money, too? Well, and am I not giving up all mine? The quicker we buy this idol the safer we will be. Here in the corner of this printed pinkness is the address where we are to send for further knowledge; I will ask them to send just as big a god as possible for the few sen we have been able to scrape together."

So O Mitsu took his brush and painted odd-looking Japanese words up and down a sheet of paper ordering this new idol to be sent at once, please! Then he took O Hoshi San's pieces of money and his own to the station post-office, where they wrote him a money-order.

Then he waited. And waited. Finally a letter came. "Honorable Sir: We beg to inform you that the Christian's God is not an idol made by men's hands, but a great and father Spirit. We have used the sen you sent us as payment for a Bible, a book which tells the full story of God's plan for those he made. We have marked in red ink certain chapters you will need especially. We beg you to write as often as questions arise in your heart."

O Hoshi San chuckled. "They write as if you were a grown man," she cried; "how important you must feel to read those high-sounding words."

O Mitsu looked at her severely. "I am a grown man!" he cried, "and I have the task of a grown man before me." For with a solemn face and a determined heart he went in to speak to his father. "Honorable sir," he said, bowing politely, "not for nothing did you name me O Mitsu, Abundance, for surely a son should pour all his treasures into his father's arms. So I ventured to send for the One True God, so that I might place him beside our other idols on the god shelf—yet see what a courteous reply I received, and what an unexpected book! Should we not look into this matter?"

O Mitsu's father read the letter curiously, and fingered the Bible reverently. Well, perhaps he would look into this matter, after all. And without a missionary in town, or a single church, that little family read the Bible and believed it word for word. Whenever a train thunders by, O Mitsu waves a very grateful "Thank you" after it, hoping his particular young lady may see him and guess what good she accomplished.

Young People's Work

Topic for January 22

(Missionary Topic) Isaiah 9:2-7.

"CRUSADERS OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH"

1. The People. When the missionaries first came to the Karens, they found a wild but peaceable people. Because of oppression, they made their homes in the farthest recesses of the tropical jungle and the most inaccessible mountain fastnesses. With the coming of the British Government, oppression gradually decreased. Thousands of the Karens found their way down to the plains of lower Burma. They now number about 850,000 and are divided into many tribes, with varying dialects which have greatly increased the difficulty of mission work.

2. Opportunities, Present and Future. Karen missions today, as in the past, are the most outstanding in Burma and among the largest and most advanced in the world. The work has grown so steadily and normally, gaining in self-support, that no widespread appeals for funds or workers have been made. Now they must be brought into the intelligent limelight once more. Of the twelve stations, six are either entirely unmanned or are in charge of those who have reached the retiring age or are nearing it, or by those whose furloughs are shortly due, with no one in view to fill the gaps.

* The danger is that with the missions so prosperous the idea will take root that the churches could be safely left without foreign supervision or leadership. We must remember the tremendous advantage which hundreds of years of Christian training and world-wide contacts have given us. Contrast with these the facts that from time immemorial the Karens have lived for the most part in small, scattered communities, often surrounded by cruel, implacable foes, hence are shy, timid, perhaps suspicious. It is impossible in the nature of things that from such cramped, confined antecedents they should derive that breadth of vision, that power of seeing things in the large, which is indispensable to the highest leadership and to united enthusiastic following. In one case, where a large field was left with meager oversight, the churches rose to the occasion nobly, but eventually found the burden too heavy for them and petitioned for a full-time missionary.

The Survey mentions the following requirements in Burma by 1924. With the information at hand the writer cannot definitely separate the needs of the Karen work from that of the Burman and other missions, but since the former comprises so preponderant a portion of work in Burma, the figures are given as a whole: 3. Requirements by 1924. New missionary families, fifty-five; new women mis-

Things That Happen in the Nevada-Sierra Convention

By H. S. FOOTE

Since our last convention, that was held in April of this year, we have had a number of rallies that will be remembered. The distances being great in this field, we have to travel many hours sometimes before we reach our destination.

Our first rally was with Fallon, Nev., which is somewhere near sixty miles from us. We made the trip by auto. Then the Fallon young people came to Sparks. Sparks entertained Reno, and Reno returned the rally by having a big time in their city.

On Dec. 9-10 Sparks was entertained at Loyalton, Cal., by the Loyalton young people. It takes a couple of hours to make this trip by a fast machine, but when one has one that is loaded to capacity it takes somewhat longer. The machine that I was driving was a Chevrolet five passenger. I had six in it and some baggage. The machine ran fine until we started to climb the hills when the clutch began to slip. I told the people in my machine that it would be a night out in the darkness, unless, we walked up the hills. They all thought it would be a good thing to walk the hills and limber themselves, so I unloaded and climbed the hill without any load. When I got to the top, I would stop the machine and then go back and walk up the hill with them. All the way on this trip, we were singing songs that made things full of life. We arrived at Loyalton after being on the road two and a half hours. We were royally entertained while there and when we left for home on Sunday afternoon, we did not exactly feel like leaving.

We are now planning on entertaining Loyalton in Sparks the early part of next month.* It will be a time that will long be remembered if the plans are worked out that are now in mind.

We also have something planned for the holidays. We are going to have a great big rally up in the snow at Susanville, Cal. We will be able to have with us at this rally Dr. Millard L. Thomas, the young people's worker for Northern California and Nevada. The societies will be well represented. There will be young people from Susanville, Lassen, Standish, Alturas, Loyalton, California, and from Reno, Sparks and Fallon, Nevada.

International Uniform Lesson for January 22

ELIJAH'S FLIGHT AND RETURN
Kings 19:1-21. Golden Text: Psalms 40:1

Setting
After running the eighteen miles before Ahab's chariot to Jezreel, Elijah, learning that Jezebel threatens his life, flees to Beersheba, thence into the desert. He is tired, hungry, depressed, discouraged. The spiritual elation over the triumph on Mt. Carmel has left him. He sleeps and an angel tells him to eat. Physically refreshed, he goes to Mt. Horeb, the mount where God talked with Moses, eighty miles distant.

Lesson Story
In a cave on Mt. Horeb the voice of Jehovah again speaks to the discouraged prophet: "What doest thou here?" Elijah tells of his zealotness for the work of Jehovah and is told that he should stand upon the mount before Jehovah. Then comes a terrific, shattering windstorm followed by an earthquake; fire comes in the wake of the earthquake, but in none of these is God. Then Elijah hears a still voice and recognizes it as the voice of God. He is recommissioned: "Go, return on thy way (back to Israel) by way of Damascus, and I will leave me 7,000 in Israel which have not bowed unto Baal."

Lesson Thoughts
1. Physical exhaustion and spiritual depression—to what extent was the former to blame for the latter in Elijah's case? In any case? "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?"
2. To fill its destined end every life must have a definite purpose. "What doest thou here?"
3. The greatest demonstrations have not always the greatest power. Silent, unseen forces are the wonder workers. It was in the still small voice that Elijah heard God.

Interesting Training Books

THE new series of books dealing with various phases of religious education in the church and the home, known as the Judson Training Manuals and published by the American Baptist Publication Society, seem to meet with general acceptance.
Two representative statements are here given:
Dr. Millard L. Thomas, director of religious education, northern California: "I am more than interested in the Judson Training Manuals. Everybody who has seen the last book in the series, 'The Use of Projects in Religious Education,' speaks of it in highest terms. The preceding volumes are having a favorable reception in our section. It is a delight to me to see headquarters doing fine work not only in programs and helps, but also in producing good, forward-looking books on religious education."

Prof. Luther Allan Weigle, school of religion, Yale University: "I find myself in full agreement with the principles set forth in Dr. Tralle's 'Planning Church Buildings,' and I am especially glad to have a book so well fitted to put in the hands of teacher-training classes, church officers and ordinary folk generally. It seems to me it is of great importance that we make the principles of church building available to form a right public opinion on this subject within our churches. This book is better fitted to do this than any other that I know of. It was a happy thought to set down at the end of each chapter questions for further consideration. I can imagine no better course for many adult classes than is herein afforded."

"I shall use this book with my classes in the divinity school this year and I hope that I can use it with a class of teachers and church folk in the community. Also, I am using Dr. Tralle's 'Story Telling Lessons' and Miss Hartley's 'The Use of Projects in Religious Education' in connection with my course this year on methods of religious education."

The School of Religion at Lake Avenue Church

IN connection with the need for providing a better trained group of teachers for the religious educational work of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., under its new scheme of the three-period Bible school session, the church is conducting a school of religion, offering a course extending over three years, two terms each year, with from two to three courses each term. The first term of the course has just been completed, running through eleven weeks. Over 120 people took enough of the courses, with the four tests given, to receive credit for work done. 202 people were registered in the classes.

The courses have been offered in connection with the Wednesday night club of the church. Supper has been served at 6:20; prayer-meeting from 7:15 to 8:15; the first course in the outline of Hebrew history by Dr. Beaven from 8:15 to 9:00; and the following course on getting acquainted with the Bible by Prof. C. H. Moehlan from 9:00 to 9:45. The second term of the course begins the middle of January and extends to Easter.

The three-period session was begun by the Lake Avenue Church a year ago. The essential elements of it are as follows: Bible school beginning at 10:30, the same time as church, and the first period given to three-quarters of an hour of worship, when both parents and children gather in the main auditorium. The second period from 11:15 to 12:00, is a study period for children 14 years of age and under when they go out for departmental instruction. The third period, 12:10 to 1:00, is a study period for all adults and children in Bible school.

Under this plan the children receive as much additional instruction on Sunday as they would have received if the church had been able to put on an extra week-day religious instruction program, and this extra instruction is given to all of the children of the Bible school, not simply to those living in the vicinity of the church.

As contrasted with the old plan, the children receive ninety minutes of instruction each week instead of thirty, and forty-five minutes of worship with the best equipment which the church has to offer instead of twenty minutes of "opening exercises" as under the previous arrangement. The plan of the Lake Avenue Church is being studied and copied widely.

The emphasis upon religious education which it has brought into the life of the church has resulted in practically doubling the average attendance of the Bible school, which has risen from an average of 600 to about 1,125. Any who are interested in securing an outline of the plan and methods may write the Lake Avenue Baptist Church, Rochester, N. Y., for a folder just off the press.

B. Y. P. U. Notes

Nebraska:
The program of the Department of Religious Education includes: 1. A young people's council organized and effectively at work. 2. New constitution adopted by the young people brings them fully in line with the state convention constitution. 3. Missionary education council under the leadership of Rev. H. G. Smith, organized and started on an aggressive program of work. 4. Seven vacation schools conducted during the summer. 5. Large adult Bible class campaign on to double attendance in adult classes by December 4. 6. A summer assembly of young people proposed for the coming year.

New Brunswick
The first fall rally of the city B. Y. P. U. of St. John (N. B.) and vicinity was held in the Central Church, St. John. All the Baptist churches in the city were well represented. Rev. A. J. Vincent of Sackville, N. B., delivered the address of the evening on the power and definite consecration in the work of the church.

The Washington Conference—Forces That Function in the Background

By WILLIAM AXLING

A SMALL cohort of world leaders occupy the limelight in this conference. Around them are grouped officially appointed delegates, advisors and experts. Officially these make up the "Conference for the Limitation of Armaments." The unofficial membership of this conference, however, constitutes a host innumerable. When one scans the background he discovers that the mountain sides are massed with men and women who have enlisted in this war on war.

A People's Parley

This conference stands out unique in the annals of international peace gatherings as a conference not of governments but of the people of the nations represented. It was the voice of the people that compelled the calling of this conference. The definite demands of the people largely determined its agenda. The consuming interest of the people created the atmosphere in which the conference has been working. The backing of the people and the pressure of public opinion have swept obstacles aside and shoved the conference out along its present path of progress.

An up-to-date analysis of the letters, telegrams and resolutions received in Washington from the American public shows that almost 12,000,000 people have voiced their convictions regarding this conference and its goals and share in its work.

Of these 6,477,400 are members of Christian churches. Moreover, when to this number is added those who have simply given assurance that they are taking the conference on their hearts as they enter the Holy of Holies and are interceding in its behalf, we find that 10,000,000 American Christians have joined in this crusade to outlaw war. Has any conference in history had behind it 10,000,000 avowed intercessors? And surely this is but a fraction of the Christian men and women who are remembering the conference as they tarry in their chambers of communion. This indicates that a section of the church of Christ has faced its failure in connection with the world war and has resolved that Christ is an international Christ who summons his followers to put him at the center of world, as well as national and personal, affairs.

In addition to these members of Christian churches 3,458,976 members of women's clubs, 1,003,500 members of commercial clubs, 109,000 members of labor organizations, 56,000 students in our colleges and 199,068 members of municipal groups have rallied around the conference and are assisting it to achieve the highest possible success. Of America's more than 100,000,000 people only 403 have sent in a protest against the limitation of armaments!

The General Information Committee of the American Delegation is constantly keeping its finger on the public pulse of America. It not only reads and tabulates every telegram, letter and resolution sent in from individuals and organizations but it deals in a similar way with every editorial dealing with the conference printed in the thousands of America's daily papers and in other publications.

From England, France and the other nations represented there is an embryo army of newspaper men. Many of these stand at the top of their tribe and are world-known moulders of public opinion.

Miss Manicom of England, representative of the International Congress of Working Women, brought in person a petition for peace from the untold millions of working women of the world and presented it to Secretary Hughes as chairman of the conference.

The People of Japan in This Push for Peace

No people, outside of the American people, have made their will for peace and influence so potent at Washington as the Japanese. They have not trusted their cause wholly to the officially appointed Japanese delegation. The Protestant Christians of Japan sent Dr. H. Kozaki—the pattern pastor and the pride of the Japanese church—to communicate to the conference their passion for peace.

Japan has a branch of the "World Council of International Friendship through the Churches." There is also organized the "International Peace Association of Japan." Its president is Marquis Hachitsuka of the house of peers. Its vice-president is Mr. Hayakawa, a member of the house of peers and president of the Manchurian railroad. Its membership includes many members of parliament and men who stand high in the life of the empire. These two organizations sent as their representative Dr. K. Tsunajima, a prominent Tokyo pastor, who is here as the living link between the organized peace efforts of the East and those of the West.

The Christian women of Japan have been represented by that picturesque pleader for peace Madam Yajima. On her face glows eternal youth in spite of the fact that the winds of ninety winters have beat upon it. She came bearing the following prayer for peace signed by 10,000 of Japan's women: "Japanese womanhood prays for the success of the Washington conference and the dawn of a new epoch of higher and better understanding between nations." This she calls, "the mobilization of the hearts of Japan's women in favor of peace."

Madam Inoue, a distinguished educator, president of the Women's Peace Society of Japan is here with a message to the women of the world assuring them of the friendship of Japan's women and urging a women's crusade against war "because it destroys what women create."

Mr. K. Kawakami, secretary for Japan of the "Fellowship of Reconciliation," is here engaged in the gracious and Christ-like task of reconciling the men of the West to the men of the East.

Mr. D. Tagawa, member of parliament, represents that group of Japanese liberals who are ushering in a new political day for Japan. Their leader Mr. Y. Ozaki, member of parliament and ex-minister of justice, is in Japan pouring his life into a nation-wide campaign in favor of disarmament; while his colleague, Mr. Tagawa, holds up high world ideals here.

Mr. Tagawa is, moreover, one of Christ's noblemen. The history of his life of faith is one that thrills the souls of men.

The commercial interests of Japan are heart and soul in this drive for peace. An industrial commission made up of twenty-three of Japan's outstanding captain's of industry, representing $4,000,000,000 of capital and messengers of many of Japan's chambers of commerce timed its itinerary to America and to Washington so that it would be able to back up the program of this conference with its presence, prestige and far-reaching influence. Of these twenty-three industrial magnates two are aggressive Christian leaders, three more are members of Christian churches and another, Viscount Shibuzawa—the J. Pierpont Morgan of Japan—is an enthusiastic patron of Christian institutions in that empire.

Fifty-two representatives of the Japanese press are here functioning as the optic and sensory nerves of the Japanese people. More than that, at one stage in the conference they threw a bomb into the Japanese camp by lining up fifty-two strong, calling on the head of the Japanese delegation and demanding that Japan cease her dilly-dallying and accept the 5-5-3 ratio of naval limitation. Their action and daring was something decidedly new under Japan's sun and is a sign of the rising tide of democracy in that land. A good number of these men look out upon life from a personal Christian experience.

The Reach of Christian Missions

The recital of the sweep of the Christian influence exerted on this conference would be incomplete without a recognition of the Christian men on the oriental delegations. The Chinese delegation might well pass for a Christian deputation. All of its three chief delegates are products of Christian missions. Minister Sze, Chinese minister to the United States, Dr. Koo, Chinese minister to England and Dr. Wang, chief justice of the supreme court of China, are all graduates of St. John's College of Shanghai. Moreover, Dr. Wang is an out-and-out Christian jurist. Dr. Tyan, secretary general, and Mr. Tsao, assistant secretary general of the Chinese delegation are both Christian men. Mr. Wen, counsellor and Mr. Yen, technical advisor of the delegation, are active in Christian service, both being directors of the Y. M. C. A. in China. Secretaries Huang, Chang, Li, Lee and Si are all earnest followers of the Christ.

In the Japanese delegation Baron Kanda, Prince Tokugawa's right hand man, Mr. Fukai, financial advisor to the delegation, and Messrs. Sakai, Kanai, Mitani and Takagi, experts and secretaries, are fine representatives of Japan's Christian manhood.

Thus is it written in letters of light all over this conference that the religious dynamic lies deep down behind this drive for a new world brotherhood. It is the Christian men and women the world over, and those who like them are animated by Christian ideals and possessed by the Christian spirit, that burdened with the world's ills and inspired by a great hope dare to say in the name of the Prince of Peace, "It must not be again."

Boston Letter

By CHARLES H. WATSON

"I Go A-Fishing!"

THAT seems to be the purpose of many good churches in other parts of the country; and they consider the Old Bay State the original "fishing banks," judging from the frequency with which the long pole is in requisition. By the time this letter is in type, Ohio, Indiana and other predatory states nearer by may have "landed" some of our most competent and promising leaders.

But it is not an altogether one-sided ecclesiastical sport. Now and then Massachusetts "goes a-fishing," and shows the enterprising West how scientifically to catch a game creature and get him into the church basket. It is all done in abundant good nature. The East is flattered by the appreciation of the West; and the West is secretly proud when her best ministers are accounted worthy of promotion to the East. It is just like exchanging Christmas gifts; and we all keep a smiling.

The First Church, Brockton

Always the live, thrifty city, that makes men's shoes only, keeps ahead of the competing "fliver," so as to take none of their dust. Minds fixed upon men's shoes also insist upon men to fill them. Some of Brockton's manufacturers have wide renown because of their mastership; and the city's mechanics, merchants, and ministers, stretch up to the high scale. The solid and imposing modern plant of First Church is a characteristic Brockton institution. There is nothing better, of an ecclesiastical sort, in the city. The recent unanimous call to its pulpit of the Rev. Thomas S. Roy of London, Canada, was characteristic in its method. It assumed that a minister of self-respect, such as was wanted, would not enjoy stalking over the pulpit platform to have his "points" examined, so the church thoroughly investigated through its committee, and called Mr. Roy unanimously without hearing him. Flashing a speaking face on a large screen it was announced: "There is the minister you have called!" Then all sang "Praise God!"

Such calls are likely to be accepted. Mr. Roy is a graduate of Acadia and Newton, with a fine record, a clear note of conviction, warmly devoted to his calling, and a strong leader of young people.

E. Nelson Blake

The recent passing of Dea. Blake at Arlington, Mass., in his ninety-first year, will recall to many in the middle west, a layman who left his mark upon our Baptist enterprises in the seventies and eighties, taking high rank in business and in active Christian service. Mr. Blake was a steward of the Lord, conscientiously giving him a large proportion of his time and money. Because of his large benefactions he was mistakenly rated as a millionaire, but he carefully disavowed that, unwilling to be classed with many who had more than he ever possessed, and gave much less than he gave. At his funeral, his pastor stressed his faithfulness—his outstanding quality. In boyhood and youth as a son of his widowed mother, all through his manhood to old age as a son of God, in faithfulness he was preëminent. It takes many years, and much Christian grit and grace to produce such men. They grow like the cedars of Lebanon.

A Baptist Storm-Center

Only because he happens to be a Baptist, and has been given a necessary, though a tempestuous job; not being a quitter and being also unafraid, he is becoming unpopular with certain political types; many others are loving him for the enemies he makes. I am speaking of Harold D. Wilson the efficient federal enforcer of the prohibition law. What causes the politicians to stand aghast is that he is enforcing the law without fear or favor, up and down, right and left, top and bottom. One loquacious politician who himself is never backward in coming forward, calls Harold a conceited meddler with other people's business. He is a meddler all right, especially when the business is crooked; nor does he expect to learn modesty from his critics. His scalp would be in serious danger were not the decency of the community vigilantly behind him. Politicians rarely do a sealy trick when the people are looking.

President Clarence S. Barbour

Dr. Barbour has been delighting us in speeches and sermons. In all the elements that get fused into effective public address, he is an apostle of richness. Everybody hears him gladly. His address to the ministers on the zones of growth and power was a quickener. The clear analysis, the pervading substances, the masterly development, the old truth clothed in the modern habit, the resonant voice though modulated into tenderness, the suppressed passion sweeping everything onward as a tide. We had it all in speeches, and the Brookline Church has had it all in sermons. It makes a good atmosphere for the new pastor when he soon comes—Rev. Samuel Macaulay Lindsay. He will face a great opportunity in Brookline, beginning as he will with their enthusiastic confidence.

Dr. Charles H. Spalding

Before this is printed, this greatly beloved brother and father may have left us sorrowing. After two weeks of utter prostration, it seems now but a question of a few hours. In his eighty-fifth year, the weight of days gets too great for the light recuperative power. But he is radiantly ready for the crowning.

But the Young Men Flourish

This is the refreshing conviction left to the old fellows. How much younger it makes us feel to see our juniors coming into the great tasks with trained powers, and irradiated with a glow of promise.

Tabernacle Church, of Utica, N. Y., has discovered one of our very best, and unanimously called him without seeing him—Rev. E. M. A. Bleakney, pastor of First Church, Hyde Park. There are two other cases where our young ministers have been approached in the same way after thorough investigation. What does it mean? Does it mean that the ill-favored stalking-horse method of candidating is beginning to lose what little charm it had? Let us hope so, and that we are getting something more solid and certain.

Mr. Bleakney accepts the call to Utica to begin his pastorate March 1. He is in the early thirties, is an Acadia and Newton graduate, and during his pastorates at Stoneham and Hyde Park has put in five years at Harvard in special studies. The Utica Church makes a wise investment, and gets a man not only completely equipped scholastically, but one who has already proved that he can lead and develop a church into the largest success in its history. Too many capable young ministers are leaving the state, but we are training others who will raise the torch and wield the cycle.

Christmas Sunday Morning

By BENJAMIN OTTO

NO, I did not go to church. Everybody else seemed to be going—to hear the music and the sermon, to meet the folks home for the holidays. I went to the theater. Of course, it was an unusual performance which drew me there. And strange but true, when the performance was concluded and the scenery shifted, they showed me the fine courtesy of inviting me to make the final address, though I had only come to be a spectator and listener. I spoke, in English, of course, on the "Christ of History, the Need of Men and Nations Today." However, the more than 400 Polish men—and women scattered here and there among them—listened attentively until the close and applauded to the echo.

Who were these men and what had brought them together Christmas morning? They were members and friends of the Polish Educational and National Alliance of Chicago—many of them socialists, not a few avowed "unbelievers," some Jews, but most of them by descent members of the Roman Catholic church. They had rented the theater for the occasion; their male chorus of forty voices, a violinist, and a young Jewess as piano soloist, had provided the music. And they had invited our Polish Baptist pastor, Rev. J. Frydryk, to lecture to them on "Jesus of Nazareth." What an opportunity! And he made good use of it. For more than a month he had given himself to preparation for this occasion. And then for an hour and a quarter with fervent eloquence he told about the Lord whom he adores and delights to serve. Expressions of approval and applause were frequent.

The second speaker was the cultured and refined Mr. Izycki, until recently the Polish vice-consul, but dismissed for too great interest in the Polish Baptist church and too hearty approval of former lectures by the Baptist pastor before this body, on "Religious Freedom," "Church and State," "The Bible," etc. (Dark and crooked are the ways of Rome.) The ex-vice-consul was followed by a Mr. Hinkelman, an eloquent Polish Jew and lawyer. My interpreter, an ardent and devout Christian, told me how reverently and beautifully both these gentlemen added their testimony to the words of the Baptist preacher and laid their offering of frankincense before the Child in the manger.

When the audience was dismissed and scores of the men sought the speakers to give expression to their appreciation of their addresses, one could but feel that Christ had been honored that day in Chopin Theater quite as much as in the orthodox church building; and we had seen the prophet's words fulfilled: "I was found of them that sought me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after me."

Rejoicing at Boulder

There is great rejoicing among the Baptists of Boulder over the underwriting of $125,000 for a new church in the university city of Colorado. The campaign closed at 10 p. m. Dec. 25. The goal was $125,000 and the total pledges $125,262. This included two expectancies, one for $5,000, the other for $10,000, which the church considers perfectly sure. The old church property valued at $12,000, and the new lot valued at $10,000 are not included in the $125,262. There were 309 pledges made. The largest one was for $10,000, and it was this pledge that furnished leadership that won. There were other pledges of $5,000 and $6,000. One brother whom the pastor baptized some months ago pledged $6,000 in what is equivalent to cash. The success of the campaign was due to the leadership of Dr. F. H. Divine of Brooklyn, N. Y. His preaching, methods and personality won the hearts of our people from the first and they are still praising him. Mr. George E. Merrill, architect-secretary of the Home Mission Society, is on his way to Boulder to plan the building and as soon as is possible the work will begin. Boulder is the home of the Colorado State University where 5,000 students come annually. The membership of the church is 500. The Sunday school has an enrollment of 350. The city has a population of 16,000 and the need for a new Baptist church building is great.—J. H. SHEEN, pastor.

IN THE DEATH OF REV. DENNIS DONOVAN there has passed from the ranks of New England Baptist ministers one who served churches for a half century. His death occurred at the home of his son Prof. W. N. Donovan, of the Newton Theological Institution, Dec. 15. Brother Donovan came to America from Ireland in 1847 where he was born in 1837. His education was obtained at the University of Vermont and at the Newton Theological Institution where he graduated in 1867. He held pastorates in Massachusetts, New York, and at Cornish Flat and South Lyndeboro, N. H. South Lyndeboro was his last pastorate where he had served for thirty-two years. He retired from active work in 1918 and has since lived with his son in Newton Centre. Mr. Donovan served on the board of trustees of the New Hampshire Convention from 1911 to 1916. His long ministry at South Lyndeboro was of the kind that will tell for long years to come. He was always held in high esteem and did his work with a dignity that becomes a minister of the gospel. He honored his Master in all that he undertook.

ON DECEMBER 18 AND 19 THE WINSTED and Torrington churches united in a conference held in the church at Torrington. As the pastor of the Winsted church serves the Colebrook churches these were included also. Stewardship, evangelism, missions and religious education were considered and practical methods discussed. Dr. A. B. Coats, Dr. J. N. Lackey, Rev. E. E. Gates, Rev. W. T. Thayer, Mrs. W. T. Thayer, Mrs. H. B. Sloat, Rev. Samuel Johnson and the director of promotion participated in the program.

THE FIRST CHURCH, BRIDGEPORT, Rev. D. B. MacQueen, pastor, has just closed a seven weeks' missionary and educational institute in which the average attendance per week on Wednesday night was 101. people's union, full of life and daring, is putting on a winning program. The male chorus is an important factor in helping the pastor build up a growing audience.

AT THE FIRST CHURCH, NEW LONDON, Rev. Chester H. Howe, pastor, things are doing. The church family night has been adopted for prayer meeting night with the result that attendance at the prayer meeting has doubled. The Bible school of the church now has the largest enrollment in its history. On Dec. 11 there was a record attendance. The popular people's service on Sunday evenings is crowding the people into the gallery. The evangelistic messages have resulted in definite decisions. The ordinance of baptism has been administered frequently. On Christmas Sunday one of the professors of the Connecticut College for Women was baptized.

THE WEST HAVEN CHURCH organized in 1915 laid the corner stone of the new church building on Sunday, Dec. 11, at 3 p. m., Rev. James McGee made the address, Rev. A. B. Coats offered the prayer, Rev. W. H. Wakefield, Jr., pastor of the church, laid the corner stone. The box to be placed under the corner stone was presented by W. E. Fiske, senior deacon. Others participating in the service were Rev. E. E. Gates, W. R. Dixon and Richard Jones.

AT THE MINISTERS' MEETING in the First Church, New Haven, a number of the ministers present from the churches of the New Haven Association voted to commit themselves to the denominational program of education in Christian stewardship, and further voted to take such steps as were necessary to interest all the pastors and churches of the association to the end that a League of Stewards be organized in every church in the association. The program was presented to the ministers by Rev. D. P. Gaines of Waterbury.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE OLIVET CHURCH, WEST CHESTER, just closed a church school of missions. It reports an enrollment of sixty-six with an average attendance of fifty. The sessions were held on Wednesday evenings and greatly increased attendance at prayer meetings.

PASTOR R. D. MINCH is much encouraged by the result of evangelistic meetings recently held in the church of which he is pastor in the Wayne Association. He was assisted by Brethren R. M. Honeyman and W. A. MacKensie. There were fifty-three professions of faith.

KEYSTONE ACADEMY marked the week before Christmas with a round of special activities. On Monday evening the Music Department gave a recital of piano and voice which drew a crowd to the chapel; Tuesday evening, Prof. F. G. Quevedo delivered an illustrated lecture on Porto Rico, and on Wednesday evening, at the Factoryville Church, Robert O. Bowman, impersonator, appeared in the Keystone Academy Lyceum Course.

THE WYOMING AND WELSH ASSOCIATIONS have united their forces to encourage evangelistic work among their churches. A joint committee of two representatives from each association has communicated with all the churches and is securing their co-operation.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF LANSFORD celebrated the third anniversary of the dedication of its new building, on Sunday, Dec. 4. Rev. Leroy Stephens, delivered the morning sermon and Rev. W. G. Russell preached at the afternoon session and gave an address in the evening. Rev. John Pounder, pastor of the church, delivered the historical address at the evening service. He came to the church a little over four years ago when it was laboring under a debt of $15,000, with an uncompleted building upon which work had been at a standstill for three years. Under his leadership the building was completed in thirteen months, and during the four years of his pastorate approximately $50,000 has been raised. Following the historical address the pastor applied the match to a note for $5300, final payment upon which had been made within the previous two weeks. He then made an appeal for funds by which $2100 was raised, upon which he assured the members of the church and congregation that they would be free from every cent of debt by the end of the year.

Dr. Slocum who was to have been the speaker for the morning, was ill. His subject was to have been the work of the Board of Promotion. He sent an able substitute in the person of Mr. W. D. ## Chicago Baptists and the New World Movement Crisis

In view of the seriousness of the present financial crisis of the New World Movement, the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Chicago convened a special meeting of the pastors of the association at Baptist Headquarters on Dec. 29, to consider what action might be taken by the churches of the association. There was a good representation of the pastors, presided over by Dr. R. N. Van Doren, moderator of the association, and a splendid spirit of co-operation was manifested.

Dr. Benj. Otto, superintendent of the Executive Council, stated the object of the meeting, drawing particular attention to the denominational situation as presented in THE BAPTIST of Dec. 17 and 24. He urged as a special motive to the taking of a deep practical interest in the matter, various important advantages which had accrued and were accruing to the Baptist work within the association during the last year or two, largely by virtue of the financial assistance received from the New World Movement.

The subject having been sympathetically and earnestly discussed, the motion of Dr. Carl D. Case prevailed: "That every church in the association be urged to hold in the immediate future a conference (either of its official board or entire membership) on our present denominational situation, and that the churches invite, under the advice of Dr. Benj. Otto, denominational representatives to attend these conferences to give necessary information and advice."

The following motion of Rev. C. B. Althoff was also carried: "That we concur in the plans of the New World Movement stewardship and tithing campaign to take place in February, and that we encourage our churches to participate in it." This latter movement is aimed to benefit the work of the local churches, as well as to promote the success of the New World Movement.—A. C. HODGSON, secretary.

Congo Conferences

the S. S. Oregon and reached Ntondo late that night. We were heartily welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Rodgers and Mr. and Mrs. Marsh. Even by moonlight, "Welcome to Ntondo" glowed in letters of red and green. In a short report one cannot tell of the beautiful Ntondo on the shore of marvelous Lac Ntumba, but remember that the adjectives have been carefully chosen.

With no rest from the fatigue of the general conference we commenced work the next morning and kept hard at the task until late Sunday night. Besides the many details connected with our work including the careful review of appropriations needed, the designation of missionaries and the call for new missionaries, the auditing of accounts, the reading and discussing of committee reports, this conference undertook the study and formation of a comprehensive mission policy on medical, industrial, educational and evangelistic work.

Under the inspiration and guidance of Doctor Lerrigo a splendid policy was worked out and adopted. This could not have been done so easily or quickly had we not been able to check each item with the policy of the board as explained and presented by Doctor Lerrigo. Now that we have a definite policy to work toward and the board knows through Doctor Lerrigo just what we need, the kind of men and women sought and the kind of task they will be expected to undertake, we can reasonably hope that the men and women and the money we need will be forthcoming.

Our conference took up enthusiastically every cooperative effort in which our help is sought by the general conference and we stand pledged to push every effort which should make for efficiency and economy in men and money in order that the gospel may speedily be given to the Congo and that churches and schools may be established for the all-around development of our Congo Christian communities which we hope will some day be able to take a larger share in the spread of the gospel to their own benighted African brothers.

WHAT DO CHILDREN LIKE TO SING?

A contributor to "Religious Education" sent out a questionnaire to a large number of Sunday-school boys and girls asking them to name their favorite hymns. Four hundred and seventy-four boys and girls between the ages of eight and twenty years sent replies. These boys and girls were in the Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist and Episcopalian denominations. The replies were much to their credit, for almost without exception they named the fine old hymns full of spiritual significance as their choice. Among those hymns were "Abide With Me," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and forty of the young people named "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty" as their choice. It might not be supposed that young people would care for "Lead, Kindly Light," but thirty-three of the boys and girls named this beautiful hymn as their favorite. None of the comparatively new and lively hymns received many votes although a few of the boys and girls manifested a preference for these hymns. The writer who sent out this questionnaire gives us something to think about in selecting songs for the Sunday school when he says:

"In view of the answers to the questionnaire, we are forced to the conclusion that it is a mistake to suppose the cheaper, lighter music is that which young people want. If they like the best give them the best. What they like best they will sing best. . . . The fault with the present situation is not with the taste of the children, but with the mistaken notion of adults as to what children respect and enjoy."

It is necessary, if the Sunday-school music is to be what it should be, that the leader should keep a careful record of the hymns sung by the school. He should know what hymns the school can sing, and when they have been used, as accurately as the leader of a symphony orchestra knows its repertoire, and on what occasion the various numbers have been used.

The ideal for Sunday-school music is not quantity, but quality, not how many hymns can be sung, but how many hymns can be sung with appreciation and joy.—FELIX FAXON in The New Century Teachers' Monthly.

WHAT VOICE DO YOU SING?

There are many misplaced singers in our choirs. Natural sopranos sing in the alto section, natural altos make attempts at the high notes of the soprano, basses and baritones try tenor stunts, and tenors vainly endeavor to strike bottom in the bass regions. Sometimes that cannot very well be helped. There are not enough voices available for the several parts, as often happens in smaller choirs, and then some one valiantly steps into the breach and tries to fill it as best he or she can. All honor to such. More often, however, such conditions are brought about by ill-advised judgment on the part of the singer himself, for they are usually placed into the voice for which they themselves express a decided preference, unless the director should consider them simply impossible there. Now the singer's preference is not always determined by the natural quality of the singer's voice, but quite often by the peculiar bent of the singer's ambition. Just why should a natural alto wish to sing soprano? And just why should a tolerable bass insist on poor tenoring? It harms a voice to sing constantly in the extremes of its compass or even beyond it. It gives the audience little pleasure indeed to listen to it. And it robs the singer of the opportunity to develop his voice for pleasing and inspiring service where it can best be rendered.

ORGAN NOTES

Not every hymn-tune in the modern hymnals is open to every choir and congregation. In many cases the music is quite difficult, and to attempt it without the requisite skill is to invite disaster and make what might otherwise be a hearty service, a very depressing affair.

We notice that organists often, when playing transcriptions, neglect to consider the selection organistic but follow the orthodox interpretation associated with the original form whether for piano or other instruments. This, in our opinion, is wrong. Much better results will be secured by performing a transcription purely as an organ composition irrespective of its original arrangement. This last might entail some changes in tempo and accentuation, but the changes would be justifiable, and would do greater credit to the transcriber's work.

A successful choirmaster in a small town not far from New York always, when submitting a new anthem to his choir, goes over the music from beginning to end, having the organ interludes played carefully and the solos either sung or hummed. In this way, he claims, the choir grasps the anthem in its entirety and more quickly learns it. The writer has heard other choirmasters recommend the same or similar scheme for the quick mastery of numbers.

We have often heard of organ recitals being "frosts," but only when they had little or no advertising.

Some organists seem afraid to play loudly during the opening voluntary. They use poor judgment. Nothing is grander and more likely to uplift one's spirit to receive the benefit of the service to come than the full, rich tones of the king of instruments skillfully presented.

Sometimes after an organ selection in a service, organists transpose hymn tunes which follow almost immediately. Their excuse is that a new and "distant" key breaking in upon the effect obtained by their voluntary is unpleasant. It is good to have the key sequence of an organ number and a consequent hymn tune somewhat relative. But the key of a hymn should not, under ordinary circumstances, be changed because it upsets the musical calculations of the congregation, which in churches, in which hymnals with the complete words and music are used, are often considerable. A far better scheme than transcription is the addition of short modulatory dimuendo to the voluntary. Then after the short pause before the hymn the congregation will accept the new key without a definite recollection of that of the organ piece.

"It Is to Laugh"

In conversation with Muriel, Myrtle confidentially announced that the engagement of their mutual friend Melissa to the young minister was off.

"She told me he was awfully nice in many ways," went on Myrtle, "but he was horribly jealous and took undue advantage of his position."

"How was that?"

"Well, every time she had an engagement to motor with some other man, he would pray for a storm."

Willie (to his father, who had recently married the second time)—There's a shop in the High Street just like you, daddie.

Father—Shop like me. What do you mean?

Willie (getting near to the door)—Why, it's under entirely new management.—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Pat to Mike: "Did you hear that England was going to set Ireland free?"

Mike: "They are?"

Pat: "Yes."

Mike: "And we don't have to fight any longer for it?"

Pat: "No."

Mike: "Ain't that just like the dirty English?"—Treat 'Em Square.

An English story tells of a merchant finding his clerk on the floor looking dazed and battered.

"What happened?" he inquired.

"An Irishman came in for an overcoat, and I asked him if he wanted an ulster," replied the vanquished one.—Boston Transcript.

He had been fishing, but with bad luck. On his way home he entered a fishmonger's shop and said to the dealer: "Just stand over there and throw me five of the biggest of those trout?"

"Throw 'em? What for?" asked the dealer, in amazement.

"I want to tell the family I caught 'em. I may be a poor fisherman, but I'm no liar."—Presbyterian Banner.

Some people in England have been talking of starting a "Jolly Monday Club," the object of which is to take the blueness out of the first day of the week. The members will be pledged to smile directly they awake in the morning and to keep smiling all day. They are to greet every one with "A happy new week to you." Why not? they ask, since you can't have a happy year unless you have happy weeks.

A few of the proposed rules for members are:

A husband must say: "Good-bye, darling; I'm glad it's Monday, so that I can go to the office and earn more money for you and the dear children."

Wife to neighbor: "Good morning, Mrs. Blank. How delightful it is that washing day has come round again."

Employer (to himself): "Monday again. Thank goodness! No more wages to pay until next Saturday."

While the cat is supposed to purr: "So glad it's Monday. The house won't be crowded and I can snooze again in my favorite chair."

WORLD SURVEY NUMBER PART TWO

COLGATE UNIVERSITY CHAPEL

THE new Colgate University chapel was the gift of Miss Mary Colgate of Yonkers, N. Y., in memory of her father James B. Colgate. The edifice is one hundred fourteen feet by sixty-five feet, is built of stone taken from the University quarry, with limestone trimmings, to correspond with the other stone buildings on the campus. The building is colonial in its style of architecture, with a Doric portico, with limestone columns and pediments facing the quadrangle, and with an octagonal belfry ninety-six feet high. The auditorium, with balconies on three sides, seats 1000 people. A devotional service is held in this building four days each week and these services exert most helpful influences upon the lives of the 675 students at Colgate.

Fresh from the Field

The death of William Hale Maynard occurred at his home in Hamilton, N. Y., Dec. 24. Dr. Maynard was eighty-six years of age, and had been connected with the faculty of the Theological Seminary of Colgate University since 1875. He was born in Waterville, N. Y., was graduated from Hamilton College with the degree of A.B. in 1854, and from the Colgate Seminary with the degree of B.D. in 1858. He was ordained at Cohoes, N. Y., and served as pastor of the Baptist Church there for nine years. He held pastorates also at Ft. Covington, Malone and Auburn, N. Y., and became professor of ecclesiastical history in the University in 1875. Since 1918 he has been professor emeritus. He is survived by his wife and by his daughter, Mrs. Cornelius S. Schaible, whose husband is professor of Bible and history in Coker college, Harts-ville, S. C. Because of his ability as a preacher, Dr. Maynard was much sought for by churches needing a speaker for special occasions, and as a skilled and consecrated teacher he left a hopeful impress on the lives of hundreds of seminary students.

The marriage of Margaret Wallace, daughter of Mrs. James Wallace, of Hamilton, N. Y., and Dr. John J. Frederick Vichert, dean of the Colgate Theological Seminary, was solemnized at Hamilton, December 27.

There has recently been organized a Baptist church in La Villa de Guadalupe, one of the suburbs of Mexico City and the heart of Roman Catholic fanaticism for all Mexico. The church is weak and poor, like any infant. It has begun its separate existence with a pledge of $250 per month, American money, toward the pastor's salary. This is the right beginning for a Baptist church that looks forward to ultimate self-support. It is encouraging to know that in this little village abounding in costly shrines and temples, and frequented by tens of thousands of pilgrims every year from all over Mexico, there is this witness of the gospel in its purity.

Mr. E. W. Watson, head of the music department of our college at Cristo, Cuba, keeps his soul refreshed by preaching each Sunday in English to a group of Jamaicans, many of whom are Baptists. These Jamaicans come to Cuba in search of larger opportunities.

Three hundred and fifty foreign students were guests of Mrs. Cyrus H. McCormick and the Student Department of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. at a Christmas dinner on Dec. 28. Twenty-eight nationalities were represented by the students present. The program included Christmas greetings from several lands, a short talk by Cyrus H. McCormick and an address by Bishop Thomas Nicholson on "The Spirit of Christmas." Mr. W. F. Hypes, president of the board of managers of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. presided at the meeting. One of the interesting features of the meeting was the extraordinary applause which greeted the two German students who were introduced to the gathering.

The Tabernacle Church of Chicago gave to its retiring pastor, Rev. L. J. Velte, a reception on the evening of December 28, at which time, besides an expression of good will, it presented him with a substantial purse of money. Mr. Velte is open to engagements with churches which may be in need of the service he can render.

Rev. Jacob David, a graduate of Brown Univ. in 1899 and of Newton in 1901, since which time he has been engaged in educational work in Urmia, Persia, is now in this country. His family is staying with his brothers in Chicago while he is working for the Near East Relief in Mississippi and other southern states. Mr. David passed through the Turkish massacres in Persia and only by the providence of God escaped with his life. Both he and his family were in imminent danger and had a number of hair-breadth escapes. His friends will be interested to know that letters addressed to him at 310 Garfield Ave., Chicago, will be forwarded.

The oldest house in Germany is found at Winkel in the Rhineland. It was the property of the famous Bishop Rhabanus Maurus and he died in it in 830.

A well-known correspondent for the secular press has figured it out that American missionary activity in the Far East underlies the present disarmament conference and explains the "astounding support" given it by the American people.

According as a man is a faithful steward or not, he becomes:

In acquiring, either a benefactor or an exactor;

In spending, a provider or a prodigal;

In saving, a conservator or a miser;

In giving, a philanthropist or a patronizer;

In proportioning, a partner or a legalist;

In accounting, a creditor or a debtor;

In influencing others, a stepping-stone or a stumbling-block.

DAVID MCCONAUGHY.

In the section lying within the purview of the agenda are 4100 American missionaries at work, with an annual budget of $11,000,000. This comes, moreover, in small contributions from many people.

The World Friendship Information Bureau and Clearing House, Room 1010 Arts Bldg., Chicago, Ill., is sending out the suggestion that local groups of people in this country write to some group similar to their own in Japan, China, Great Britain, France, Italy and Mexico, expressing their friendly feeling toward members of those groups, telling how they feel about mutual disarmament and the eventual outlawing of war, and relating something of what is being done in this country toward these ends. Such an exchange of letters between mothers' clubs, student groups, school children, Bible classes, professional societies, sent out early in January, from thousands of groups, would carry a message from America, for the new year, that would permeate the communities of these countries.

As a result of the increased emphasis that was placed upon evangelism by Southern Baptists during the past year, there was a total of 250,814 baptisms administered in the local churches cooperating with the convention during the associational year that closed Dec. 1. It is announced by the headquarters of the 75 Million Campaign. This breaks all records for baptisms among Southern Baptists and exceeds their previous high mark of 173,595, attained last year, by 44.5 per cent. Two causes are regarded

The Women's Goals in the Continuation Campaign

IT seems desirable to reach the constituency of the two women's societies, through our denominational papers, with a fuller statement of the change in the goals of the Continuation Campaign than was possible in the article sent to those papers by a committee of the Administrative Committee.

Since the meeting of the General Board of Promotion in Indianapolis in November, the Continuation Campaign Committee has held itself in readiness to make such adjustments in its program or goals as might be made advisable by the action of the National Laymen's Council when it was organized. The committee recognized that the judgment of a group of our leading laymen, based upon their own knowledge and experience of business conditions and their forecast for the coming months, would have great weight with the entire constituency of the denomination and that the success of the Continuation Campaign would be more fully assured by accepting their viewpoint and working in harmony with their judgment.

When, therefore, a sub-committee of the Continuation Campaign Committee was asked to meet the executive committee of the National Laymen's Council and it was learned that the executive committee believed that the wise course to pursue was to secure present gifts for the present emergency, thereby providing for the operating budgets and debts of the Board of Promotion and of all the cooperating boards and affiliating organizations, the committee cheerfully assented on behalf of the Continuation Campaign Committee to the necessary change in its program. At the meeting of the Administrative Committee on Dec. 29, the change in the denominational program recommended by the National Laymen's Council and endorsed by the Continuation Campaign Committee was approved by the Administrative Committee.

Fortunately, this involves for the Continuation Campaign a change in but one of the goals of the campaign and no change in the figures of that goal. It means that we will still seek for $2,000,000 and for the payment of $2,000,000 on or before April 30, 1922. This goal will be more strongly pressed than ever since all our energies will be concentrated upon it. Wherever three-year pledges can be secured, they will be gladly accepted, but the main objective will be the $2,000,000 pledged and paid during this fiscal year.

We recognize the fact that any change in the midst of a great campaign is undesirable unless the reason therefor is unanswerable. In this case, we believe it is unanswerable. We believe also that our great constituency will rejoice with us that the laymen have organized and are putting their strength under the denominational burden and will further rejoice that the work of the laymen and the women is to be along parallel lines during the vitally important months before us.

We are sure that the women of every state, association and church will respond heartily to this call to gird ourselves anew in faith and prayer and effort to bring to pass through the power of God the great undertaking to which we have given our hearts and our hands and ourselves.

On behalf of the Continuation Campaign Committee,

ALICE B. COLEMAN, Chairman.

Men

The MASTER OF MEN commanded a group of MEN to give his gospel to all MEN; therefore missions is a job for MEN. As a MAN we want you to help us get all the MEN in your church to read the LAYMEN'S NUMBER of THE BAPTIST. This will be the issue of Jan. 28. If the MEN of your church have done some distinctive piece of work drop the editors a word about it at once. MEN, I almost forgot to say that I appropriated the substance of this appeal from one by Dr. F. G. Cressey of Ohio, our director of promotion in that state.

Killam's Kollum

A Religious Bringing Up Father

Secretary Cress of Montana says: "It (the Kollum) is good publicity and good for home consumption. It is a kind of religious 'Bringing up Father.'" Father usually needs religious bringing up. We believe that many fathers, and mothers too, will live to see the day when they realize that it is a sore mistake to furnish the home with the daily paper, the various story magazines and trade papers and neglect entirely the church journals. That is just what the very great majority of Baptist parents are now doing. Father needs some religious bringing up. We rejoice to know that the young people through their organizations are going to remedy this condition.

What About Subscriptions?

Now this is a rather personal question but we are glad to report that quite a number of the subscribers to THE BAPTIST face the new year with a clear conscience as far as their financial obligations to the paper are concerned. Our poor book-keeper is working over-time. She says that some days the subscriptions alone run more than $700. So be it. But, kind reader, you have not discharged all your obligations to the paper when you pay your bill. It is not our paper, it is your paper. Speak to your friends. Find a way to secure a larger list in your church. Go the limit to make the paper serve the denomination. Of course you will. More "shop talk."

How Is This?

"You do not need a new department of methods as much as you need a new manner of reporting news by the pastors and churches. Leave off 'the thunders against sin' and tell us in a line or two how he worked. Tell us of the methods he used to secure attention and interest. In a recent number of THE BAPTIST some one reported, 'Stewardship is becoming operative in many hearts and lives.' Just what did he mean and how was the desirable result attained? Again, 'The Sunday school is bounding ahead in enrollment.' Now, why not tell us how it happened? Give us the method and leave out the oratory. Another, 'Congregations are steadily increasing.' Why not tell us what he did to get the crowd, even that would be better advertising." And this from a minister! In his suggestions Rev. A. B. Carson, Cape Girardeau, Mo., says a number of things which the editor's kind heart would not permit him to say. What do you think of the doctrine? A large part of THE BAPTIST is made up of news. Can we make the news of more help to other folks?

Fresh from the Field

as chiefly responsible for this large showing in the number of baptisms: First, the readiness of the people to hear the gospel, and second, the better organization of the Southern Baptists for going afield after the lost.

The National W. C. T. U. is putting out a special suggested program for church services on Jan. 16, which is the second anniversary of the national constitutional prohibition victory.

The retirement of Dr. S. Earl Taylor from the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Church was a severe blow to that organization. It has become evident that the health of Dr. Taylor is permanently impaired, his condition compelling him to live in Arizona. The board of bishops has been looking for a successor and has finally chosen Dr. Titus Lowe of Omaha. Dr. Lowe studied at Ohio Wesleyan and at Western Theological Seminary. He spent five years as pastor of Thoburn Methodist Church of Calcutta. In more recent years he has held prominent American pastorates and has served on the Board of Foreign Missions of his denomination.

The reports of relief work in the various European countries, made possible by the response of Baptists in several parts of the world to the program outlined by the London Conference in the summer of 1920, show that the most urgent needs of many thousands of people have been met. While Baptists in other countries have made an excellent response, in the nature of the case it was necessary for our denominational groups in America to furnish the larger part of the money required for the execution of the program. Here in America the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Convention and our own Foreign Mission Society have cooperated heartily, each of the two organizations furnishing $166,666 per annum. The volume of suffering in Northern Europe, where our Foreign Mission Society is interested in the support of missionary effort, has been greater than in the more southern regions where the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Convention is lending assistance to the churches in the conduct of their regular work, but our Southern brethren have very graciously desired to have their funds used where the suffering is greatest, regardless of any other consideration. At its last meeting the board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society took action expressing its appreciation of the magnanimous cooperation of the Southern Board. The money used by the Foreign Mission Society in its relief work in Europe is being contributed in special offerings by the churches for that purpose. A part of the special Christmas offering of the Sunday schools will be used in support of this relief program.

Send the Book of Remembrance to a Missionary

SUPPOSE every one of our missionaries, in this country and abroad, could be provided with the Book of Remembrance. They would all use it, you may be very sure. And what an addition they would make to the fellowship of definite, personal prayer made possible by the book!

Why not send a copy to some missionary? You can select your own representative. Or if you will send twenty-five cents to the Secy. of Literature of the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, asking that a copy be sent to a missionary, he will mail it and will send you the name of the missionary to whom it is sent. Then of course you will pray for that missionary on his

NO. 1. THANKSGIVING SEASICKNESS

IT WAS Thanksgiving Day and I was seasick.

Was there ever an epicurean tragedy comparable to this? Who would ever have imagined associating two words whose ideas were so diametrically opposite in their gastronomic significance. Yet it was a fact for it was Thanksgiving Day and I was seasick. It was not necessary to prove it. I admitted it. On a day to which the average, healthy, normal, wholesome American looks forward with keen anticipation as an occasion, aside from its deeper spiritual meaning, for the maximum gratification of an average, healthy, normal, wholesome appetite I was being tossed to and fro in my narrow bunk and held in the "fell clutch" of that merciless maritime malady which involves total abstinence from all things good for food.

The steamer "Esthonia," on which I sailed, with her immense cargo of relief supplies contributed by 4,000 Baptist churches for distribution in Northern and Central Europe left New York on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 23. A storm was in the making and no sooner had we passed Sandy Hook than the winds seized hold of the ship and she began that rolling that continued for practically a week. Many times I wondered why they had built engines in the ship for it seemed to me that all that was necessary was to tow her out of the harbor, set her adrift and she would roll herself all the way across to Russia. Verily I believe she would roll even in the smooth swan pond of the Boston Public Garden. Pretty soon I began to feel those premonitory symptoms so readily recognizable by all veteran seasickers. Calmly, silently, regretfully I retired to my cabin and prepared to meet my fate.

When morning dawned the ship was on the broad expanse of the high seas and they were appropriately named high seas. From my cabin porthole I could hear the waves break against the sides of the ship each wave sending a shock through her hull that made her tremble from bow to stern. In my cabin my bags and my shoes began a merry chase across the floor, but little did I care for with bitterness I realized that it was Thanksgiving Day and that I was miserably seasick. All the grim jokes of seasickness, which had heretofore seemed so amusing with their sardonic humor when told at the expense of others, now became hideous leering realities that mocked me in my dire affliction. The captain called at my cabin and facetiously remarked that he was on his way to the engine room in order to see if anything was wrong. It did not seem to him that the ship was moving and he was wondering whether we were still tied up at the pier. A fellow traveler, sympathetically inclined, called and recommended a remedy which he had understood had always been quite effective. It was a sandwich made of raw meat and a glass of beer! When I heard that I turned my face to the wall in utter despair. To cap the climax the steward called and showed me the dinner menu. Vaguely I remember that it included asparagus soup, filet of sole, celery and olives, roast turkey cooked as only an expert Danish chef knows how to cook him, the usual line of vegetables, Danish pastry, fruit and coffee. Instead of stimulating my appetite this menu card only served to accentuate my abhorrence of all things to eat. Once more I sadly realized that it was Thanksgiving Day and that I was seasick.

Thus the day came and passed away. Late in the evening as I was looking forward to blissful unconsciousness a wonderfully comforting thought came to me. Truly my condition was an affliction but was it not also a rare privilege? How few people there were who had been seasick on Thanksgiving Day! It was even possible that I was the only Baptist in the Northern Baptist Convention who had had this distressing experience! What a distinction! At once my feverish brain conceived a brilliant idea. I would organize immediately the "Amalgamated Association of Thanksgiving Day Seasickers," limited in membership only to those whose experience had been similar to my own. It would be a choice, select fraternity and membership in it would be a coveted honor.

Comforted by this new suggestion I joyfully prepared for the night. As the mountainous waves kept tossing the ship lengthwise, sideways and apparently in every direction of the compass there came to my ears the words and the music of that well-known song "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep." I had never fully appreciated the sentiment and the poetic rhapsody of the closing refrain and now as I was being tossed up and down as in some gigantic cradle I seemed to hear over and over again that closing refrain:

"Then calm and peaceful I shall slee-ee-eep Rocked in the cradle of the deep."

As I was drifting peacefully into that dreamy blissful state of gradually approaching oblivion the words in the last line suddenly seemed to change and in the bewildered disordered state of my imagination I seemed to hear some great concert artist singing to an overcrowded audience:

"Then calm and peaceful I shall slee-ee-eep Rolled in my blankets and my sheet."

And just before absolute unconsciousness seized my brain an immense wave crashing against the side of the ship below my cabin porthole reminded me too painfully again that it had been Thanksgiving Day and that I had been seasick.

birthday, and perhaps you will write him a letter, too. The missionaries of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society have been provided with copies, but few of the representatives of the other societies have the book.

Here is a fine plan! Order a copy for your missionary today.

The Baptist

Look Carefully, Baptists, Where You Walk

BAPTISTS have always been sufferers from a union of church and state. Recent history in Roumania and elsewhere but repeats the past. The Established Church of England had no use for Baptists. The church of the standing order in Massachusetts Bay Colony made life as uncomfortable for them as possible. It compelled Henry Dunster, the first president of Harvard College, to flee to Plymouth Colony and banished Roger Williams. The doors of the church building of the First Baptist Church of Boston were nailed up by order of the Court.

If their principles had not led Baptists to oppose such a union, their experience would certainly have done so. But as a matter of fact their insistence upon a spiritual religion made inevitable the separation of church and state. They could not and would not acknowledge the right of any secular body to interfere in matters of religion. The glory of having been among the earliest, if they were not indeed the very earliest, advocates of religious freedom belongs to them and they have never been slow to claim it.

The influence of Virginia Baptists is said to have been responsible for the introduction into the Constitution of the United States of that provision which declares that Congress shall never make provision for an establishment of religion.

Baptists, therefore, should be the last to take any action looking toward such a union of church and state. For this reason we quote the following from a recent issue of the Western Recorder, of Louisville, a staunch opponent of evolution in all its forms, and especially of Darwinism: "On Dec. 8, Hon. Wm. J. Bryan spoke before the Florida Baptist Convention, meeting at Miami, on the danger to the world of the theories of Darwinism. Following the address, the convention asked Mr. Bryan to draw up a program of legislation to be sent to the Florida legislature, requesting that body to pass an act prohibiting the teaching of anything in the schools and colleges of the state contrary to the Bible. The possible action of Florida, and of the Kentucky legislature in connection with a similar purpose in Kentucky, preparation looking toward which action is now in process among Kentucky Baptists and others, will elicit a nation-wide interest."

Will the act be entitled, "An act for the suppression of opinion in schools and colleges"?

That a Baptist body has a perfect right to make such a recommendation to all schools and colleges conducted as private institutions by Baptists, will be generally conceded. But when the request is made concerning the public schools, it is the request that the power of the state shall be used in accordance with the desires and beliefs of a particular religious body, and men are approaching perilously near a union of church and state. If it be said that the action is asked only in the interest of public morals, then there rests upon the advocates of such legislation the task of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that this particular doctrine is responsible for certain moral lapses which they deplore.

If such a request were to be granted, consider the following questions: What Bible is to be the standard—the Authorized Version or the Roman Catholic? Who is to determine what is contrary to the Bible? If the Supreme Court does this, you have a judicial body determining matters of religion and have passed over a portion of your Christian liberty to a state court. If some religious body is to do it, it is more than possible that other religious bodies will feel aggrieved. Will Protestant and Jews and Roman Catholics come to anything like harmony on this matter? If they do not, whose view shall prevail? There are many Baptists, including conservatives like the late Dr. Strong, who hold to some form of evolution; are their views to be taken into account as fully as are the views of Mr. Bryan? A wide field of questioning opens up when matters like this are projected into the civil field. And so far as we have noted, all the attempts as yet made to show that such legislation would not bring about a practical union of church and state, at least to the extent that a court could determine what the Bible does or does not teach, make distinctions about as futile as that between Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

Note that what is said here is entirely apart from the subject of Darwinism itself. The men who are attacking that and other forms of the evolution theory are actuated by the highest motives and we are not here discussing them. They must be careful, however, that in their zeal to puncture a belief which they consider hostile to a true conception of the Bible, they do not deny one of the strongly-held Baptist principles.

Mr. Bryan is a Presbyterian and we are not surprised at him. But we are a little surprised and disturbed that Baptists should wish to read into the civil law, thereby creating something very like a union of church and state, matters which are distinctly of religious concern. We believe that it would be better for them to continue their fight on other lines and not to bring it into the field of legislation.

A Comrade's Valedictory

FEW editors of religious journals have served longer or performed more distinguished work than Dr. Howard A. Bridgman who on December 31 retired from his position of editor-in-chief of the Congregationalist to enter upon educational work of a sort which makes to him a special appeal. For thirty-four and one half years Dr. Bridgman has been at his task week after week, and has produced a paper which well warrants the remark of Dr. Nehemiah Boynton: "Howard Bridgman has made the Congregationalist the best-edited religious paper in America and the Congregationalist owes him a great debt for his facility, his ability, his calmness of judgment and the generosity of his spirit."

In the last issue of the year, Dr. Bridgman gave his valedictory, speaking to his fellow-workers, his constituency and his brother editors of other denominations. He calls what he has to say "From Comrade to Comrade," and reveals thereby a portion of the secret of his success during these many years. He has loved his work; he has rejoiced in the human contacts formed through it and the opportunity to touch and to help in shaping great events; he has been glad to serve the brethren. He has played no favorites among the men of his own denomination and he has never failed to be fair and kind to those of others. He turns from his task with what is almost a homesick feeling.

Of the particular things said in his "comrades" two are worthy of particular mention. The first is a statement of the splendid faith which has actuated him. He says: "I have stood for the faith of the fathers, interpreted in the light of what we now know about the Bible, the universe and the facts of history, for a comprehensive Christian fellowship, for the fearless application of Christian principles to business, politics and all social relationships, and for a brotherhood of the nations that shall unite all peoples in mutual service and goodwill. What I have liked best and tried hardest to do has been to strengthen others in their faith in the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ and to make his program for our life on earth attractive and commanding." That is a splendid confession and nobly has he measured up to it.

The other thing has to do with the paper. Notice this: "I have seen the paper pass from private to denominational ownership, and become our only denominational weekly from Coast to Coast, recognized and financed by the action of the National Council, yet not so tightly controlled as to embarrass a freedom-loving editor. I have had only kind treatment from those entrusted by the denomination with responsibility for the paper. No Board of Directors, no Business Manager, has ever sought to muzzle me. My opinions, however wrong or insufficiently voiced, from one's point of view, have been my own opinions." That speaks well for the retiring editor. But how well also it speaks for his denomination and its governing boards!

To all of Dr. Bridgman's comrades in editorial chairs, a fine flavor will have gone from the weeks because there will no longer come to them his editorial utterances. But they will every one wish him joy in his new work and thank God for a man such as he, frank, Christian and unafraid.

The Worst Famine in History

HERBERT HOOVER calls the present distress in Russia, "the worst famine in the history of the world." President Harding says, "We must put aside considerations of international politics and fundamental differences in government. The big thing is the call of the suffering and dying."

The plain facts are bad enough; there is no need of enlarging upon them. No food is to be had in an area larger than our entire Atlantic seaboard. At least 15,000,000 peasants on the verge of starvation. Multitudes of them are trying to subsist on a bread composed of withered grass or powdered bark. Rubbish carts go about the streets every day to collect the dead bodies of children. Every day death takes its toll of old and young. Thousands are fleeing, anxious to go anywhere away from the terror that pursues them.

Whose fault all this is matters nothing. In fact nobody can be blamed for the overwhelming drought which came upon the region of the Volga. Nor can little children be blamed for what their fathers have done. Certainly the mass of a great people, war-weary and which had given in battle more lives than any other nation, cannot be held responsible for the conditions which made possible a communistic tyranny.

Is it not enough that there are millions who are hungry and need food, who are naked and need clothing? What would Jesus do? Twelve or fifteen dollars will save a life until the harvest. What millions of money have not been spent in the United States during the Christmas season on needless luxuries! Is it not time now that similar amounts were spent for these suffering brethren of our Lord?

Good Work

AT the meeting of the administrative committee of The General Board of Promotion held in New York Dec. 29 the officers' council presented recommendations providing for a reduction in the expenses of the board. The recommendations provide for a decrease in the expenses of the last five months of the year of $76,745. This amount is equivalent to a decrease of 25 per cent in the budget expenditures for the remaining five months of the fiscal year.

Special provision had to be made for financing the Continuation Campaign being conducted by the women and also to provide for additional expenses for the intensive promotional program being carried forward in the various states, through which it is planned to enlist every member of every church to help the denomination to meet the present financial crisis.

The amount of reduction made in the operating budget of the Board of Promotion for the remaining five months of the fiscal year was sufficient to care for the appropriations authorized by the Administrative Committee to carry on these intensive campaigns. This reduction does not mean that we are to reduce the real work of promotion. It does mean that the money so much needed for the intensive campaign before us has been provided for without an increase in the total of the expense budget.

AN ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The House of Representatives has before it a bill which is designed to "assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every state the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching." In this there is a kind of pyramiding of legislation, for this is a law to see that other laws are properly enforced. The country in which legislation of this kind is thought needful is our so-called "Christian" America. How to compel lazy or reluctant officials to enforce laws is the problem. The maker of this bill thinks that such a result can be obtained by making it a felony to refuse to make all reasonable efforts to prevent such crimes as lynching, and to put in the same classification the participation of citizens in "any mob or riotous assemblage by which a person is put to death." The country in which a lynching takes place would, if this bill passes, be compelled to pay $10,000 to the family of the victim or, if he have none "for the use of the United States." There are crimes which must stir the blood of every decent man and woman. But we will never get anywhere until there is cultivated a respect for law. If a bill like this can shake the fear of God and of the law into officials and lawless individuals and help wipe out what is a national disgrace, we are for it.

FUNDAMENTALS ON THE MISSION FIELDS

The hearts of many will be reassured at this ringing statement on fundamentals, taken from one of our missionary publications. In their loyalty to the great evangelical truths the Ongole missionaries do not differ from their brethren.

"We are getting letters asking where we stand on the inspiration of the Bible, divinity of Christ, vicarious sacrifice and many other stand-by doctrines.

"Be it known that we at Ongole are solid with the saints. We swallow whole all the old-fashioned doctrines and feel good over it. India is a nation of Unitarians and if we do not believe in the old doctrines we have no message for her people. We acknowledge a debt to the higher critics in helping us to distinguish between the real doctrines of the Bible and man's doctrines based on personal interpretations.

"Have you ever wondered why Jesus did not establish a theological seminary so as to fully develop in the minds of the disciples his many new and wonderful teachings? Is it not likely he knew the tendency of the human mind to get off by itself into a world of its own, disconnected with both God and man? If he did know, then his method of teaching the great truths and at the same time having them worked out in contact with both God and man, is easily understood.

"Even in conservative India, those who are close to the people as spiritual leaders see the naked souls of men and their great needs. At the same time such leaders are unusually dependent on the power and wisdom of God for methods and means, and it is the general experience of Indian missionaries that the Bible—as it stands and has been interpreted by the saints, rather than by the set-a-part scholars of the church—is what India needs and is, therefore, God-given and must not be altered, subtracted from, or added to."

A MOHAMMEDAN UPRISING

Mohammedans seem in many countries to be coming to a fresh consciousness of themselves and to be planning quietly or openly to threaten in every way possible the authority of the hated Christian overlords. Significant indications of this have been seen recently in Egypt, India and the Near East. The Turkish massacres during the war were in part religious massacres. That is, Mohammedans were slaughtering the Christians for the honor of their religion and to secure for themselves a favored place in heaven. Wherever you meet young Moslems in the Near East, they seem full of the determination to reclaim their countries for their own faith. Notably is this true of those of India. The British flag does not command the same respect in Turkey and Persia which was once given to it. In Persia the hatred which was formerly felt towards Russia seems to be turning towards England. And yet the American flag has honor in these regions, and it is more than likely that in the days immediately ahead, the Stars and Stripes may be the only thing which stands between large Christian populations and slaughter. America which dwells in peace must come to appreciate her possible influence as a steadying influence among the nations of the world. She must not compromise or equivocate; only straight-forward and unbending righteousness in relation to all other peoples will serve the need of the hour.

CHRISTIANS IN THE PEACE CONFERENCE

The Congregationalist in a recent number calls attention to the surprisingly large number of those connected officially with the Washington Conference who are either outspoken Christians or warmly sympathetic. For instance: "No less than eighty in the Chinese delegation are related to the Christian churches in China, or to the Y. M. C. A. organization there. The present minister from China at Washington was reared in a Christian school. In the group from Japan, both among the leaders and the attaches, are twenty who have served either on local or national Y. M. C. A. committees. The delegate from India, Mr. Sastri, was welcomed when he arrived at New York by members of the International Committee, and given a dinner at which he made known his earnest desire for the extension of Y. M. C. A. activities in his own land. From half a dozen to a dozen of these foreign delegates are speaking in the Washington churches every Sunday. We should not look upon these delegations from the Orient as made up chiefly of those ignorant of or opposed to Christianity. Our missionaries and Y. M. C. A. workers in these lands have done much to create a Christian background and atmosphere for the present conference on which the world is pinning so much hope."

There is much significance in the fact that a movement in which American churches have shown such intense interest has so prominently connected with it large numbers of men who are the product of the church's work abroad. The effects of Christian missions are far-reaching even in America.

Two First Cousins

Two sons of two brothers, each of whom has been prominent in denominational life, write books which the professor of English at Yale highly commends.

By WILLIAM LYON PHELPS

AS all good Baptists know, there are two first-rate Baptist brothers, both of whom have served their denomination and the country as college presidents—W. L. Poteat of Wake Forest, N. C., and E. M. Poteat, formerly president of Furman University, S. C. They used to exchange neighborly greetings in a manner quite unlike the famous remark made by the governor of North Carolina to the governor of South Carolina.

These two splendid brothers, both of whom have rendered inestimable services to the cause of Christian education, are well represented by their sons. Hubert, the son of W. L. Poteat, is professor of Latin in Wake Forest, and two sons of E. M. Poteat, Gordon and McNeil, are missionaries in China.

The two first cousins, Hubert and Gordon, have each published an important book in 1921, which I should like to see widely circulated. Through the firm of R. G. Badger, Boston, Prof. Hubert Poteat, has issued a little book called "Practical Hymnology," which is of acute interest to all people who go to church. It is a treatise on congregational singing, with a two-fold object. It aims to lead churches and Sunday schools to use only good hymns, of literary and devotional value. Professor Poteat declares war on jazz, and believes that no concessions to a debased popular taste are necessary. He gives a list of 300 excellent hymns. But the most important part of his book is not destructive but constructive. He is an accomplished musician, and has had much experience as director of voluntary choirs. He realizes, as everyone ought to, that the average congregational singing is simply lamentable—and in this book, he shows clearly how it may be improved, both in quantity and quality. The singing of hymns set to familiar tunes is one of the most inspiring and cheerful forms of worship. If one goes into a church where the congregation sings with vigor and volume, one feels that it is a living institution; unfortunately, in most churches quite the contrary is the case. It must be discouraging to a pastor to hear only a half-articulate murmur from the people in the pews, most of whom have open books in their hands, but are apparently thinking of something else. I wish every church-goer would buy and read this interesting, lively and valuable little book.

Through the firm of George H. Doran & Co., New York, Rev. Gordon Poteat has published a small and attractive volume, called "A Greatheart of the South." This deals with the college days and short missionary career of a veritable American hero, who gave his life for the cause of Christ. It is refreshing to read of such a character; here was a man whose daily existence seemed almost without a selfish thought; yet he was no prig but a natural, healthy, joyous, unaffected young American. In his college career although supporting himself he managed to help others every day; he had a passion for usefulness. The same purpose animated him throughout the medical school; he attracted constant attention from both students and faculty, not because he was sensational, but because he was interested only in the welfare of others. He sought and found opportunities to help, so that he was literally a constant blessing to all with whom he came in contact. On the way out to China, it was the same story; he gave up his own comfort on the ship to help another who he thought needed it more; then came his professional work as a missionary in China. He would have had a great career there, and one cannot overestimate his value; but his life was cut short by an accident that seemed so needless and so trivial that for the moment it positively staggers one's faith in God. We regain faith as we look back on the life of this man, consecrated to Christ by passionate devotion. No soldier ever followed Napoleon with more loyalty than this young American followed his leader. Such persons are rare in any age; but all ought to read the story of this Greatheart, because it inspires and strengthens our own lesser lives.

A Morning Prayer

Hearken unto me, O Lord my God and my King. Thy loving kindness and tender mercy have never failed me. Fill me now, I beseech Thee, with Thy glory and bless me.

I thank Thee that Thou didst watch over me during the night and didst not suffer any harm to come to me. Stay Thou with me till the setting of the sun and keep me under Thy sheltering care.

I know not what awaits me this day, I only know that I am a sinner and need Thy grace, I am weak and need Thy strength, I am ignorant and need Thy help. Grant that each unfolding hour may witness to Thy presence and each recurring experience may bear testimony to Thy guidance and control.

Give me, I pray Thee, a fearless faith and a dauntless courage that I may not flinch before difficulties, nor turn aside to seek my own pleasure when Thou dost bid me serve Thee, but go on to do Thy will with glad alacrity and devotion.

Keep me today from doing that which is mean or selfish and give me a holy quest for that which is pure and noble. Restrain every wayward impulse that I may not sin against Thee, and show me the path of righteousness. Prevent me from hurting the feelings of others by impatient words or unkind deeds and empower me by Thy grace to help them by encouragement and service.

Transform me by the renewing of my mind that I may prove what is Thy good and acceptable and perfect will, so that every duty may become a privilege and every burden a call for spiritual strength.

When the evening shadows fall, may I be enabled to look back upon this day with a thankful heart and a tranquil spirit. Brood over me by Thy grace during the nightwatches, enfold me in Thy loving care and fill me with Thy peace.

Through Jesus Christ, Amen.

A Primer of Theology

By A. H. STRONG

X. ETHICAL IMPLICATIONS

IN closing this brief synopsis of doctrine, I cannot omit all allusion to things that should follow. The apostle Paul was never content to leave his theology by itself, as if it were a mere play of rhetoric or an exercise of philosophical speculation. The one word "Therefore" in Rom. 12:1, shows that, to him, doctrine had more serious consequences. It was the source of ethics; and, if it did not lead to ethics, it had no validity or right to be. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating," says an old proverb, and that is true most of all in theology. I deeply feel the necessity of vindicating my own work by this principle. But here also I feel that my teaching must be more than ever dogmatic and autobiographical. After what I have already taught, I trust the reader will bear with me if I strain his attention and his faith to the utmost limit; for this is no child's play, but a statement of personal relations between the personal God and each individual person whom he has made. As the whole of God is in every place, this bit of ethics has to do with your soul, as much as if you and God were the only persons in the universe. I put my thought into four great statements:

1. Here is something to believe. In writing this Primer, I have had a new experience. It began with a dream. I seemed to be in great darkness, and that darkness seemed to be God's coming down to judgment. His universe seemed to be full of evil; and he had come to put that evil away, not by wrath and justice, but by taking it to himself, and bearing all its sin and misery in his own great heart. Out of the darkness I heard a mighty word, and the word was "NOW." I saw a garden, and a trembling human form. It was God himself, narrowed down into the person of his son. And that frail mortal was drinking the cup of sorrow and shame, till his sweat and blood fell in drops to the ground. Never before had I realized what it was for the Man of Sorrows to take upon himself the sins of the world. As his heart broke for sorrow, so my heart broke for sympathy, till I heard the word: "It is finished" (John 19:30). Then came a sudden change, and all was light. Since Christ had "trodden the winepress alone" (Is. 63:3), the ransom had been paid, the atonement had been made, and the universe was free. It seemed to me as if all the sons of God were shouting for joy. The sound of celestial music met my ears and I awoke.

I am not much of a believer in dreams, though they suggest and revive many good suggestions of the day. But this dream led me to reflection. What was the meaning of that word "NOW"? In the dream, I seemed imprisoned in the bonds of space and time. In my sounder sense, I remembered that God is not so imprisoned. I had heard what may really be the language of eternity. That scene of appropriated suffering was not a matter of an hour, a day, or even of a life-time, but was God's eternal vindication of himself in his treatment of sin. I saw more clearly than ever that this is God's way of atonement, not laying the burden and responsibility of it upon man, but providing himself the sacrifice, as he did of old to Abraham (Gen. 22:8-14). "The Lord will provide," not merely earthly good, but all good, for the body and for the soul, for time and for eternity. Believe this, and you have solved the problem of the universe, and have learned that God had a right to make you, because he could redeem you.

2. Here is something to confess. I think no one can really believe what I have written thus far without being moved to confession, both of his own sin, and of God's mercy in his salvation. All idea of comparing his own proud and self-moved righteousness with the holiness of God, is like thrusting an electric lamp against the sun: the astronomer with his smoked glass sees it as a black spot upon that blazing disk. Infinite generosity calls for generous response. Not to feel that one is a sinner, in the presence of such love, is to declare that one is "past feeling" and is doomed to death. The redeemed soul hungers and thirsts to make his redemption known (Acts 4:20); he cannot stay; he must speak forth the things which he has seen and heard. Non-confession proves lack of belief. And here is the error of our churches. We seek effects, without thinking of causes. When the seven churches of Asia ceased to be evangelical, they ceased also to be evangelistic; and when they lost their message, they lost also their existence. We are running the same course of futility: much hole-drilling, but no dynamite; many missionaries, but no gospel. What we need is to see the cross anew, as Luther did; to cry: "Für mich?" "For me?" as Luther did. Then we too, could face the Diet of Worms, and brave its terrors, and our work like his would abide. So I plead for spiritual revival, instead of six-penny socialism, as the only means of present salvation; for internal union with Christ, instead of theatrical effort to bring about an external union with other bodies of Christians.

Come quickly, Lord Jesus! Give us the spirit of confession! Let us pledge ourselves and our institutions, to make evangelical confession, not simply possible, as the basis of gifts, but also prerequisite to all our reception and disbursement of funds. So shall we be ourselves confessed, when we meet our lord in his judgment.

3. Here is something to preach. Can we doubt that this is the truth that will capture the world? Christ himself did not doubt it. "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me," were his own words (John 12:32). What are we to think of the recent sneers at evangelization, as compared with effort to preach the gospel? Does it not show that Christian men have lost their faith in that gospel, and that they are trusting to their own works, instead of trusting to God's appointed method of salvation? Has not every great missionary conquest begun with the touching of heathen hearts by the story of the cross? From Greenland to Cape Town, and from China to Peru, that story has done more to civilize and to reform than any economic benefits. Thank God for hospitals and for schools! But remember that these are secondary and not primary means of blessing, and that they may become instruments of evil, unless purified and accompanied by the preaching of the cross. I even go so far as to say that without an experience of the truth of union with Christ, no young man has a right to enter the Christian ministry. It is certain that without such experience he will be as feeble and abashed as I myself was at the beginning of my work. I long to see the day when ordaining councils and presbyteries will refuse to lay hands on students who have no settled faith, and will tell them to go back to Jericho till their beards are grown. One man with settled faith is worth a hundred who know not where they stand in theology. Red-hot zeal, even with many defects of training, wins more souls to Christ, than do all the modern philanthropies; for it is the gospel, and not merely its applications, which is "the power of God unto salvation." (Rom. 1:16).

4. Here is something to live by, and to die by. Was there every such intensity of effort as that of the apostle Paul? Read 2 Cor. 11:23; 28 and remember his shipwrecks and scourgings! Compare with these the half-heartedness and dilly-dallying of our Christian service—our men so plainly given to money-making, our women so plainly given to social ambitions outside the church and only a few laying all their gifts and influence at the feet of Christ, their Lord. I do not excuse myself, but rather mourn that I have come so far short of the intensity of zeal which ought to characterize every true believer.

"Lord, it is my chief complaint
That my love is weak and faint;
Yet I love thee, and adore!
Oh, for grace to love thee more!"

And I close this Primer by saying that I would wish to have only two inscriptions on the tablet that preserves my memory. The first is: "For me to live is Christ." And the second is: "I have kept the faith."

Dear reader, you and I must soon stand at the judgment seat of Christ. It will be then as if he and you were the only persons in the universe—all his sacrifice endured for you alone—all his revelation in nature and in Scripture made to show you the way of life. Will you say that you have never seen God? The answer will be that you have never seen anything else, for every atom in the universe has been a manifestation of him. Will you say that he has

Resolutions by the Chicago Baptist Ministers' Conference upon the Death of Dr. Augustus H. Strong (Aug. 5, 1836-Nov. 29, 1921).

Since it has pleased the Lord of the churches to summon to himself one who gave to his service a long life singularly filled with passionate devotion to Christ Jesus, and singularly successful in up-building the Kingdom of Christ through speech and written word, through his great teaching and administrative gifts, and through his impressive personality; the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Chicago hereby Expresses its thankfulness that to it was delivered on Nov. 7 the last of the many addresses given by Doctor Strong to such conferences in many lands, an unpremeditated valedictory so impressive and tender that we shall cherish it through all years to come;

We recognize the loss, to our denomination and to the Christian world, of one who has directly and powerfully influenced for good the lives of thousands of the leaders of the churches in all lands, and who has through his writings and in manifold ways helped to mould the religious thought and invigorate the religious purpose of all Christendom; and

We resolve, as ministers of Jesus Christ, to gird ourselves anew to the exercise of that conscientious industry which held Dr. Strong prone to his task until far past the age of four-score, and pledge for ourselves unswerving loyalty to the Christ whom he so loved and exalted, and whom he served with utter fidelity until in the ripeness of his useful years God's angel called him.

Augustine S. Carman, R. N. Van Doren, Carl D. Case. Committee.

never spoken to you? The answer will be that every word of Scripture was his voice to your soul. The only question then will be that question of the ages: "What think ye of the Christ? Whose Son is he?" (Matt. 22:42). How have you used the talent with which he endowed you? What has been your attitude toward that great movement of the world to God? Have you fallen in with it and promoted it, or have you turned aside, to make your selfish interest supreme? Will you now join yourself to Christ, and so launch your barque on the vast tide that is everywhere flowing toward God, or will you be left high and dry on the shores of time, as the merest refuse of the universe? In short will you chose to worship Christ, or the works of his hands! Your answer will determine your real character, and decide your eternal destiny. Christ, or the universe! Chose you this day whom you will serve! May your answer be the words of the poet:

"The holy, meek, unspotted Lamb,
Who from the Father's bosom came
For me and for my sins to atone
Him for my Lord and God I own."

May this answer be the result of reading this Primer of Theology, in the case of some one who has been led by it to see his own sin and his need of Christ as a Savior! For Christ is near to save, and his words are: "Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out" (John 6:37). In the "Pilgrim's Progress," John Bunyan sees a man with a muck-rake, who is gathering a few straws, while a glittering crown hangs, all unnoticed over his head. Let us leave the straws, and take the crown; for "now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation!" (2 Cor. 6:2).

Denominational Universities Will Aid in Campaign

THE denominational schools, colleges and universities are lining up for victory in the continuation campaign of the New World Movement.

Des Moines University, in Des Moines, Iowa, which had planned for a special campaign, through its president, Dr. John W. Million, now declares its purpose to throw all its energy into the success of the general campaign. Other educational institutions in various parts of the Northern Baptist Convention are taking the same firm stand for victory. The following statement, made by Denison University, in Granville, Ohio, is typical of the spirit in our Baptist schools, colleges, and universities, in regard to the New World Movement Program:

"A special meeting of the board of trustees of Denison University was called in Cleveland, Dec. 20, 1921, by Mr. Ambrose Swasey, president of the board, to consider the relation of the university to the Continuation Campaign of the General Board of Promotion for additional funds for the New World Movement.

"After full discussion of the present status of the One Hundred Million Dollar campaign and the financial condition of all the cooperating organizations, the board expressed unanimous approval of the Continuation Campaign for thirty million in additional pledges, and voted to express its readiness to assist in every way possible in effecting the success of the campaign in Ohio.

"In order that the officers of the university might have needed assistance in carrying through this campaign the board made provision to secure immediately the services of a competent man whose time should be so placed at the disposal of the state Board of Promotion as to insure the hearty cooperation of the university. (Signed) Ambrose Swasey, C. W. Chamberlain, H. F. Stillwell, W. D. Chamberlin, Millard Brelsford.

Missionary Education Through Dramatics—III

By MRS. MILTON FISH

Suggested Dramatizations of the Remaining Chapters of the Text-Book, "World Friendships."

Lesson Four: The Romance of the Printed Page

PRINTING

Hymn: "Jesus Hath Loved Me." October Missions. Let the pianist play it as the class is gathering. Have the words on the blackboard.

Sentence prayers for the blessings we have in Christ Jesus.

Which would be worse: not to be able to read or not to have anything to read if you knew how?

Chart 2. This chart should always produce a feeling of genuine thanksgiving that we are in America and a heart burden for the people of India.

Chart 6 makes a fitting introduction to this chapter.

Show a map of the unoccupied territories, see Survey. Tell story of Tyndale-Biscoe, page 73. What will hold these youths to this new standard? Bring out the widespread need for good literature.

Concert reading: "General literature," page 102. Let the class answer the question in the next paragraph.

DRAMATIZATION

Prologue: Pages 65-67 from "Making Missions Real."

The following dramatization is taken from the same book combining the material on pages 28, 29, 68-70. Every Sunday school or young people's society should have this book. In preparing this demonstration the leader should read both articles.

A missionary and his interpreter are sitting at a table covered with books and manuscripts.

MISSIONARY (reads): "Go tell that fox, what is the word for fox?"

NATIVE: Oh! teacher, we are a poor country. We are all out of foxes.

MISS.: Is there anything like a fox?

NATIVE: What is a fox?

MISS.: Oh! it is a small animal which cannot climb a tree. It steals chickens and is very cunning and sly.

NATIVE: Oh! White Man, we have no animal like this. We have the jackal, which is mean, steals chickens, comes at night and cannot climb trees. Please will not the jackal do?

MISS.: Yes, we will write: "Go tell that jackal." There is another animal mentioned in Revelation. What is the word for bear?

NATIVE: No, White Man, we have no bear. I do not know if he has hair, or wool, teeth or claws, but if he is in the Bible it is all right.

MISS.: We will have to use the Greek word "arkto." What is the word for snow?

NATIVE: What is snow?

MISS.: Snow is frozen rain and is soft and white and stays on the ground until the sun turns it back to water.

NATIVE: That is very hard to understand. We believe you, teacher, though. Could you not say, "White as rain"?

MISS.: Yes, we will write it that way. We have been trying for two years to find a word for "save," and I had nearly given up hope that there was such a word until last night when Kikuni was telling the story of an adventure with a lion. Suddenly he said: "Buana Nukulhanwa ne Kikuni." Did he say, "The master was saved by Kikuni"?

NATIVE: Yes, teacher.

MISS.: Why, that is the word I've been wanting you to tell me all these days, because I wanted to tell you that Jesus died to—

NATIVE: Master, I understand now, that is what you have been trying to tell us all these moons. Jesus died to save us from sin.

MISS. (calls wife): Our work of translation is done. I have at last found the word I have so long been looking for in order to complete the translation. I have the word for "save."

WIFE: Isn't that blessed?

NATIVE: Now it can speak our words. Oh! teacher, let me call the people together. I will say to them, "Come, we let you hear how the Book speaks our own words. It is hard to learn to read and make it speak, but be strong and try. If an old man like me has done it, it ought to be easy for you."

CLOSING PROGRAM

Gospel Solo: "I Have a Saviour, He Died For Me."

Inspirational story: "The Career of a Cobbler," Missions, Dec., 1920—May, 1921; or "The Boy with Five Talents," in "A Noble Army."

Memory verses: Mark 16:15-16.

Hymn: "We've a Story to Tell."

Lesson Five: Planters Extraordinary. Preaching.

Hymn: "The Son of God Goes Forth."

DRAMATIZATION: PLANTING BY THE WAY

Use a lantern or mirrorscope. Someone represents the missionary and shows to the class pictures from the life of Christ. If you use the mirrorscope you can show postal pictures or any pictures you may have of events in Christ's life. This should be done seriously and take the place of the devotional reading. Eight minutes will be long enough for the pictures.

Then say: "My Chinese friends, these beautiful pictures you have been seeing are of the One whom the Christians worship. Him we call Lord and Saviour. You have a wonderful teacher, Confucius. Many of our precepts are like yours. As you have seen, Jesus Christ did many marvellous things, such as no one who has ever lived has been able to do. He was the Son of God. He lived and died for you and me. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life." I have here a little book that tells the whole story of His life. Wouldn't you like to know more about Him? This little Book will cost you only a few cash. In each copy is a card. If you would like to have someone come to teach you more about this Person and the Way the Book tells us to live, write your name on the card. We will try to send a teacher that you may understand the wonderful words of life which are written in the Book."

Prayer: For the planters of the good seed.

Use charts one and two. Let 7 hang before the class with its silent message.

Types of missionaries not yet mentioned. Read in concert last paragraph, page 113.

Questions: What three elements are essential in planting a church? Which seems to you the heaviest burden the heathen world is bearing: Sickness, poverty, ignorance, sin (superstition and fear)?

Have the class realize that after all, giving the gospel is the greatest service which we can render. Humanity is so heavily burdened with sin.

Solo: "The Light of the World is Jesus."

One night, in Chicago, a woman handed a young actor a tract as he was leaving the theatre. As a result Dr. George Lorimer was given to the church as a preeminently successful soul-winning preacher. Have two members of the class tell the stories of Kali Banurji, page 117 and Kim Chung Sik, page 118.

This lesson can be most profitably spent as a biographical meeting.

Three seven-minute sketches: 1. The Hermit of the Himalayas (Mary Reed) in "A Noble Army." 2. Ann of Ava (Mrs. Judson). 3. The Black Barbarian. (Mackay.)

Hymn: "We've a Story to Tell," verse 3.

Leader tells incident told on page 122 and quotes the last sentence in the chapter.

Prayer: That the Lord of the harvest will send forth sowers and reapers.

Lesson Six: Servants of Society. Uplifting.

Hymn: "He Lifted Me."

Devotional: Matt. 5:43-48.

Concert reading: Last paragraph, page 135.

Social sins: Chart 8 will start the discussion.

Questions: How is Prince Ito's statement (page 163) true of other countries? A missionary from China states that the presence of the missionary and his willingness to start negotiations saved many towns from fire and sword during the revolution. In what other ways is the missionary the "Servant of Society"?

Dramatization: Use "The Twelve Spies" from "How to Use the Kingdom and the Nations," not to picture conditions in the Near East but to show how prejudice and misconceptions of the missionary task really cause most of the objections to foreign missions. Each country has something of value to give to the world.

Hymn: "Christ, for the World," sung as a solo.

Pray that each Christian may live "not to be ministered unto but to minister."

Lesson Seven: America, Friend of the World

Hymn: "We've a Story to Tell." Repeat the chorus until it sings itself into the hearts of the class.

Why, from a selfish standpoint, must America concern herself with the safety and welfare of the world?

An elderly lady, with a lovely home and no children, in Ontario, Cal., found her Japanese vegetable boy ill with typhoid.

When she bought her home she had dedicated it to God's service. She took the sick lad home and nursed him back to health. She also taught him to read from the New Testament. When he had recovered he wrote all that she had done to his mother. His mother wrote a beautiful letter of appreciation asking for a copy of the little Book that made people do such kind acts for others. How was this woman helping improve international relations with Japan?

Chart 1, completed needs no comment. Chart 9. If we saw Christ in every stranger how would we treat them? Solo: "Far, Far Away, in Heathen Darkness Dwelling."

DRAMATIZATION: WHAT SHALL I DO?

Characters:

Mr. Richman, nearing the end of life.
Bob Richman, his son.

Dr. May, a young and successful Christian doctor.

Representatives from South America, Japan, China, India, Africa. The leader may add to the list if she desires.

(Mr. Richman sits in a reclining chair, the doctor beside him.)

MR. RICHMAN: Doctor, tell me truly, have I long to live?

DR. MAY: No, at best only a few weeks before you will enter into the great beyond. One who has given so generously must go to a sure reward.

MR. RICHMAN: Doctor, I have not given generously—I have given so that all my rewards are for this life and in this world only. Doctor, I am a rich man in more than name. I would like to leave my money so that it would bless the world, in Christ's name. I have not even brought my son up to recognize true values, but to live richly and selfishly, indifferent to Christ.

(Knock is heard; doctor steps to the door as Bob Richman enters.)

BOB: Father, there are half a dozen queer foreigners asking to see you. I told them you were too ill to see anyone—they will not take no for an answer—what shall I say?

MR. RICHMAN: Let them come in. No, doctor (as he appears to protest) perhaps this is the answer to my question as to the use of my money. (Exit son.)

DR. MAY: As you wish—only they must enter one at a time. (Bob comes in bringing a representative of South America.)

BOB: This is Maria and she has a story to tell you.

MARIA: I come from the neglected continent. Oh! sir, do you know how terrible is the waste of life in Latin America? The death rate in New York is 13.6 per cent but in some of our countries it is 25.7 per cent. The rate of illiteracy varies from 40 per cent of the population in Uruguay to 90 per cent in Ecuador. Prostitution, illegitimacy and child labor are triple evils. Oh! your heart would ache if you could see the blind for whom nothing is being done. American capitalists have invested $1,000,000,000 in Mexico. For missionary purposes we have invested $2,000,000. The greatest unevangelized territory in the world is in the center of South America. American mission boards do not support one hospital in all the continent. Every school should double its capacity at once, they are so utterly inadequate to the needs. Oh! sir, give us money to establish new schools. A Christian education would correct so many of our evils. (Exit.)

MR. RICHMAN: I see where every dollar of my money goes—I don't need to hear the other appeals. (Enter African.)

AFRICAN: I come from darkest Africa to tell you of our needs. Commerce and industry have far outstripped the progress of missionary effort. The white man comes to us for gold, diamonds, copper, ivory, rubber, and many other of our rich products. We live better, life and property are more secure. But, oh, the evils of civilization. Prostitution, worse than polygamy, and its attendant diseases, the fire water, too, is disastrous to the native. It is a dark continent indeed when you think of the dearth of literature. Why learn to read if one has nothing to read? In Abyssinia, only one in a thousand can read. Give us schools; then give us the means for producing good books and papers. I beg you not to forget my appeal. (Exit. Enter Hindu girl.)

HINDU GIRL: I come from the land of superstition, where women, nay, little girls even, bear burdens too heavy to be borne. Undesired, shut within four walls, nothing to read, nothing with which to occupy their time, bearing children while still children; the years of the better class are few and sad. Those who are poor, work twelve hours a day. Men, women and children are herded in our hot and crowded factories. There are two and a half million wives under ten years of age. We are all sick or diseased. Did you know we have whole villages ready to turn to Christ if we but had some one to show us the way? Oh! that there were some to carry the Gospel of the loving Christ into every village and hamlet in India. Our cry is the same; we don't want Western civilization without Christianity. Great as are our physical needs our spiritual needs are greater. May we count on you for help? (Exit.)

MR. RICHMAN: I am a poor man in the face of such needs as I see tonight. I wish that I had a life to give. (Enter Chinese Girl.)

AND THIS IS JAPAN

By Jessie R. Wilson

"From the first we have been impressed with the respectful and courteous treatment accorded us by both men and women. Repeatedly in the street cars they have given their seats to Louise, and once when I was carrying William a lady offered me her seat. On the streets they have shown us every kindness. American habits still cling to us, and we have made many mistakes. Had we as foreigners made similar mistakes in America, some one might have rudely corrected us adding, 'Remember, you're in America now.' But so far as we know, no one has thus rebuked us or even looked like he wanted to. On the other hand, many have offered suggestions and help. In the shops, they have put forth real effort to understand and please us. The servants in the home have been willing and gracious in all their ministrations. We could not but be both surprised and pleased with such kindly treatment."

CHINESE GIRL: There are many, many burdens which China is bearing. While they must be lifted, I have come to plead the cause of education. We are superstitious, ignorant, diseased. Less than two per cent of our women can read. Perhaps poverty is the great cause of our illiteracy. In spite of our being an industrious people, we are desperately poor. We long for education—we cannot afford to travel far to school. (Exit.)

MR. RICHMAN: She shall have one more if money can provide it. (Enter Japanese man.)

JAPANESE MAN: I am proud to say that Japan has a well planned educational system, with 98 per cent of her children between the ages of 6 and 12 in school. We also have splendid hospitals. However, there are 30,000,000 in Japan who have never heard of Christ. We need more Bible schools for women and fewer but better equipped divinity schools. We need institutional churches and, in our great cities, social centers. Japan is drifting away from all religion. The great need and opportunity are in the industrial centers. Buddhism is awakening. Unless our Christian missions are greatly reinforced, Christianity will have missed another open door in Japan. I come to ask you to give us a social center in one of our most crowded industrial districts. (Exit.)

MR. RICHMAN: Doctor, you say I have but a few weeks to live. I can't die now. Why man, I want to answer every one of those appeals. I believe I am better already.

DOCTOR: I guess you are. You certainly appear to have more vitality. I am going to answer one myself. I am going to answer that appeal from Latin America. Answer it with a hospital and a school and go myself as head of the hospital. There are plenty of doctors ready to wait on you rich folks. I am going where people are poor and needy and no one is there to help them.

BOB: Father, please, I have been listening to these appeals; I want to go to Africa, but I fear that my training as a rich man's son, has not been a very good preparation. Let me go to India and carry the gospel to some of those villages that are crying out for some one to lead them into the new and better way?

MR. RICHMAN: Son, I thank God that I have lived to know that my son is going to spend his life for Christ. I will send our board money to enlarge and equip our most needy school in China. It must be a normal school whose influence will reach out farther and farther. We will send to our central station in Africa, the finest printing outfit that money can buy. As for that social center in Japan, I'll pay all the expense if we can find someone to take charge of it. Bob, you would be well fitted for that place in Japan. We'll find someone else for India. Doctor, I'll be visiting that South American hospital of yours some day.

(CURTAIN.)

Pianist plays: "My Life, My Love."

CLOSING PROGRAM

Three Questions: Where have we failed as a nation in world friendship? Where have we failed as a church? Where have I failed as an individual?

Ask each member of the class to respond to the question: "I have but one life to live—how can I spend it best to show my love for Christ and really add to the World's Friendship?"

Solo of consecration, "Have Thine Own Way, Lord," sung as the class bows in silent prayer.

The Roll of the States

New England

Maine

TO "hold the fort" is sometimes an "outstanding achievement." The rural aspects of Maine have been accentuated during and since the war period. Half of our 400 churches are at the cross-roads or in small communities. Deluded people continue to go from us. To keep the breath of life in these small churches under such circumstances is a real victory. The addition of four pastor-evangelists to our staff of workers has greatly helped in this rural church work. Several churches, among others Houlton, Clifton, Farmington, South Berwick and Oldtown, have renovated, enlarged and modernized their houses of worship. Evangelistic effort has rewarded the faith and works of pastor and people and special helpers. The work of the director of religious education has been richly blessed. Gifts on account of the New World Movement have exceeded the benevolences of any previous year. Another preparatory school, making five in all, has affiliated with us during the year.

We should do more of the same kind of work and do it more efficiently in the year to come. There are fallow fields to be cultivated. An evangelistic atmosphere created by preaching and praying and serving and giving and much personal effort must be secured. At some strategic points definite advance community work should be undertaken. The lethargy which sometimes prepares the way for religious extravagances of one sort or another, should be supplanted by a zeal that is according to knowledge—at least some knowledge. And not least, an intelligent denominational loyalty prompting our constituency to "keep rank" as did the men of David's time, in the great missionary and educational and evangelistic enterprises of this epochal hour in which we are living, should be diligently cultivated.

Waterville.

IRVING B. MOWER.

New Hampshire

WE HAVE added one more worker to our convention force, a brother who is serving as general missionary pastor. We now have two missionary pastors and a colporter. These three men are none too many to care for the neglected districts of the state. They reach and minister to people who would be reached by no other worker. In a more complete way than ever heretofore the associations organized the past year for evangelistic work through pastoral exchange. Although this plan has some limitations it proved very useful and added to the number of baptisms. The past year was the banner year of all years for giving by the members of the churches. This larger giving has come through the stimulus of the New World Movement.

The outlook for 1922 is that it will also be a year of unusual giving. There is expectation that the churches will give themselves whole heartedly to the Stewardship plan. Special effort will be made that every church capable of having a pastor shall enjoy the privileges of such a ministry. A more complete organization for all the denominational work is the hope of those having work in charge.

Manchester.

D. S. JENKS.

Vermont

BY far the most outstanding and encouraging achievement of the past year is the opening of Vermont Academy at Saxtons River, Vt., which was closed for five years. During the year nearly $100,000 was expended to modernize the buildings and put them in first-class shape for a coeducational school with Christian ideals. The principal and faculty of fifteen are all Christian men and women and the 126 students now enrolled promise much for the future.

During the past year we recorded nearly twice the number of additions to our churches by baptism that were recorded the previous year. Vermont is preeminently an agricultural state and with the older people dying, the younger people moving to the larger centers and cities and the farms being occupied by French Catholics, the work of building up the protestant churches is slow and in the future we must have both the best men and methods even to hold our own.

All our pastors and churches have taken hold of the New World Movement splendidly. We are after those who did not pledge or who pledged for only one year, and those who have come into the churches since the pledges were made. We hope for a decided gain during the present fiscal year.

W. A. DAVISON.

Burlington.

Massachusetts

BAPTISTS are numerically second among the Protestant denominations in Massachusetts; 344 churches, 89,481 membership. Over 300 of the churches are definitely committed to the New World Movement. During the last fiscal year the churches paid in $1,000,000, which represents 97.6 per cent due on pledges. Expect to receive every dollar pledged and to secure many new pledges.

Remarkable development of younger churches in growing suburbs. (Massachusetts has the most cities of any state in the Union.)

Forty-two standard three-year training classes, with over 400 students. Two hundred and forty-five Massachusetts pastors and church leaders attended New England Baptist School of Methods at Ocean Park last summer. Eighteen daily vacation Bible schools with enrollment of 2,800 pupils. Young people of the state now organized for aggressive work. Boston Workers' Union, monthly meeting, 175 in attendance. Three hundred and eighty professed conversions in the Sunday school enlistment days.

More than two-thirds of the people in Massachusetts are of either foreign birth or parentage. Baptists have more than forty centers of work for new Americans, fifty regular missionaries, and nearly 200 unsalaried workers. Another Russian missionary, a Polish missionary, and an Italian woman missionary-evangelist added during the year. Christian Americanization by the women of the churches for new American women a feature. A twelve-point program of advance in work for new Americans adopted and in operation. Consolidation of Boston Baptist City Mission Society and Boston Baptist Bethel Society effected during the past year. This New Standard City Mission Society, Class A, operates in Boston, Cambridge and Chelsea, in charge of both English and foreign speaking work.

The year has been one of soul-winning and ingatherings. Baptisms, 3,840—an increase of more than 1,000 baptisms over the previous year. The state is organized for a year of church evangelism. Over 150 series of special meetings are already planned. All departments—aided churches, religious education, new American and board of promotion—are concentrating on evangelism.

Boston.

W. E. WATERBURY.

Connecticut

THE past year has been marked by four events of more than passing interest and importance to the Baptists of Connecticut. The first was a wide-spread and well organized evangelistic movement which resulted in additions to the churches of 1,242 members by baptism, a number exceeded but twice before in a single year in the history of the denomination in the state; the second is practically a threefold increase in the amount contributed by the churches in a single year to the benevolent work of the denomination. The collections were more than 100 per cent of the allotment, based on pledges to the New World Movement.

The third event is a marked advance in the effort which the Connecticut Convention is making to reach and help the new Americans. During the year the convention, aided by the Home Mission Society and the New Haven Baptist Union, secured a suitable and commodious property in New Haven for a settlement house among the Italians. The work had been carried on by the Congregationalists for some years in what was known as the Davenport House, near the center of the Italian quarter. Their success had not been very great and we found opportunity to purchase the entire outfit for $30,000, which is less than half the cost of erecting the same buildings. The Woman's Home Mission Society has sent two trained workers to aid in conducting the work. We came into possession of the building about Sept. 1, and the work is already developing in a very encouraging manner.

The fourth event, which we believe contains in it great promise of good, is a complete, harmonious and satisfactory union of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, into the Woman's Baptist Mission Society of Connecticut. The union was finally consummated at the meeting of the Connecticut Convention in October. Miss Mary L. Howard is president of the new organization. Already wide and extensive plans have been adopted and the women are vigorously at work in putting these plans into execution.

The outlook for 1922 is very favorable in many directions. The evangelistic effort, so successful last year, is to be continued. The work of the woman's society as above indicated, is to be pushed with vigor. The matter of stewardship is to receive increased attention. While we share with all other parts of the country in the financial depression, which is showing itself in decreased payments, we are still hoping by the end of the year to make the total amount collected equal that of last year. On the whole, Connecticut Baptists are full of courage and hope.

Hartford.

A. B. COATS.

Rhode Island

BAPTIST work in Rhode Island enjoyed in 1921 one of the best years of its history. Features of the work were: (1) The change of the convention year and the holding of the annual meeting in May instead of October. (2) The notable revival spirit in the churches and the large number of baptisms. (3) Courageous giving to the New World Movement in spite of the serious industrial depression in the state.

The outlook for the coming year presents a variety of problems: (1) Our Italian work needs new and larger facilities. The two promised new edifices should be under way soon. The site for one, costing $7,000, has been purchased and funds amounting to about $37,000 are now available for the two edifices. We need at least as much more to carry through the present plans. (2) We need a Baptist home for the aged and needy. A committee was appointed at the last state convention, which is expected to elaborate plans for providing such a home.

The general secretary, Rev. B. T. Livingston, who began his service in 1917, has done excellent work. The convention is free from debt and a gratifying increase of enthusiasm in its work is noticeable in the state.

The Middle States

Things in New York

EVERY Baptist pastor in New York City is in constant receipt of letters assuring him that Baptist people of other parts of the country recognize that he is working in the "most difficult Baptist field in the world." Comparisons are odious. Every man's field has its own peculiar difficulties. We make no claims about the difficulties of Christian work or Baptist work in New York that would in any way intimate that any Baptist pastor elsewhere has an easy job. Our conviction is that any man anywhere who undertakes to fight the devil will have a right royal time of it. Certainly he will in New York City.

To set forth some features of the problem, we have in the five boroughs of New York a population of a little less than 6,000,000 and our evangelistic committee declares that 3,000,000 of our people never go to church. This is probably meant to be a general statement that half of the city's population are not churchgoers. Of course there are a great many people who cannot go. There is an army of aged people who are too infirm to go. Any one who trots about New York's apartment houses knows this very well. There is a great multitude of sick people who must be taken into account. The annual death rate of the city is very low, only 12.39 per thousand, but even so there are 75,000 people die in New York every year. There is a constant sick list of at least 200,000. There are over 130,000 births in New York every year. Think of the human care, anxiety and suffering attendant on this, and the multitude of people whose church going is interfered with. Think of the army of doctors and nurses, the many whose employment takes up their time on Sundays, the vast number of men engaged in the protection of the city. It is easy to say in solemn tones how great a multitude of people do not go to church, but upon analyzing the statistics you find that many people cannot go. When you count the infirm aged, the sick, the children under five years of age, the mothers who must care for infant children and who cannot provide a substitute, those engaged in necessary employments, and all the attendants on the sick and the young, you will have to cut the number reported as non-churchgoers in half. But even if we say there are 1,500,000 people who never go to church you still have an appalling number.

One statistician gives us in the five boroughs of New York a Protestant church membership of 459,576, and reports the Roman Catholic parishioners in the same area as 1,453,464. The Roman Catholic churches have no such record of members as our churches have. Their reports of the number of their parishioners are usually guesses, or estimates, whichever you wish to call them, and are always in round numbers, say 10,000 or 20,000 to a parish.

But if the Protestant Christians seem in bad plight the Jews are much more so religiously. With a population variously estimated at from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000, they report in membership with their synagogues only 44,155 families. That would make not much more than one-tenth of their whole number of people. On any Jewish holiday the business of the city is at a standstill, synagogues are overcrowded, many halls are hired and Protestant church buildings are called into service. But in their ordinary life there is no body of people in the metropolis who show such utter neglect of stated worship as do the Jews. It is commonly reported that they are filling the Christian Science churches. No doubt many of them are found there. But the number must be small as compared with the whole Jewish population. The Christian Scientists give out no information about their work, not even the number in their fellowship or the value of their property.

The Sunday school is the weakest end of our work in New York. In the entire city there is a school registration of 1,005,257. This includes nearly 75,000 in high schools and vocational schools. But the whole number reported as pupils in the Sunday schools of the city is only 417,325, which includes Roman Catholic schools and Jewish as well as Protestant. Of course in the Sunday-school enrollment are a great number who are below public school age, and nearly an equal number who are above public school age. It would be a conservative statement to say that not more than one-third of the children of school age in New York City are enrolled in any religious school—Protestant, Roman Catholic, or Jewish. The average attendance in our religious schools would make the showing much worse. If present religious conditions are trying here, we may say, in view of the religious neglect of the children, that the future promise is much worse.

In Manhattan and the Bronx, full figures for which lie before me, our Baptist showing is not encouraging. Of the nearly 28,000 members in the churches of the Southern New York Association, about six thousand are in suburban churches, leaving over 21,000 in the churches of Manhattan and the Bronx. More than half this number are in our Negro churches. To be accurate, the Negro churches report more than 12,000 members, and the foreign-speaking white churches report something over 1,000 members, leaving less than 9,000 members in the English-speaking white churches. If you take out the city mission churches there would be a further reduction. The whole association reports an enrollment of Sunday-school pupils of only 9,641, not much more than one-third of the reported church membership. If you confine your research to Manhattan and the Bronx, you will find less than 1,000 pupils reported in our foreign-speaking white Sunday-schools, a little over 2,000 in our Negro Sunday schools, and about 3,800 pupils in the Sunday schools of the English-speaking white churches. Included in this number are the English-speaking city mission churches, and what is worse still, included in this small enrollment are the hundreds of men who are in the famous Rockefeller class and other men's classes in our churches. There are a good many things that might be said in explanation of these facts. We are not dealing now in explanations. These are the facts.

New Jersey

THE year 1921 has been, from the point of view of missionary giving, taking in consideration the present financial conditions, the most remarkable in New Jersey's Baptist history.

The percentage of increase over past years in the numbers received for baptism in both self-supporting and mission churches, gives full proof of the fact that a missionary church is necessarily alive to its own local needs, and conqueringly evangelistic.

More students for the ministry and mission fields have been aided than ever before.

The churches throughout the state, with almost absolute unanimity, have heartily supported the New Jersey Baptist Convention in its largest undertakings, and actively participated in our great denominational forward movement.

The convention staff last fall formulated a unified and comprehensive plan of advance and printed it in pamphlet form. Mrs. Helen B. Montgomery, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, enthusiastically commented on the value of this plan. Our Baptist constituency have also very heartily accepted this as the basis for general church activities throughout the state.

Without the high-quality preaching and leadership on the part of our pastors, and hearty cooperation on the part of the rank and file of our churches, the great work accomplished would have been impossible.

We face 1922 with humble confidence that the attainments of 1921 are but "an earnest" of vastly greater achievements for our God in the fertile days ahead. Our English and foreign-speaking mission pastors are planning to do a more intensive work in religious and missionary education, as well as putting forth more passionate evangelistic endeavors. It goes without saying that the other pastors are planning to declare the whole counsel of God and carry forward a well balanced constructive program.

Pastors and churches are warmly responsive to the plan for a state-wide stewardship campaign.

We are preparing with real hopefulness to meet the denominational missionary crisis and complete the raising of New Jersey's quota in the one hundred million dollar campaign.

The state convention has entered upon a new day in planning to safeguard entrance into the Christian ministry. A convention committee representing all of the associations, is pledged to this work of such underlying importance.

We know that the inspiring record of teacher-training, vacation Bible school, and general religious educational accomplishments will be exceeded this new year. We are planning to have our great summer assembly exceed 1921's success.

Our women are carrying on a great campaign in missionary education and giving.

In the name of our Divine Master, we accept the challenge of a greater day for Baptists in New Jersey.

New York Up-State

NEW YORK up-state has pledged $4,074,000 towards the New World Movement on a quota of $7,606,000; out of 791 churches in the state 740 or 93½ per cent are contributing; 292 churches have met or exceeded their quotas. We have received in cash this year five times the entire apportionment to the same churches in the year 1917-1918. We have collected 86 per cent of last year's payments. 2573 are now enrolled as titheers in 104 different churches. Sixty pastors report increase in salary, seventy-four have enrolled in the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board's pension plan.

At the annual meeting of the state convention this year President Granger, who has been president for fourteen years, retired as president emeritus.

Two interesting developments have been the strengthening of the work of the Erie Association and the Monroe Association in the cities of Buffalo and Rochester respectively. Rev. E. H. Dutton, efficient secretary of the Buffalo Association of Churches, is doing an outstanding piece of work, one that is calling attention to itself throughout the country and having an influence on the surrounding churches. The Baptists of Buffalo have exceeded any other communion in accessions to membership of churches in the last year and a half and the increases have been more than in any previous year in a decade of Baptist history. In Monroe County, Dr. A. E. Isaac is the new executive secretary of the newly formed Baptist Union of Rochester and Monroe County.

In the northern part of the state the church at Carthage has reported the building of its house of worship at a cost of $35,000, all of which has been subscribed.

In the central eastern part of the state Rev. H. Clark Colebrook at Gloversville reports strong spiritual interest along missionary lines in his church, with the result that several have volunteered for missionary work and a gift of $15,000 has been made from his church for a dormitory building in India.

Some strong churches are without pastors, such as Tabernacle Church of Utica, First Church and the Calvary church of Rochester. Work at First Church, Syracuse, is proceeding with great enthusiasm and vigor, under the leadership of Rev. Bernard Clausen. Rev. Clinton Wunder, new pastor of East Avenue Church of Rochester, is getting hold of the work with remarkable vigor. Great enthusiasm pervades the entire organization.

Rochester and the entire Baptist world feel greatly the going of Dr. A. H. Strong. Memorial services have been held for him in First Church and in the Seminary. Surely a prince of Israel has fallen with the going of Dr. Strong!

The seminaries in the state are showing the result of the swing-back from the war. A splendid class of the strongest men are present at Rochester.

The outlook for this year is not without its problems but seems very hopeful.

The State Board of Promotion has set up a "second-mile" campaign under the direction of Rev. R. E. Farrier, state director, dividing the state into five groups. An attempt will be made to bring every church up to its original quota. A committee of laymen under the leadership of Dr. Clarence A. Barbour will secure special gifts. The new enthusiasm which is already beginning to be felt is shown by the fact that last month's payments on the New World Movement are up to 111 per cent of the payments the same month last year. As a result of the appointment last year in the state convention of a committee on efficiency a report was made and plans developed for new and aggressive movements for the new year. Strong emphasis will be put on rural work and missionaries to the small town and open country church. The movement for systematic giving and the forming of titheers' groups in the churches is in full swing. Probably there never has been such an effort to put religious education to the forefront as is now evident. The spirit of unity is obvious in the church life of the state and a promise of generously sacrificial response to the challenge of the needs of the time is confidently predicted.

Pennsylvania

DURING the past year the state has been thoroughly organized along evangelistic lines; practically all our associations have adopted methods planned by our evangelistic department. By an efficient committee in every association, every church is reached with a definite plan to hold an evangelistic meeting some time during the year. The results of this systematized evangelism have been most gratifying and we can report a larger number of additions to our churches by baptism than for many years.

Another notable event is the growth of the titheers' leagues in a large number of our churches. These churches have shown a great increase in missionary offerings and as a result they have had a large increase in membership. This of course is the fulfillment of the promise, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse." It has been quite apparent in Pennsylvania that sacrificial giving has resulted in spiritual blessing.

Another notable event, perhaps because of its rarity: Our most efficient secretary of the Education Board, Dr. Leroy Stephens, resigned at the last meeting of our convention in October. Dr. Stephens is in his eighty-first year and has been educational secretary for twenty-seven years. Now comes the unusual thing—the convention retired Dr. Stephens on full pay for the balance of his life and made him secretary-emeritus.

Pennsylvania has suffered a severe loss in the death of Senator Ernest L. Tustin, who last year was president of the Northern Baptist Convention. A man of tremendous energy, a lawyer of note, the head of the welfare department of the City of Philadelphia, a man whose deep interest in the denomination made his influence felt not only in the state, but in the nation. He seemed to be at the height of his influence and activities when the end suddenly came. A great and good man has gone from our midst and his place will be most difficult to fill.

Spiritually Pennsylvania is making gratifying progress. Industrially we have suffered as few states have suffered, but in spite of this our people are giving nobly to the New World Movement.

The secretary recently visited a church not large in numerical or financial strength, that had a titheers' league of sixty-five members. Knowing that the industrial situation was most deplorable, the secretary asked one of the members of the league, "What about your tithing?" The reply was—"Most of our men have been out of work for ten months; we are still tithing, but there is very little to tithe."

Delaware

IT HAS been a quiet year with few outstanding happenings in this, the smallest of our state conventions. Every pulpit has been manned, and well manned, so that church work has been everywhere maintained. A group of young people attended the Peddie Assembly in New Jersey and brought back an inspiration. The Anne Semple Library for the colored people of Delaware has been successfully launched under the auspices of the convention.

The new year began auspiciously with a Christian Workers' Institute at Wilmington, Jan. 1-4, in which all the churches cooperated with the publication society in pre-empting the opening days of the year for the kingdom of God. It is hoped that all pastors and workers of the State will get together for our share of the great task of completing the New World Movement program.

West Virginia

THE peculiar conditions in West Virginia due to industrial unrest have made the past year a trying one. Practically all of our factories have been closed and the coal interest has been almost at a standstill. Notwithstanding these conditions the story of the year is a good one to tell—enlarged vision, more cooperation, increased giving, and gratifying spiritual results.

For the year closing May 1, 1921, West Virginia Baptists gave a total of $242,879.50. This was an increase of 350 per cent over the average giving to the New World Movement program of the year previous. The increase is more notably marked by a comparison of the years. For instance, in 1917 the giving of our people increased over 1916 by 10 per cent. In 1918 the increase over 1917 was 12 per cent, in 1919 the increase over 1918 was 15 per cent; in 1920, which year realized the first results of the New World Movement, the increase over the previous year was 52 per cent, and the increase of 1921 over 1920 was 142 per cent.

In evangelism we have made notable advance. A large percentage of the churches entering into the New World Movement have been visited by increased interest in vital Christian things and the recorded additions to the churches by baptism last year were 4,215.

We enter the new year as Christian optimists. Our outlook is in our uplook. The conditions about us are discouraging; but the conditions above us are as bright as the promises of God. With the eternal God for us, we are possessed of a vital faith and dauntless courage to "carry on" to the glory of our Lord Christ.

Indiana

THE year 1921 was a very satisfactory year in Indiana. The organizing of six new churches, the largest missionary offering in our history, the largest number of baptisms of any year save one in our history and the best convention in many years should be mentioned as some of the achievements of the year. The outlook for 1922 is very bright in every way. We are united, we are at work and our one resolve is so to exalt Jesus Christ in our lives that many others may come to know him and be lead to give their lives and talents to him.

C. M. DINSMORE.

Wisconsin

OUTSTANDING achievements for the past year are: 1. A closer relationship between pastors and churches than there has been for some time. We understand one another better. 2. A larger state convention work—more missionary centers, and a larger field force than in the past. 3. The reorganization of the Milwaukee City Mission Society. This is showing a much larger activity in Wisconsin's leading city. 4. Educationally, recreationally, and spiritually, a greater, better, assembly at Green Lake.

Outlook for 1922: 1. Advanced work in Milwaukee. It is expected we will employ a city missionary. 2. Renewed activity in evangelism. A director of evangelism will probably be employed part of the year. A united evangelistic campaign is planned for the whole state. 3. Renewed activity to raise money to meet the world's needs.

Milwaukee.

Minnesota

IN 1921 the appointments of Rev. A. J. Hansen, state director of religious education; Rev. J. J. Runyan, secretary of Baptist Union of Minneapolis; Rev. C. S. Marston in charge of church at Laporte where modern rural work is being opened, and recently Dr. G. E. Burlingame has begun special evangelistic work; the appointment of Rev. W. G. Clark as hospital worker at Rochester where nearly 5,000 Baptists from everywhere are treated annually—all these mark advances. The building of the University Church, Minneapolis, has been begun and good progress made toward the completion of the social wing. In St. Paul the Lake Park Chapel is being put up, which will furnish a greatly needed house. The interest in evangelism is growing, though large results have not yet been reported except in a few places.

The outlook for 1922 seems good, although greatly dependent upon financial outcome of fiscal year in state and country. At present the financial conditions in Minnesota are not good and the spirit is far from optimistic.

Illinois

LAST year the Baptists of the Illinois Baptist State Convention did nearly twice as much for beneficence as the year before and about three times as much as in previous years. The amount given last year was $688,215. The denomination made a total increase of 15,938 in its membership during the year. The state convention missionaries added 1,387 to the churches. This work was done outside of Chicago. The meetings of the associations all over the state were the best ever held. There was a spirit of hopefulness, aggressiveness and loyalty to the denomination. Shurtleff College made rapid gains in every way. One of the items of progress was the securing of eight acres of ground, with good buildings on it, adjoining the campus. This increased the campus to twenty-three acres. Northern Baptist Theological Seminary in Chicago also made rapid progress during the past year. University Church of Champaign did the best work in its history.

The outlook is hopeful. The financial stringency of the country makes religious work difficult in some ways, yet there was never a time when our churches were planning to do larger things than during the coming year. Dir. A. E. Peterson, of Chicago, is planning an aggressive work to bring up the finances on the New World Movement. He has been elected general superintendent of the state convention and will combine the forces of the two offices during the coming year. The state convention missionaries and evangelists have their hands full of aggressive work for the coming year. Many pastors are planning to go out and help churches in special meetings. Some of the associations are well organized and are helping every pastorless church and mission point in their associational territory.

Michigan

A SIMULTANEOUS spiritual pastors' retreat, on Oct. 26, 1920, was followed by simultaneous evangelistic campaigns in three associations. Accessions were large, seventy-three churches reporting 3,308 additions for the six months preceding Easter. Practically all associations have now a director of religious education. Forty churches carried teacher-training courses and three institutes have been held. Michigan is pioneering in city extension work and this work is to be greatly extended. Four parish pastors have been employed all or part of the year to minister to dormant fields. The convention has aided sixty-three missionary pastors, serving some eighty-one churches. Their churches have reported 453 baptisms and ninety-eight other accessions. Four convention pastors have served sixteen points during the year, especially between pastorates and have also helped in evangelistic campaigns. Regional missionary conferences, followed by local one-day missionary conferences have resulted in a deepening of church activity. In the New World Movement, the churches have pledged 66 per cent of their quota and raised 83 per cent of their yearly portion. In one year the missionary offering was increased from $100,000 to $475,000, and striking spiritual results have followed.

The following goals have been set for the new year: 5000 tithers in the churches; 7000 additions by baptism; 5000 members enrolled in Stewardship Leagues; fifty churches paying the pastors' pension premium (in the M. & M. Board); $700,000 in additional pledges on quota of the New World Movement; $500,000 paid this year on account of the New World Movement; a full program of intercession, instruction, stewardship and soul-winning on the part of every church; a loyal, united, aggressive constituency; new buildings at seven points where the need is imperative, and temporary structures in five other places, to take care of Sunday-school locations and church organizations; Negro centers for students at Ann Arbor, one at Flint, and the church at Grand Rapids aided in the erection of buildings.

Ohio

IN MY judgment the most notable achievement of Buckeye Baptists during 1921 has been the initiation and partial fulfilment of a state-wide program of simultaneous co-operative evangelistic campaigns. Rev. Charles H. Stull of Marietta has been graciously released by his own people for special emergency service during a period of six months. Under the joint auspices of the department of evangelism of the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the Ohio Baptist Convention, he is prosecuting his task as superintendent or director with courage, wisdom and devotion. The plan is to cover the commonwealth in four periods, district by district, though no church is to be rigidly held to the period within which its district effort is definitely scheduled. The first section has already been cared for and more than forty series of special services held, pastors from other portions of the state being drawn in for the assistance of pastorless churches or for the aid of pastors in this southeast district. The evangelistic efforts average two weeks in duration. While these evangelistic helpers were absent from their own pulpits their places were filled by district superintendents and others of the state convention force, ministerial students, retired ministers and laymen. In every instance evangelistic helpers and supply preachers wrought without remuneration.

This work is vital and fundamental. We have endeavored to recall and to stress once more our enduring, unchanging obligation and our primary task. Rich results are already evident. Very many have been won for Jesus Christ. The direct and definite issues are most encouraging and most valuable. Significant by-products are also to be noted. Weak hands

International Uniform Lesson

ELIJAH IN NABOTH'S VINEYARD

I Kings 21:7-10, 16-20. Golden Text: Numbers 32:23.

Background

Several years have passed since last Sunday's lesson with Elijah probably in retirement while Ahab was waging war among the Syrians. Persecution has evidently ceased and Elijah no longer fears Jezebel. Jezreel is about twenty-five miles north of Samaria, the capital, among the spurs of Mt. Gilboa and on a 200-foot elevation. It was either the summer home of Ahab or the favorite home. Here he built his ivory palace, and from the windows of it he could see Naboth's vineyard.

Lesson Story

Desiring Naboth's vineyard that he might make of it a garden which would be a fitting outlook for his ivory palace on the hillside, Ahab offers to purchase the land. Naboth refuses, with the law and tradition on his side, for not even a king could force a man to sell his land. Spoiled, Ahab cannot stand the refusal of any desire. He sulkily goes home and to bed, where he turns his face to the wall. Here Jezebel finds him. Though she may not be more wicked than her husband she is strong where he is weak. "Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel?" she asks, assuming that his power as king should get for him whatever he desired. Then she says, "Arise, be merry. I will get you the vineyard of Naboth." But it must be done so as to put Naboth in the wrong. By her order, a feast was proclaimed through letters sent to the nobles and elders of the land stamped with the seal of the king. These were to have two witnesses ready to swear that they had heard Naboth curse God and the king. The penalty of this was death. When Jezebel's plans had been carried out, Ahab went down to take possession of Naboth's vineyard, for it was the law that if a man died for cursing the king, his property reverted to the king. In the coveted vineyard Elijah appeared before Ahab. "Hast thou found me, O mine enemy?" said Ahab. Then comes Elijah's prophesy, and Ahab has reason to know that the seer speaks truly, warning Ahab that as the dogs have licked the blood of Naboth so will they lick his blood. Thus it came to pass about four years later.

Leading Thoughts:

1. Respect for the rights of others. The world is big enough and prosperous enough for every man to have his place in it.
2. Might, versus right. The wrong use of power is well illustrated. Had Ahab's and Jezebel's might been used for right what a power they would have been!
3. The haunting power of sin. Whether or not a sin is discovered by the world makes little difference. The man who has committed it knows and the whole texture of his life must be changed thereby.

A New Gideon's Test

By REV. WILLIAM J. SLY, Director of Religious Education for New Americans

NO Christian work can be more important than discovering talent. As Barnabas sought out the young man, Saul; as Paul found young Timothy and as Sir Humphrey Davy made his greatest discovery in his apprentice Michael Faraday, so many a pastor and Christian layman will realize his greatest life-work and life-reward in some other life which he has helped to direct into useful leadership in Christ's great cause. It is estimated that Russell Conwell has helped more than 3,000 young men towards a Christian education. For years he has put his entire savings and all the proceeds of his lecture, "Acre of Diamonds," into boys. Dr. Ernest L. Tustin, former president of the Northern Baptist Convention, who recently died in Philadelphia, is reported to have aided no less than ten young men to go through Bucknell.

The New Americans' Division of the Religious Education Department of the Publication Society has provided for an award essay contest this fall and winter which is open to young people of foreign birth or parentage, fourteen to twenty-one years of age, members of Baptist Sunday schools who write and present an essay of 1,500 words in English on the subject of "The Value of a Higher Christian Education to Young People of Foreign Parentage in the United States." Awards of $100, $50, $25 will be given for the best essays judged on the basis of age, argument, expression and illustration; the money, if desired, to apply on a scholarship in some educational institution of the successful contestant's own choice.

This contest furnishes a great opportunity for young people of these groups. It is just as great an opportunity for all foreign-language pastors to discover talent. This contest is likely to prove a Gideon's test for it will furnish a list of the choicest young people in the Baptist churches among our New Americans and from this list will become apparent those that are enterprising, ambitious, painstaking, industrious, capable, spiritual. It will be a genuine modern Gideon's test. Blanks for enrollment may be secured from the American Baptist Publication Society, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. The essays must be sent in not later than May 1, 1922. The award will be made June 1, 1922.

The Baptist Church at Saint Paris, Ohio, has what is held to be the oldest Sunday-school class in the world. The teacher, Mrs. Eliza Riker, seated third from the right, is eighty-nine years of age and has been a Sunday-school teacher for seventy years. The age of the thirteen women in the picture, all of whom are members of the class, totals exactly 1000, an average of seventy-eight. There are only two of the women less than seventy years of age. The class has four members over eighty and ten of the women in the picture are widows.

Wait A Minute!

(A play suggested for women's societies and chapters of the World Wide Guild to give during the month of February.)

STAGE setting: room with two chairs, grandfather clock (see directions) and table on which are cover, lamp, Bible, ink-bottle, pen, paper.

MOTHER knitting beside the lamp.

ENTER CHRISTINA (wearing hat, coat, gloves, fur) Hello there, little mother of mine! (Kisses her.)

MOTHER: Christina dear, aren't you rather late? I've been waiting supper for you!

CHRISTINA: Yes, of course they had to keep us at the office on the very evening when we all planned to go to the movies! There's a return engagement of that remarkable Griffith film called "Hearts of the World" and we don't intend to miss it this time. (Tosses her fur scarf over back of chair and unbuttons coat.)

MOTHER (rising, puts knitting in basket on table): Then I'll have supper ready in just a minute. (Goes to door, then says): Oh, by the way, there's a letter for you on the table.

CHRISTINA (takes off hat, peels off one glove, leaving other on as she picks up letter): Well, what's going to happen! Mary Scott writing to me in the middle of the week! (Opens letter, and reads it aloud): "Darling Christina, don't be too surprised to hear from me, my dear, for I'm writing eight others just like it by the same mail, for I've just discovered that all of us have a sudden and thrilling chance to do the most marvellous thing in the world. You're one of the ten on my list, and I'm another of them, so what hits you hits me!"

"Perhaps you've heard that Baptist women have promised our denomination to secure pledges for $6,000,000 this year to apply on our $100,000,000 New World Movement drive. They're calling this $6,000,000 the Continuation Campaign, and I began by thinking that it was an awfully big job, and they'd simply never do it, and that they'd better not come near me—for you know that I haven't a very fat pocket-book; so really, I was dreading an appeal! But oh, Christina, I had the thrill of my life in reading the December number of Missions yesterday, for right on the first page was an alarm clock ticking away, with a really startling list beside it to show how any Baptist can support every blessed bit of Baptist work the whole world round for one second of time for only 64 cents, and for a whole minute for $38! The list went on to show how much an hour or a day or a week would cost, but of course those sums were way beyond my purse; but imagine how perfectly stunned I was to discover that for thirty-eight little dollars I, good modest, timid little I, could support for one marvellous minute every Baptist mission school, every kindergarten, every college, every hospital, every dispensary, every Christian center, every mission church, every gospel ship, besides over a thousand wonderful Baptist missionaries—all mine—not to mention every blessed Bible woman, and those splendid adventuresome colporters!! Well! I was flabbergasted, to say the least. For I've spent $38 on a new suit many a time, and considered it mighty cheap at the price. Yet think of this simply stupendous thing I can now do for $38! I've figured out it will cost me 11 cents a day for 365 days—and goodness knows I've squandered that much on sodas and movies and frills a hundred times over.

"So, Christina dear, here I am, passing on this news of a real bargain. You aren't a true daughter of Eve if you don't snap it up! I know you pledged something to the New World Movement drive two years ago, but that was before you had your present salary, which is my case, too; surely we can give now in proportion as God has prospered us! I'm sending you a copy of Missions herewith, so that you can see for yourself the ravishing opportunity of taking care of all those adorable babies and grannies as well as the dear in-between ages—your own, during that one spellbound minute. You'll do it, won't you, Christina? Lovingly your old pal, MARY SCOTT."

CHRISTINA (throwing letter down on the table, and peeling off her glove): Well, of all things! Does she think I'm made of money! Thirty-eight dollars, indeed! Huh! (Takes off coat with a jerk): The very idea! What does she think I earn every week, anyhow? I guess I've got other uses for my poor little salary. (Opens Missions. Turns pages with a frown, suddenly smiles): What an adorable child! (Turns pages) What a forlorn old soul! Poor dear! (Turns pages) Just the same, it isn't up to me to go squandering my hard-saved earnings. I've noticed they can always think up plenty of ways of spending other people's money. I'll just sit right down and write Mary a good flat "No, thank you, madam!" If I get it off my mind it won't spoil the movies for me tonight! (Sits down, uncorks ink-bottle, draws paper and pen toward her; slowly reads each word as she writes it): "Dear Mary, I'm very sorry that it will be utterly —" (hesitates, pen poised in air) let me see, how shall I say it, anyhow? (Meditates.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK (in a slow monotone):

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

"Behold I stand at the door and knock."

CHRISTINA (looks up, startled; listens; glances in a frightened way over her shoulder. Then nibbles end of pen, reflectively): Well, it's my money, isn't it? Nobody consulted me about starting this campaign? It's nothing to me if they fail! (Dips pen in ink-bottle) I'll just write that it's utterly impossible. (Is about to write when one by one the various Hearts of the World enter. To vary her actions, sometimes she may nibble end of pen, but oftener should dip pen in ink as if to write the fatal word!)

ENTER FOUR-YEAR-OLD CHILD (through case of grandfather clock. Has left arm thrust through an enormous red cardboard heart and carries in left hand an unlighted candle. Hurries over and touches Christina on the arm): Oh, wait a minute! Wait a minute! Is it really nothing to you that the little child hearts of the world must go walking in heathen darkness all their days? For see, our little candles have no flame. (Leans over and says in her ear) We all thought that your God loved a cheerful giver! (Stands behind Christina's chair.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! Tick-tock! "Behold I stand at the door and knock!"

ENTER (through clock casing) TWO SMALL BOYS (one wears Alaskan furs and pulls sled after him; other has bright Navajo rug around his shoulders, and one feather in his hair, held in place by red band tied around head.)

ALASKAN BOY (hurrying over): Wait a minute! Is it nothing to you that all the little Indian orphans in Alaska and America need Baptists to mother them during that one uncared-for moment of yours? (Stands behind her chair.)

INDIAN BOY (touching her arm): Red man ask, is it nothing to the white woman to make plenty big forgetting how it is more blessed to give than to receive? (Stands behind.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! etc.

ENTER THROUGH CLOCK SMALL CHINESE GIRL (gay pajamas may serve as a costume; carries school books in one arm, gay lantern in the other. Hurries over, makes a deep polite bow): Oh honorably wait a minute, most distinguished and glorious female! Is it nothing to you that your mission schools have no more room for small new pupils? Must all the rest of us go ignorant through life, thinking that the earth is carried on a dragon's back, that demons lurk in every bush, that evil spirits hover in the air? Oh, must we be like empty paper lanterns all our days, while you hold back the knowledge of the world? (Cocks her head on one side as if considering the glories of this grand personage, then bows quaintly.) Permit me to miserably remind you that "freely ye have received, freely give!" (Stands behind chair.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! etc.

ENTER COLLEGE GIRL (carries diploma, wears mortarboard cap and black graduate gown. Unrolls her diploma and lays it on table before Christina.) Yes, wait a minute, Christina dear! Is it nothing to you that not another girl in all the world should enter Baptist colleges? Look at the list of those who wait in America and throughout the Orient! Is it nothing that no one else should learn to teach the ignorant, to nurse the sick, and to redeem the lost? I would remind you, wage-earner that you are, that in Deuteronomy 8 are the words: "Thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for it is He that giveth thee power to get wealth." (Takes diploma, rolls it; stands behind chair.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! etc.

ENTER IMMIGRANT WOMAN AND HER LITTLE DAUGHTER (each wears checked apron, shawl around shoulders, gay scarf over head, tied under chin and carries big bundle done up in a shawl. Child is miniature duplicate of her mother.)

IMMIGRANT (drops bundle and wrings hands): Ach, wait ein meenit, Leddy! Ain't it nuttings to you that sooner I comes on this so beeg cuntry you gotta Baptist missionaree for to make callings on me? Ain't it nuttings that she climb the so high stairs und sits by me mit lovings, so that the immigrant hearts of the world they ain't got no awful lonely left in them? (Her daughter has also dropped bundle and is tugging at her mother's apron.) Vel, spik up, Becky! 'Scuse her, ledly, but she's nearly bust to say her leetle spill!

DAUGHTER (nodding head vigorously and gesticulating with her hands excitedly): Yah! Joost youse wait ein meenit, ledly! Ain't it nuttings to you that my mudder she learn proper how to bring up kids like me? Ain't it nuttings that youse gotta Christian center joost round the corner from our tenement where they tells Bible stories on kids like me, und learns me how to cook und sew und be a good American? (Both pick up bundles, stand behind chair.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! etc.

ENTER NEGRO GIRL: Yes, wait a minute! Is it nothing to you that all the black men walk the trails of fear and darkest ignorance—both black men in this land of yours and those across the sea in savage Africa? Is it nothing that we poison und we kill, that unknowingly we break God's ten commandments, and do this in he minute left for you to sponsor? (Joins others behind Christina.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! etc.

ENTER WHITE-HAIRED HINDU WOMAN (in black hanging draperies with a shawl-like sweep of goods over her head; bent over, very feeble; touches right hand to her forehead slowly as she says in high unavering voice): Salaam, oh greatmem ah! I pray you, wait a minute! Is it nothing to you that bent old grannies like me should creep their weary way on countless pilgrimages, seeking peace in vain? Is it nothing that we totter to our graves hungry for the very God you worship? Is it nothing that we live, and die, in outer darkness? (Limps over and quotes in her ear, pointing first to self, then to the others standing behind Christina's chair.) And Jesus, turning, said: "These are my mother and my brethren." (Joins others behind chair.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! etc.

ENTER BIBLE WOMAN (draped in white, carrying Bible): Wait a minute, member of a Christian church! Is it nothing to you that I, a Bible woman who have come up from darkness into light myself, should now be sent on joyful feet to those who thirst and hunger after righteousness? Is it nothing that I sit day after day on earthen floor in poor mud huts to open wide the Book of God to those who weary for your Saviour? (Stands behind chair.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! etc.

ENTER HINDU WOMAN (draped in colored cloth, carries bundle in her arms to represent a baby): Yes, wait a minute, you who were a cherished infant in the arms of your own mother! Is it nothing that my baby dies, and all my neighbors' babies, too, because we do not know the simplest rules of health you live by? (Stands behind chair.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! etc.

ENTER LAME OLD WOMAN (with Mexican mantilla over head, leading Mexican blind boy who wears dark glasses; sombrero on head, bright girdle around waist. Gropes with other hand): Yes, wait a minute, senorita, thou who art so strong and well thyself. Is it nothing that the lame and blind find hope in Baptist hospitals? That their gropings and their hobblings may be eased by followers of the Great Physician? (Both join others behind Christina's chair.)

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! etc.

ENTER TRAINED NURSE (in apron and cap; carries tray with empty pill bottles and empty blue Red Cross cartons): Yes, wait a minute, sister of mercy! Is it nothing to you that they burn their bodies to let out evil spirits? That they beat loud drums and shake the weary patient to chase away pain demons? Is it nothing when your Baptist hospital funds run low, when the medicine bottles are empty (holds a bottle upsidown to illustrate; same with carton), and the bandages, the gauze and necessary cotton are all gone? Is it nothing that He who raised the dead, and healed the sick at sunset time, said to His followers, "Greater works than these shall ye do because I go unto my Father?"

VOICE OF THE CLOCK: Tick-tock! etc.

CHRISTINA (tears up the letter she has

DEAR YOUNG RESERVES:

This play is for you, too, for surely you can see many parts just meant for YOU to play! Be sure to see that they give it in your church. Next week your poems are to fill both Chimney Corner pages!

started; rising, impulsively clasps her hands in prayer): Dear God in heaven, forgive me! What a Christian I have been! Of course it matters to me now—for seeing is believing! (Turns to look at those clustered behind her chair.) Oh, Hearts of the World, you are my heart now! Pain of the World, you are my pain now: mine to soothe and heal. And Ignorance of the World, you are mine to teach and elevate. (They smile joyfully at each other; the children noiselessly clap their hands, the older ones turn to one another, nodding.) All mine for one dear wonderful minute! (Opens purse, and counts out some money.) Thirty-eight dollars,—of course I can't pay it all at once, but oh! what a paltry little sum it really is, compared to all the good it's going to do! And how it brings the whole wide world into my heart!

HEARTS OF THE WORLD (together): "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

CHRISTINA (nodding to them): Yes, that's it! (Turns around to face audience.) Oh, I'd like to whisper it to each of you, to thrill your heart as mine is thrilled—"For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also!" Not one of us who bears the name of Christ can lock her heart selfishly at home within her pocketbook. There is a tie that binds hearts each to each the whole world round. Shall we not all join in singing "Blest Be the Tie That Binds"? (Turns to Hearts of the World) Come, stand by me! (They cluster around her, all holding hands; Japanese child with heart and candle standing in front.)

ALL SING TO TUNE DENNIS: "Blest be the tie that binds."

(Curtain)

Suggestions:

1. This play is simple enough to need only one good rehearsal, provided the participants have fully learned their parts beforehand. Christina, who has most to say, will find it a great aid to keep a copy of the play open on the table before her (with the letter paper this will be unnoticed). The other players have only one paragraph apiece to render, but each should assume that hers matters supremely! This is not so much a play as a prayer.

2. "Voice of the Clock" should be rendered by an unseen girl standing behind clock; choose some one whose voice, in monotone, carries tellingly to back of auditorium, otherwise much of the effect will be lost.

3. All entrances of those representing Hearts of the World are to be made through the open back of a grandfather clock. It is hoped that this clock, when made, may be set up against a doorway leading on to the platform. If there is no such door then a row of screens must be set up behind which all the Hearts are to wait in utter quiet until it is their turn to walk through the clock.

4. A grandfather clock can be easily nailed together by the church janitor from four boards, two long, two short, so that they will form a rectangular casing just

Topic for January 29

BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE AND WORLD FELLOWSHIPS

Ps 107:1-3

(B. Y. P. U. DAY)

Note: Topic for January 22 in "Young People's Service" should be "Crusaders of the Christian Faith." B. Y. P. U. Day should be observed on the 29th and not on the 22nd.

Materials. The pamphlet "Baptist Young People and World Fellowships" is now ready for distribution. Send to Headquarters, B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 No. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., or 408 Humboldt Bank Bldg., San Francisco, Cal., for enough copies to supply leaders of the meeting for the 29th.

Outline. Our young people have a chance at the creation of these fellowships, in part, because they are young. The possibilities of the next generation in constructive work are incalculably great. Many of the social institutions of the world have been pulverized in the last war. They lie in ruins and constructive work is the order of the day. It thrills us who are older, to think of the possibilities which are open to our brothers and sisters in reconstructing so much of the world's life. Some special reasons:

1. The World is now open to Baptists.
2. Baptists are well-fitted for such tasks because of their democracy of government and of spirit.
3. Because of their insistence upon a religious experience.
4. Because of their lay view of religion.
5. Because of their missionary view.

All Assets of Personality Needed. If Baptist young people with all the fitness which our Baptist faith has contributed to their preparation are still to share in creating the world fellowships that are to mean so much to the future peace and happiness of mankind, they must put into full practice all the assets of personality:

1. Our young people must be significant in themselves.
2. They must judge questions from the world's standpoint.
3. Their fellowships must be based on a similarity of spirit.

Baptist Young People's Day. Letters have gone out to all pastors asking them to join in the observance of the day. Speak to your pastor about it.

Communications have gone to all Baptist educational institutions in the United States and Canada, asking them to make provision for the observance of the day in some form. A large number have responded at this writing. It is quite possible that, beginning Jan. 22 and closing with Jan. 30, there will be delivered 10,000 talks and addresses on the subject.

We wish to ask all readers of this notice to join with us in bringing before the churches throughout the land the importance of our young Baptist life.

1922 Special

It affords us much pleasure to present in this issue of THE BAPTIST cuts of those who are going to assist in making our two Young People's pages in the paper the best in existence. There are twenty-nine representing state and city organizations of young people, the Young People's Division of the American Baptist Publication Society, City and State Directors of Religious Education, State Convention Secretaries, pastors and the Department of Missionary Education.

The next issue of the paper will carry an extended announcement about the new study courses. Watch for it.

THE TORCHLIGHT PROCESSION

Leadership is important; let us admit that. Leaders are indispensable; admitted also. Modesty also has its place, and humility its crown. Are we not in danger of over-advertising leadership of the pastoral kind if our news items in religious papers continue to look like a torch-light procession of preachers names, often lugged in, forced in, to an item that tells what a certain church is doing? "The First Church of Philadelphia, or of Gooseberry Corners—of which Rev. Soandso is the efficient pastor, has," etc. If the church has done an outstanding thing how would it do to let folks inquire who the pastor of that church is? I heard Prof. Albion W. Small decry the fashion of placarding a piano at a concert (as for example, "Chickway Piano, furnished by Up-and-Coming Piano Co."). He said that if the piano was noteworthy in its tone, people would ask about it. The editors say that often the flattering animadversions to "efficient pastors" are furnished by the pastors themselves—so, of course (of course), they must be true. But I have often wondered if pastors would really suffer, and if the looks of the news items would not be much improved, if for one issue, at least, we let the pastors rest, unless the item is a personal one concerning him.

HOW TO KILL THE PRAYER MEETINGS

Having attended the mid-week meetings of his church for many years and under varieties of pastors, and meekly received without audible protest the blame laid by the pulpit upon the pew when the prayer meetings became unprofitable, "The worm has finally turned and a Voice from the Pew essays to set forth from a reverse standpoint something of the Gentle Art of Killing the Prayer Meeting.

He does not claim these are the only ways, nor that the pew is without blame, but he merely craves opportunity to disclose a few of the plans which he has personally seen tried out with marked success.

(a) Let the pastor always talk not less than half an hour and until it is practically closing-time. Then let him casually say, "If anyone wishes to speak, we have a moment or two for brief remarks."

(b) Should any be so bold as to utter a thought not absolutely in accord with the pastor's ideas, the latter should at once take the opportunity to criticize the same, and even insinuate the speaker's untruthfulness.

1. No article must exceed 400 words. The editors will cut copy to that limit in the interest of fair play to all.

2. No attacks upon persons, either directly or by implication, will be allowed.

3. Controversy as such will be avoided, but every man or woman who honestly believes that he has a vital message for the denomination will be given a hearing.

4. Articles which are merely repetitions of arguments previously published will not be used while there is new matter on hand.

5. The editors reserve the right to terminate any particular discussion whenever it seems to them wise to do so.

(c) Read no more of the Scriptures than the verse or two needed for the introduction of your remarks.

(d) In selecting your subject, take none which will appeal to common folks, nor one which is especially suggestive; or, if there proves to be danger of this in any topic selected, talk it to shreds yourself.

(e) Let the pastor be careful always to call upon certain members by name for prayer. This helps all to realize they are immune from such duties after the named ones have been ordered to the throne of grace; and some who might otherwise take part will, if they do not happen to be called upon, begin after a time to feel they are intentionally overlooked. Moral: Jerked prayers are sure to give spiritual dyspepsia and eventual heart failure to any meeting.

(f) On your printed church calendar give full prominence to every engagement of the young people and the ladies, but do not allow more than a line or so for the prayer meeting.

(g) Refer sarcastically from the pulpit to those who fail to attend the mid-week meeting, and suggest it is because

Not when we are determined, come what may, to have a pleasant and a happy life; not then, as the reward of that insistence, does God bestow the music of the heart. He gives it when there is forgetfulness of self, and the struggle to be true to what is highest, though the morning break without a glimpse of blue, and the path be through the valley of the shadow. The one sure way to miss the gift of happiness is to rise early and sit up late for it. To be bent at every cost on a good time is the sure harbinger of dreary days. It is when we have the courage to forget all that, and to lift up our hearts to do the will of God, that, like a swallow flashing from the eaves, happiness glances out with glad surprise.—G. H. MORRISON.

they do not want to think, reminding them this meeting is the pulse of the church—a mechanically actuated pulse.

(h) Never give the Holy Spirit a chance to interfere with your control of the service. Always remember you are the ordained leader of the church.

Any pastor who will faithfully carry out these suggestions can be assured of success in killing his prayer meetings.

P. E. W.

Boston, Mass.

EXTRACT FROM A PERSONAL LETTER TO PRESIDENT MONTGOMERY

There are two ways open to us in our present situation and only two that I can see:

First, we can take the attitude of the Roman Catholic Church and control the teaching in our colleges. That would mean the end of the freedom of thought.

Second, we can trust the Christian men and women in our colleges to work out a type of thought and of religion that will actually function in the educated classes. I believe that this is in very rapid course of development at the present time. But it is not a religion that is based on formulas; it is a religion of service and an attempt to be Christlike rather than Calvinlike.

It is a good deal the situation out from which Methodism came and the great theologians of the fourth century came. Only it is a fundamentally different conception as to what Christianity really is from that which was formulated in the eighteenth century. It is a part of the general movement of a return to Jesus Christ, away from the formulas into which the development of the Roman Catholic Church forced the Christian church. It is moral and religious rather than theological. It is exactly the distinction which Jesus Christ himself makes.

Do not understand me to say this involves the denial of personal immortality and a personal God. It does, however, it seems to me, make it imperative that we people who, as we believe, have thought our way through into the period of readjustment, should stand for freedom of thought in our colleges. The moment we yield to what those in the majority may think is indispensable, we are transforming the Baptist church into a new type of Catholic church.

It is a really tremendous task we face. It is so desperately easy to follow the trail of Catholicism—an ecclesiastical authority built up to control men's minds for fear lest freedom of thought will cause mistakes. God knows that whoever tries to think will make mistakes; but he also knows that it is the truth and not ecclesiastical control that makes men free.

The "Finish the Task" Campaign in East Washington and North Idaho

By A. H. BAILEY, General Superintendent

On Sept. 13 East Washington-North Idaho Convention began a "Finish the Task" campaign for the purpose of raising in cash and pledges $200,000 to complete its quota of $626,000 in the New World Movement. We were favored in having Rev. W. H. Bowler, general field representative of the Northern Baptist Convention Promotion Board, with us to advise, counsel and assist in setting up the campaign. The plans for the campaign were provided by Bro. Bowler and the writer believes that they are the best that have yet been devised. Bro. Bowler not only proposed the plans and assisted in setting up the work, but he also took responsibility for directing the campaign and put the plans in operation in the Spokane district. The convention was divided into eight districts and volunteer workers were secured to have charge of each district. The necessary traveling expenses of these volunteer workers were paid. There was no other expense to the campaign. Each worker was in charge of a district consisting of from seven to nine churches and was therefore able to give personal attention to each church, and in most instances was present during the canvass. The campaign covered the period from Sept. 13 through Thanksgiving night Nov. 25. Unfortunately the last six days of the campaign were most seriously interfered with by a storm such as has not been known in the memory of white men. Five transcontinental trains were stalled for a period of five days between Spokane and the coast. The storm was accompanied by below zero weather, and coming as early in the season as it did found the majority of people wholly unprepared to cope with its severity. Nearly a third of the churches had planned to put on their canvass during these last six days but owing to the storm were unable to do so. This is the main reason why we have been so slow in sending out a report of the results of the campaign. I have been reluctant to send out a guess or an estimate. The figures which are now in reveal the fact that the campaign has netted new pledges toward the New World Movement totaling $47,231.62. This is less than one-fourth of the amount which we were attempting to raise. It is unnecessary to say that these results are extremely disappointing to the writer and yet they reveal two things. First, the extremely grave financial situation which the East Washington-North Idaho Convention field is facing together with the entire country, and second, they reveal a spirit of denominational loyalty and of sacrifice for missionary interests which are very gratifying. We have been given to understand that the effort in East Washington and North Idaho inspired the promotion board members at Indianapolis to take courage, and nine other state conventions have decided to put on similar campaigns. We are glad that we have made the effort. We believe that the gravest sin we can commit just now is that of not trying. We are determined to let nothing stand in the way of constant and most earnest efforts to reach our goal by April 30, 1924, the end of the New World Movement period.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

On Dec. 18 occurred the corner stone laying of the Royal Oak Church. That splendid 82 years' young congregation is coming into new strength and vigor under the inspiring leadership of Rev. George E. Dawkins. This new edifice will be the third and by all comparisons the largest and finest in all its history. This is to be the auditorium proper and later a Bible school and social unit will be added. The writer gave a historical address Chairman Thomas J. Jackson of the local building committee told of the plans; Pres. W. W. Smith of the Detroit Baptist Union which, with the Home Mission Society is aiding in the new enterprise, spoke of the happy spirit of cooperation, after which Supt. Gleiss gave a sermon and appeal for funds which resulted in nearly $5,000 being added to the building funds. S. H. Morgan, a member of the building committee of the Detroit Baptist Union, also spoke. Every possible effort will be made to get into the building by early fall.

Bethel Church, in Royal Oak township, is planning for enlargements—must have them to care for the enlarging membership and Bible school. Baptisms are frequent.

In conformity with a readjustment of associational lines in Michigan, the Detroit Baptist Association has voted to limit its area to fifteen miles of the city limits of Detroit. The Detroit Union has also voted to enlarge its operating limits to the same and divide lines of work. This will enable the Union to better anticipate the needs of its environs and suburbs. Mt. Clemens, Council Corners and Birmingham now will function with their big metropolitan sisters.

Detroit is the fourth largest Polish city in the world. There are about 180,000 of these frugal, constructive people in Detroit. It is said that not over 60,000 are in any way affiliated with the Roman Catholic church. This leaves a great unchurched constituency and the Baptists are endeavoring to reach them. Rev. Jos. Rzepecki has done a splendid work, principally on the west side of the city. Now Rev. Mr. Morzé has been engaged to take up a work on the east side, where there is a very large settlement. The Detroit Union is actively engaged in preparatory work looking to an adequate Polish Christian center. This is greatly needed as our work among these people is very poorly housed in rented quarters.

Jefferson Avenue Church has extended a unanimous call to Rev. Harold L. Reader, of Webster Groves, Mo., a suburb of St. Louis. It is expected he will be on this splendid field early in February.

Detroit Baptist churches will hold an evangelistic and stewardship conference at the First German-American Church on Jos. Campau Avenue, on Jan. 9. Rev. J. E. Norcross of New York, Rev. H. H. Ford and Rev. F. L. Currey are the speakers. The stewardship committee of the Detroit Union will have charge of the dinner program and the evening session, H. C. Macdonald presiding at the first and E. E. Staub at the latter. Rev. A. V. Allen is to give an illustrated talk on the joy of stewardship and tithing.

No part of our work is more productive of good than that done by our seven women missionaries. All of these sisters are most self-sacrificing and God-honoring in their service. The ladies of the Warren Avenue Church tendered a Christmas reception to these missionary workers Thursday afternoon, Dec. 15. The state board of the Women's Union prepared splendid Christmas presents for all of them. We are glad to welcome another such worker in the person of Miss Emma Becker, of Pittsburgh. She was trained at the Christian Workers' Training Institute, Philadelphia. She comes as missionary of the First German-American Church, Jan. 3.

At Stanton Park, Pastor Weachter and his loyal people are experiencing a new joy in Christian service. A number of new members have been received. The field has been divided into eight districts with a leader from each, with three or four helpers. Every week some one is visited for Christ and the church. They plan a roll call and every-member canvass in January and evangelistic meetings beginning Jan. 22, with Rev. H. H. Ford assisting. Since Brother Ralph K. Smith became superintendent, the Sunday school has greatly improved; 215 in attendance a few Sundays ago.

Rev. C. A. Daniel, pastor of the First German-American Church, spent a recent Sunday in Bay City where a new work among the German-speaking Baptists is being developed. The pastors of our German churches are taking turns going to Bay City for these services every two weeks.

At Redford, a residence suburb of Detroit, Rev. Harold H. Davis, pastor, the financial canvass for 1922 has been made, netting the largest returns in the history of the church. A class of seven was baptized on Jan. 1st. This is a field handicapped by insufficient room, but a new edifice will probably be built during 1922.

Burns Avenue Church, Rev. Benjamin Graf, pastor, is prospering. The church building has been repaired at an expense of $2,700. Baptisms are frequent; $400 was received in an offering for relief of the poor in Russia.

Christmas festivals of one sort and another have been held in all our churches and missions. The thought of giving has been generally stressed with splendid results and increased happiness. Never have our Bible schools been so largely attended and so well organized.

St. Louis Letter

By W. E. DARROW

Of interest to the Baptists of St. Louis and vicinity is the annual training school for Sunday-school workers, women's missionary societies and pastors to be held at the Third Church, Jan. 15-20. It will be opened with a mass meeting at the Third Church on the afternoon of the 15th at 3 o'clock. Members of the faculty will speak. The classes will be held each evening, beginning with Monday, from 6:15 to 7:05 and from 7:35 to 8:25. A cafeteria lunch will be served at the church from 7:05 to 7:35. Rev. L. M. Hale of the Delmar Church will conduct the chapel service each evening from 8:25 to 8:45. At 8:45 on Monday evening and later Prof. Frank Powell of the Southern Theological Seminary, will speak. The evening program will close at 9:30.

An excellent faculty for the training school has been provided. J. C. Hockett, Jr., Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. secretary of Missouri, will be the director and teach the Sunday-school manual, divisions I and II. Rev. R. K. Kelly of the Lafayette Park Church, will teach division III of this manual. Mrs. M. M. Ginn of Nashville, Tenn., will teach the course for beginners and primary; Mrs. G. W. Scruggs of this city, the course for juniors; Mrs. W. H. Geistweit, also of our city, the course for intermediates and Rev. H. F. Atwood of Illinois, the course for seniors and adults. Dr. S. E. Ewing will have a class in the "Doctrines of Our Faith"; Rev. E. L. Pinkerton of the Immanuel Church, a class in Old Testament History and Dr. R. B. Whiteside of the Euclid Church, a class in New Testament History. Rev. W. S. Wiley of Nashville, Tenn., will have a class in evangelism; Rev. L. R. Call, a class in psychology and Rev. Oliver Shank, of the Fourth Church, a class in teaching. In addition to these there will be opportunity for mission study. Miss Laura Lee Patrick of the Delmar Church will conduct a class each afternoon during the week on the work of the W. M. U. We are to be favored with the presence of Dr. M. D. Eubank, who will conduct a missionary conference each afternoon and teach a class in mission study during the evening class periods. Rev. P. G. Van Zandt of the West Park Church, will direct the singing. Miss Hilda M. Huppert of the Fourth Church has charge of the enrollment, Dr. S. E. Ewing and Miss Laura Lee Patrick will look after matters of finance and entertainment; Rev. L. R. Call of the Second Church is in charge of the publicity and C. J. Prince, supt. of the Third Baptist Sunday School, is secretary of the school. The writer is chairman of the Sunday school committee, St. Louis Baptist Association, arranging for the training school. This training school promises to be the biggest and best of its kind ever held in our city.

and is looking forward to its dedication at Easter. The week preceding dedication prayer meetings were held each evening. For two weeks Dr. Meyers conducted special meetings, preaching the gospel with truth and sincerity and many were blessed. The pastor is a consecrated, energetic man, an enthusiastic worker, among young people, and the church has grown numerically and spiritually under his ministry. A missionary spirit prevails and the church hopes to have its own missionary on the foreign field. With a more commodious building and good organization it expects to do more for the Master in the coming years.

FIRST CHURCH OF RIVERSIDE, Rev. Richard E. Day, pastor, held an impressive new membership service recently, at which sixty persons received the hand of fellowship. A red carnation was handed to each new male member after his welcome and a white carnation to each girl or woman. This addition to the church is the outcome of a two-weeks' revival service conducted by the pastor with Prof. B. F. Stout as soloist. Already seventy-five have been received and the number who have signified their intention of joining totals 100.

ON SEPT. 1 REV. DUNCAN M. MCPHAIL entered upon the ninth year of his pastorate with this church. He is in demand as a speaker on special occasions. On Dec. 2 he gave the address to the graduating class of the State Normal School at Bellingham, which has this year about 1,000 students. Dr. Irving E. Miller, professor of education, and Dr. L. A. Kibbe, professor of psychology and education, are active members of First Church, Dr. Miller having a large class of Normal school pupils in the Sunday school. Dec. 7 the pastor gave the address at the quarterly rally of the B. Y. P. U.'s of Vancouver, B. C., and environs, one of the most flourishing Young People's Unions in the West. Dec. 8 the church held its annual business meeting and banquet. About 180 people enjoyed the excellent dinner prepared by the ladies. Reports were encouraging. The debt on the new Sunday-school building was materially reduced. The outlook for the coming year is full of hope. A new feature in the church work is the junior choir of about 25 members, composed of high-school students. This choir is under the direction of Mrs. Irving E. Miller and Mrs. Charles Yule.

REV. DAVID Q. BARRY HAS RESIGNED AT Bellevue to accept the unanimous call of Bethel Church, Gresham, Ore.

COLORADO

BETHANY CHURCH (west side), Denver, Rev. F. F. Butler, pastor, held a series of revival services Nov. 20-Dec. 18, with Supt. G. G. Laughlin of Denver Baptist Union assisting the pastor. The results were thirty-five conversions, twenty-nine baptized and four awaiting baptism; nineteen others received by letter and relation of former Christian experience, many renewals of faith and the signing of fifty-two for definite personal work. This is the second series of meetings in which Evangelist Laughlin has led Bethany Church, the first being in April, 1921. Fifty-six baptisms have so far resulted from these meetings. The church voted unanimously to invite Mr. Laughlin for still another series as the Lord may open the way.

UTAH

IMMANUEL CHURCH, SALT LAKE CITY, burned the final $3,000 mortgage held on its property Sunday night, January 1. There is rejoicing over being out of debt on the $100,000 church plant. With the lifting of this load there is a spirit of determination to enlarge the local program of work, and to substantially increase missionary contributions.

MAINE

WILLIAM GEORGE COOPER, London evangelist, has closed a 12-days' campaign with the South Berwick Church. Brother Cooper's work was of the finest order. The pastor speaks in highest praise of methods used and results gained.

THE LORIMERS of the fourth generation enter the ministry with the ordination of Frank W. Lorimer, son of Dr. Addison B. Lorimer of the Central Square Church, Portland. Graduating at Yale, 1916, after one year at Newton Theological Seminary, Mr. Lorimer enlisted for army service. After the armistice he was executive secretary of the Y. M. C. A. camp at Beame, France. He took his M. A. at Chicago University in 1921. During the autumn he did special graduate work in Union Theological Seminary. He has been called to the pastorate of the Harlem Street Church on the East side, where he will have opportunity to lead in social service for which he has exceptional preparation. Dr. Birney S. Hudson was the moderator of the council and Rev. J. Harrison Thompson, clerk. In his statements, Mr. Lorimer dealt principally with the revelation of the truth and will of God that had come to his soul through his Christian experience. He gave it as the duty of the minister to bring men to the knowledge of God through Jesus Christ, and into such association as Christian brotherhood and service alone provide. The following program of ordination service was carried out: Sermon, Dr. Birney S. Hudson; ordaining prayer, Dr. A. B. Lorimer; hand of fellowship, Rev. A. D. Paul; charge to candidate, Rev. J. Harrison Thompson. Mr. Lorimer will continue special work at Union Theological Seminary in connection with his church at Harlem.

THE FIFTH ANNIVERSARY of the successful pastorate of Rev. Francis S. Bernauer in historic First Church, Bangor, was observed with enthusiasm Dec. 11. During this period the church has made substantial gains in all departments of its life and service—the beautiful meeting-house of stone has been freed from an encumbering debt; congregations, Sunday schools, prayer meetings, all church organizations, have largely increased; the church has had a large share in the New World Movement and has also increased its local benevolences. The pastor is a strong, thoughtful, interesting preacher and musician, conducting orchestra and chorus choir. The Christmas cantata "The Light of the Ages" was given with a chorus of forty voices and a twenty-piece orchestra, the whole being conducted by Mr. Bernauer. The "Hallelujah Chorus" from the Messiah was effectively given as the closing number. At a platform service in the evening hearty testimonials were given as to the value of the service rendered in this pastorate, especially significant being the testimony of those who had been led to Christ. Mr. Bernauer spoke of the joy of the service and Mrs. Bernauer, licensed preacher who has rendered important service not only in her home church but in some of the smaller churches of the suburbs, made a gospel appeal to which there was response. On Monday night following, pastor and Mrs. Bernauer were tendered a surprise reception at which a substantial purse of money was presented to the pastor.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

A COUNCIL CALLED by Carroll Church to consider the ordination of Miss L. B. Treadwell convened with Manchester Church on Dec. 28. The council was organized with Rev. D. S. Jenks, secretary of the convention, as moderator, and Rev. A. N. Chandler, of Berlin, as clerk. The council was unanimous in its vote approving ordination and arranged for ordination service to be held the evening of the same day. The order of the evening service was as follows: Sermon, Rev. H. G. Clark, Portland, Maine; ordaining prayer, Rev. D. S. Jenks, Manchester; welcome to the ministry, Rev. W. W. Harris, Whitefield; charge to candidate, Rev. A. N. Chandler; charge to church, Rev. E. M. Fuller, North Stratford. Mr. Fuller also had charge of the music, Miss Treadwell has previously served as pastor in Maine and New Hampshire churches. It is now more than a year since she took the pastorate of Carroll Church at Twin Mountain. The church had suffered great losses and seemed beyond recovery. Under Miss Treadwell the work has been reorganized and revived; there have been baptisms and the church has come to its own materially and spiritually.

VERMONT

FIRST CHURCH, BURLINGTON, ALTHOUGH pastorless had a good time during the Christmas season. The quartet and orchestra prepared an elaborate musical program, under the direction of Mrs. P. G. Hill with Miss Jessie B. Cilley as organist for Sunday morning. Sunday evening the children from the Bible School gave a concert under direction of Supt. Harry L. Ford. Superintendent Ford arranged for a White Christmas. The women from the Home for Aged Women and the children from the Home for Destitute Children were the guests of the Bible School Monday evening. After an entertainment enjoyed by a full house, presents were distributed to the guests and children of the Primary Department. Everybody received a box of candy. The church has been presented by Mr. Arthur G. Crane with 200 copies of "The New Century Hymnal" in memory of his mother, Mrs. Harriet B. Crane. The old Baptist Hymnal and responsive reading books were given to the State Convention for use elsewhere. One thousand hymn books could be used among our little churches to good advantage. If any church or Bible school has good hymn books not in actual use, the Vermont Baptist State Convention will be glad to receive them and put them where they will render good service.

DERBY CHURCH, REV. F. E. DAVISON, pastor, recently redecorated the interior of the church edifice and painted and improved the outside. This work was done under the leadership of Mr. Albert A. Silver, Jr., at an expense of about $450 and is paid for.

THE FEDERATED CHURCH AT GRAFTON, REV. Geo. E. Congdon, pastor, recently held a series of special meetings in which he was assisted by one of the state workers, Rev. Walter F. Sturtevant. These meetings resulted in the quickening of the church members and in fifty people declaring their desire to become Christians. Sixteen have already been received into the Baptist church, eight being from one family. Thirty-nine signed tithers' cards. The contributions for both local expenses and benevolence will be greatly increased. Pastor Congdon has faithfully sown the seeds for five years and is now reaping the harvest.

RICHFORD CHURCH, REV. GEORGE POMFREY, pastor, has had a good year, having raised and paid for current expenses $2,871.60 and for missions $723.75. The church has received into membership by baptism eighteen, by letter five. Pastor and people are united and the outlook for 1922 is encouraging.

VERMONT ACADEMY CLOSED ITS FIRST term with 126 students enrolled, all of whom have done good work and expect to return for the opening of the school January 3. The faculty and students are a happy family, with Principal McFarland as father and Lady Principal Swaffield as mother. The first issue of the resurrected "Vermont Academy Life" has appeared and shows that teachers and students are doing good work in every department.

MASSACHUSETTS

INSTEAD OF THE USUAL children's Sunday evening Christmas concert this year, members of the Bible school of the Winter Hill Church, Rev. H. Douglas Pierce, pastor, had a Christmas tree entertainment and cantata during the week. Christmas evening a unique candle-light vesper service was observed—a service of carols, prophesy, instrumental music and tableaux representing the "Vision of Angels" and the "Adoration of the Magi," with suitable music accompaniment. The audience taxed the capacity of the church. It was an epoch-making occasion. The real Christmas spirit has been much in evidence this year. In this service over $70 was contributed for Near East relief and Christmas dinners for over eighty people.

RHODE ISLAND

IN THE EXTENSION COURSES AT BROWN UNIVERSITY, 1,501 students are enrolled. Of these, 388 are in the recently formed Community School of Religious Education, established by the cooperation of the university and the R. I. Sunday-school Association. These courses are given every Friday evening. From 7:45 to 8:30 Prof. Marion E. Bratcher, associate pastor of Calvary Church, lectures on "Old Testament History and Literature"; and Dr. Leonard C. Harris lectures on the "Life of Christ." At 8:30 all classes meet in Sayles Hall for devotional service with an address by some leading minister. At 8:50 p.m. the classes separate again into sections to study either "Sunday School Administration," "Demonstrations in Sunday School Training" or "Story Telling." Thus nearly 400 Sunday school teachers are now studying at Brown University.

NEW YORK

TABERNACLE CHURCH, UTICA, has been pastorless since September, when Dr. Perry J. Starkhouse resigned to go to Chicago. The church has a membership of 976 and is considered the strongest church in the Oneida association, both numerically and financially. Rev. Edward M. A. Bleakney of Hyde Park, Mass., has been called and has accepted, his pastorate here to begin in March.

THE COUNCIL called by the People's Church at Endicott to inquire into charges made against the character of its pastor, Rev. Ernest Doloway, adopted the following resolution at the close of the session: "While finding itself unable to be unanimously satisfied as to the guilt of the accused, the council considers the charges and the evidence of such character as to preclude Rev. E. S. Doloway's further usefulness as a Christian minister, and therefore recommends to the People's Church that it accept at once his resignation. The council recommends to the Rev. E. S. Doloway that he refrain from the exercise of the privileges of a Christian minister until such time as a regularly called council, to which representatives of this council shall be invited, shall authorize their resumption. The council would suggest that the church secure as stated supply for three months or more some man of experience and good repute, such as Dr. C. S. Savage or Dr. A. E. Waffle."

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

AT BEREAN CHURCH, Carbondale, Dec. 29, with Rev. C. Mason Jones, moderator, and Rev. James H. Carter, clerk, Raymond J. Cornish was ordained to the Gospel ministry. The sermon was preached by Rev. P. H. Lynch, Newcastle. Other parts by Rev. J. S. Thomas, Rev. F. A. Stanton, Rev. J. H. Carter. Mr. Cornish is a graduate of Bucknell and will graduate from Crozer next June.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

FIRST CHURCH, WASHINGTON, Dr. Henry Allen Tupper, pastor, has passed into the fourth year of Dr. Tupper's services. During this period a revolution has been wrought in every department of church life. Hundreds have been added to the membership; the congregations, representing many states of the Union and prominent officials of the government, have increased greatly; offerings to missions and benevolences have grown tenfold; every Thursday evening the lecture room is filled at the devotional services where new members unite week by week; a complete organization of the church has been effected and the whole body is being grouped for service under appropriate officers and chairmen of committees. A band of over 200 young people associated with the B. Y. P. U. meet Sunday evening and are enthusiastic in their practical and spiritual work. The attendance at Sunday school has doubled. Preparations are now being made for the celebration next March of the 120th anniversary of this historic church.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

BELLEVUE CHURCH, REV. CHAS. A. DECKER, pastor, is making preparation for an intensive campaign of evangelism from January 1 to Easter Sunday. The aim is to win seventy-five persons for Christ and the church during that time.

PARK CHURCH, McKEESPORT, REV. W. R. HILL, pastor, is now holding services in the Bible school rooms of its new church. Dedication week observed January 8-15.

AN ORCHESTRA of twelve pieces leads the song service of First Church, McKEESPORT, Rev. Jas. S. Braker, pastor, Sunday evenings. An interesting "Five-minute Answer Forum" is held at these services. Ten were baptized Christmas evening and fifty young people sang Christmas carols in various parts of the city.

WEST VIRGINIA

WHEN VIRGINIA WAS STILL an English colony, the Simpson Creek church was founded where the town of Bridgeport now stands. The church record goes back to 1775, and the church may be older. Though this church is the oldest one in W. Va., and one of the oldest in the United States, it is still carrying on a vigorous work. About twenty-five new members will soon be received, the result of a meeting held by Dr. Wm. J. Cambren. The Sunday school claims the youngest Sunday school scholar in the world. Pins for regular attendance are given and Charity Day will receive her nine months' pin on her first birthday. She has missed only one Sunday since she was three months old, and was excused that day because of sickness. Her sisters aged 10, 12, and 14 years, are among those to be baptized soon.

STATE LEADERS ARE BUSY SHAPING PLANS for the continuation campaign. This stupendous effort will be under the general direction of the department of promotion with the state director of promotion especially in charge. Mrs. W. M. Grey of Chanute has accepted the position of women's state director in the campaign. Her successful experiences in the past bring added encouragement to all. The work will be conducted along associational lines with a director and associates covering the territory of each association. Ten weeks, beginning Jan. 22, have been agreed upon as the period for the canvass and right of way is sought for this extraordinary effort in behalf of the One Hundred Million fund.

THE SPLENDID MEETING HOUSE of the Wichita First Church is crowded at most of the regular services. A sentiment has been created that the necessity of advertising standing room would prove an asset to the church worth several thousand dollars per year. Pastor J. B. Smith has an assistant and adequate office help. The whole program of the church is moving forward with the spirit of conquest.

THE HUTCHINSON CHURCH under leadership of Pastor H. W. Cole gathers strength. An adjacent property has been purchased and plans are being thought through for needed enlargement of the building. Recent union meetings in the city brought large additions to the membership. Pastor Cole is the president of the Kansas Convention.

THE CHURCH at CHANUTE recently had a gala service in which it cancelled all indebtedness on the building and burned the mortgage. This is one of the churches that went over the top in their pledges for the New World Movement and has been meeting payments with splendid regularity. It is happy in the financial progress, though at the present time passing through some straits because of temporary unemployment. E. H. Cook is pastor.

AN EXCELLENT AND ADEQUATE HEATING PLANT has been installed in the Bethel neighborhood building, Kansas City. Miss Nathana Clyde and her helpers conduct an enlarging service of great benefit to the surrounding populations. P. H. Seise, executive secretary of the Kansas City Baptist Union, has his office quarters in the building. He is busy in important tasks connected with the mission enterprises of this industrial end of the growing city.

OTTAWA UNIVERSITY is encouraged in its work. The student body is enthusiastic. Its teams have made some excellent records. The new athletic field is now being graded and shaped for use next season. The funds for this needed improvement were started by a large gift from the class of 1921. The Kansas City Theological Seminary is also in the midst of a splendid school year. The students and faculty supply many churches within a radius of fifty miles.

THE OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF THE FIRST Church of Coffeyville, Kan., are rejoicing in the splendid Christmas gift made by Mrs. E. A. Upham, consisting of a commodious house and one and one-half lots with a seventy-five foot frontage, adjoining the church property on the east. This will be the center for the primary and beginner's departments of the growing Bible school. The dedication service was held on Christmas morning. Mrs. E. A. Upham is the teacher of the young men's Bible class, president of the Women's Mission Circle, and is greatly beloved not alone for her consecration of time and money, but more for her fine Christian character and inestimable service for the church, Bible school and missions.

BENJ. D. PROFIO, Colgate University, was ordained Dec. 28, by a council called at First Church, Greenfield, O. A. W. West of Washington, C. H., was moderator; H. M. Fullerton, deacon of Greenfield, clerk; pastor E. O. Smith (Colgate '94), examiner. The evening sermon was preached by A. W. West. Charge to candidate was given by E. O. Smith; ordaining prayer by Dr. Theodore M. Hofmeister of the First Church, Greenfield. Pastor Hofmeister presented the young minister with a beautiful Bible, the gift of the church.

UP TO DECEMBER, 1919, the state convention had helped Bellevue Church support a pastor, there were 76 resident members, all laboring people; $1,000 was the high-water mark for pastor's salary, $200 of that coming from the state convention. Dec. 1, 1919, the church called Rev. A. G. Adriance. With some difficulty it was persuaded to raise the pastor's salary to $2,000 and to cease taking money from the state convention. Two years have passed and the pastor has yet the first week to wait for a cent of money. There have been a few accessions but no more than have been erased so membership remains about the same. Following is a comparative statement: 1919, $1,000; 1920, $1,901.96; 1921, $2,206.51. To this last amount must be added $200 raised for the painting of the church but not reported by the treasurer because it was a separate fund handled by a special committee. The astonishing thing is that the church contributes the present amount more easily than the $1,000. The church is convinced that it does not pay to make religion cheap. The mission offerings have undergone as radical a change as the current funds. On New Year's day the pastor baptized and received ten into the church. As the evening service closed he was presented with a purse of $40 and wished a Happy New Year.

JOHN W. TEASDALE was born Nov. 13, 1838, in Fredericksburg, Va., died in Charlevoix in the early fall. His parents were Rev. John Teasdale and Susan Losey Teasdale. He became a Christian when a boy, uniting with the church at the age of eight. He came west with his parents in 1851, attended school at Shurtleff College, Upper Alton, Ill. He came to St. Louis in 1854, and united with the Third Baptist Church, and at the time of his death was the oldest male member of the church. He filled the position of treasurer, trustee and deacon. He had charge of the rebuilding of the main auditorium of Third Church on Grand Avenue. He established his business in 1862, which developed into the largest dried fruit business in the United States. He was an active worker in the Third Church up to a few years ago, when illness laid him aside. He was a liberal supporter of the kingdom. He leaves behind him the heritage of a good name, a lovable character, a devoted disciple, a faithful and hard-working servant in the work of the kingdom.—W. H. Geistweit.

MEMBERSHIP IS SCATTERED, but there is a good opportunity to build up a strong church at Enders. There is a heavy debt on the new church building. Rev. K. S. Douglas will soon take the pastorate. This is the only Baptist church between McCook, Neb., and Holyoke, Colo. If any brethren find it in their hearts to help in the struggle, communicate with Mr. W. H. Humphrey, Enders, or the pastor.

DR. JOHN MASON WELLS, PRESIDENT of Grand Island College, was with Fairbury Church, H. M. Wyrick, pastor, Jan. 1. He spoke in the morning on "The Church and the Future"; at night on "The Hopes of Humanity." Some of the strongest leaders of the denomination have occupied the pulpit of this church, including many national men, yet the verdict of the congregation was that no man had ever made a stronger impression. Surely there are great things in the future for the college under his leadership.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF RACINE has been used by an overwhelming vote to accept the resignation of their pastor, Rev. Henry Clarke. The preamble to the resolutions signed by about four hundred members of the church reads as follows: The First Church of Racine presents an outstanding example of the achievement possible under the leadership of a truly great pastor. When Dr. Clarke took charge, eleven years ago, we stood facing many serious problems. He showed us how to conquer them all. Under his wise, constructive, far-seeing leadership the church has progressed steadily through the years to the eminence it now holds. We have all felt the might of Dr. Clarke's spiritual influence and have become better men and women, and better Christians, for having felt it. We have but to look around us to see ample evidence of his ability as a master of material affairs. For us, and for our church, he has proved himself a builder. Leadership like his is not found every day. Our pastor has led us a long way and always in the right direction, but there is still much to be done. In view of his wonderful record, do we not owe him the opportunity to complete his plan of constructive development?

THE NEW CHURCH BUILDING at Park River is being enclosed, and roofed as rapidly as possible. When completed, it will be one of the finest small church buildings in the state. The exterior will be of stucco and crushed granite.

WORK HAS BEEN STARTED on the new church building at Roseglan. Rev. C. W. Finwall has been giving considerable time to this field. Some splendid results have been realized in conversion of influential people in the community, and in securing of pledges for the new building.

REV. R. A. NORTON, IN HIS new charge at Melvin, finds a loyal band of workers willing to stand by a pastor who has the Gospel message to give. The church feels a loss through the removal to California of Burton Groat and Orval Groat with their families. Another great loss is sustained in the death of Mr. J. O. Hilborn, Dec. 21, after a lingering sickness of over a year. About fifteen years ago he was licensed to preach the gospel and served the churches at Washington, Elmer and Laurel until his health no longer permitted. Rev. Roberts, Rev. L. A. Townsend and Miss McIntyre gave inspiring addresses one afternoon and evening in the interest of the New World Movement.

HUDSON AVENUE CHURCH, Detroit, is still handicapped by inadequate facilities for carrying on its work; but this does not diminish the ardor, loyalty, or liberality of the people. On Thursday, Dec. 29, after a happy time at the supper table, young and old put their gifts into a large stocking made for the purpose. When counted, this amounted to $1,685.14. Twice within three months the church has given the same amount toward the new building.

FIRST CHURCH, LANSING, has been observing the week Jan. 8-15 as education week, with the following program as announced in the church bulletin: Sunday 10:30—"The Place and Possibilities of the Modern Church School." Our S. S. teachers and parents special guests. Monday to Friday 6:00—Supper conferences at Y. W. C. A. Monday—"Sunday School Administration." Tuesday—"Elementary Work." Wednesday—"Young People's Work." Thursday—"Adult Work." Friday—"General Sunday School Work." Both local and strong out-of-town speakers. Sunday 10:30, the 15th—An unusual program. Pastor will review with the congregation current issue of Missions. 7:00—A special Boy Scout program. Our Publication Society has some of the best modern books here for that week.

A HOME FOR GIRLS will be erected near Logan Square, Chicago, if the Ruth Society of the Logan Square Norwegian Baptist Church, Rev. J. O. Sotaas, pastor, continues to help to the line as in the past. Jan. 1, 1903, at the instigation of Rev. C. W. Finwall, then pastor of the church, twenty girls organized themselves into a society for the purpose of aiding (especially) foreign-speaking girls seeking employment; or in case of sickness, distress or temporary non-employment, to offer girls and unmarried women a place of refuge in Christian environment. The membership has grown considerably, with Miss Dorothy Knudsen, 3232 Wrightwood Ave., as president. With the money the members systematically put into the treasury, the society bought a valuable lot 40x135 feet and have paid for it with a snug, safely invested, interest bearing surplus. Rev. C. W. Finwall, for the last six years at Bismarck, N. D., was invited by the society to give the address of the evening at their last annual entertainment on Thursday evening between Christmas and New Years. At its close he appealed to the large audience to aid the Ruth Society in its building enterprise, with the result that $1,700 were added to the building fund. When the plans materialize forty to fifty girls will be accommodated, protected and given opportunity for development along Christian lines.

Charles Hubbard Spalding 1837-1921

AN APPRECIATION BY CHARLES H. WATSON

It would be a large company of mourners, were all who loved Dr. Spalding gathered together. Few men among his own people, especially, were more highly honored, or widely known and cherished. Hearts will melt in tenderness all through New England, as contact with his warm and gracious personality is recalled, with the saddening reminder that they shall see his radiant face no more.

True, it was an official relation with the churches that afforded him such wide contact. But it was that in him which made the relation far more than official—that made so many friends, and that now will make so many mourners. He loved many, therefore many loved him.

It is undoubted character that forms the solid basis of an enduring affection. And when that character becomes gradually enriched by the pursuit of its own Christian purposes, and its enlarging interests, its eminence is accounted for. But when the grace of God pervades it all, the full display of it is largely, sweetly human:

"Honor, love, troops of friends."

One's first impression upon meeting Dr. Spalding was: "Here is a man of Character!" Especially in his later life was this impression most certain. Every friend of his marked his ripening and strengthening after he had passed his sixtieth year. There came to his spirit a chaste austerity, and a certain majesty in its public expression of itself. It made him a marked man in our Baptist assemblies, where his honorable ministry and his distinguished denominational service were known.

His pastoral ministry of twenty years in four churches was a creditable and valuable prelude to his larger secretarial work of twenty-five years among all the churches. In both of these ministries, he kept what he gained and added to it. The pastor was not lost in the secretary—only greatly enlarged.

Nothing is easier in so long a secretarial service as his than to lose edge and distinction—to become more like a man "on the road," with refinements somewhat impaired and mentality made monotonous because of confinement to the same line of appeal. It takes character to buffet that tendency; and perceptibly to grow in refinement, whet your own mental edge and add to your capital of Christian competency. This he certainly did.

Dr. Spalding's character was kept and enriched by an unyielding conviction. His conviction always seemed broad and solid at its base. You could be sure of him whenever truth was involved, and when love enswathed it. Like a rock he was solid in fixity, but there were broad harvest fields around it that suggested tolerance, and an open vista that spoke of freedom. He had the conservatism that ripens into intelligence, and that keeps Christian brotherliness free from taint of suspicion. That is a nice balancing of conviction that keeps us faithful to truth, yet tolerant to another's differing conviction which comes to him by a freedom in the truth like unto our own.

With such a conviction, Dr. Spalding proved to us that courage could go. Always like a Christian man unafraid, he held to his conviction without a flinch. The Spirit of Jesus possessed and shown, was his supreme test of a Christian, never any specific literalism. Courage for duty—when did he ever lack it? Trimming, to avoid an obligation that promised unpleasant consequences—had he any of that? He had flash, heat, indignation when meanness, injustice, or wrong provoked him. Then he would raise his voice; and his voice was just like himself—clarion, out-speaking, brave, yet tenderly kind and resonantly true.

Consecration was the pure flame in which all these personal qualities were fused. It was kindled when as a boy in business life he yielded himself unto God and soon found his career as a student at Suffield, Brown, and Newton, then as a minister. It was fed from the unseen all through his toiling years, into ever-increasing strength and beauty, until the worn out servant lay wearily, yet triumphantly, in the everlasting arms that were underneath him. His consecration buoyed him up through every changing circumstance, kept him faithful in every day's work, fed his spirit as from unseen springs, and latterly, mellowed him into a ripeness of mind and sweetness of soul that made him a benediction wherever he went.

In the weekly assembly of his brother ministers, his good gray head was always looked for in its accustomed place. We were certain that in any emergency it would help us to sanity and safety. How devoutly he prayed; how kindly he listened; how radiantly he hoped; and how tenderly he loved! There, and in the church home at Brookline that he blessed, his heart seemed ever to be enlarging the circles of its affection.

He was still bearing fruit in his old age in fulfillment of the promise, and according to the terms of the covenant made so long ago.

In that inner circle of home, where with best beloved children and grandchildren so much of his life was spent, we can confidently declare his Christ-like influence; but its sanctities are safe from our intrusion. Doubtless to them the remembrance of him will seem more and more like a heavenly vision unto which they would not be disobedient.

His heart wavered not, as, conscious of waning powers, he faced the last great mystery. He was never uncertain. He knew Whom he believed. He launched out on the dark sea confident that his haven would be his Lord.

wide enough and high enough for the players to walk through. The dial may be made of a circular piece of white cardboard tacked in place at the top of the box-like casing, the center of the dial to be at center of upper casing. For the usual weights use tassels at the ends of ropes of uneven length. Hang a dark curtain over back of clock so that entrances may not be too noticeable before they are made. If the players sit on a chair beside this curtain just as their turn comes they will find that, with a little practice, it takes fewer motions of stooping and stepping to go through the casing! The clock should be securely fastened to wall or floor so that it cannot fall. This is highly important!

5. A far more beautiful effect may be obtained if the auditorium is darkened so that the only lighting comes from a lamp burning on Christina's table. Not only will the crudity of the home-made clock be hidden, but the mystery of its "voice" will be heightened, and the appeal of the Hearts of the World will sound more gripping in the softer glow.

6. Following such a presentation, certain societies may wish to make an immediate appeal for pledges. If this is to be done, we suggest a unique pledge-card which has been used on similar occasions with telling effect: a 1½-inch circle of white cardboard with two "jogs" left on opposite sides of the circle through which a string may be run to form a wrist watch. Number the hours around the margin. Since Valentine's day is at hand there will be no trouble in buying tiny red gummed hearts to paste in center of dial, after which mark in the hands. Without any comment these watches should be tied on the wrists of the audience as they enter the door. When the play is over, and a passionate appeal has been made for "minutes" and "hours" of time to be pledged, the bow-knots of string may be untied, and pledges, also names and addresses, may be written on reverse side. This suggestion makes an especial appeal to girls, and if watches are not desired for pledge-cards they would make very alluring in-itations. Tie them on the wrists of those you invite on the Sunday preceding the meeting.

7. Before and during the time of pledging do not dissipate the effect of the play. Hymns played softly on the piano will do their share in the time of consecration; and have you ever tried having a hymn hummed as a prayer, books open, so eyes may follow the words? Another suggestion for this pledging time is to have the Voice of the Clock continue its monotone: "Tick-tock! etc." Appropriate hymns would be: "Something for Thee," "Take My Life and Let It Be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee," "One More Day's Work for Jesus," "Lord, Speak to Me, That I May Speak."

Remotest Asia Reports West China

I. Outstanding Achievements.

1. The assumption of responsibility in the several departments of our work—evangelistic, school and medical—of our Union middle school and college-trained Chinese leaders.

A graduate doctor from the medical department of our Union University is doing specially good work with Dr. Tompkins in our hospital at Suifu, while a second graduate from the department of education is associated with Mr. Moncrieff at Munroe Academy.

2. Crowded girls' and boys' schools in each of our stations and in all grades.

3. Real evangelism welcomed and a large number of baptisms in our Suifu field.

The writer has never known a time when the common people were more willing to hear the "good news" than now. He has been in campaigns where thousands were reached with the message of life and where literally tens of thousands of Christian literature portions were sold and distributed. As of old, "the common people" hear us gladly.

II. Outlook.

I am writing on Armistice Day and believe what is done at Washington the next few days will be a great factor in our work for 1922. Relations between China and Japan have been very much strained and the student attitude toward Japan is exceedingly hostile. Only with peace within her borders may we hope for advancement in our work.

At the moment provincial political conditions are far from satisfactory and the people are suffering from military oppression on the one hand and bandits on the other. Some of the main highways are unsafe for travel.

III. Needs.

1. Decidedly more and better-trained Chinese leaders is our first need.

2. More cooperation among the several churches and less denominationalism.

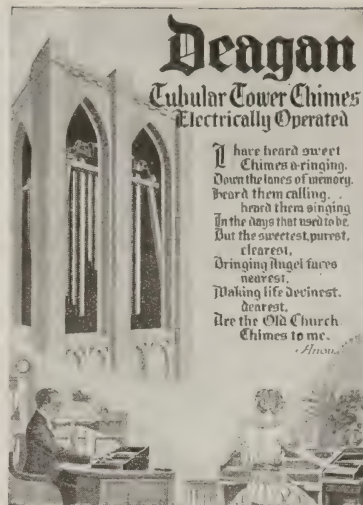

3. More and better equipment for our work.

We have had some splendid additions to our missionary force during 1920-1921, but our appropriations have been cut; special requests tabled, with consequent crippling of efficiency.

West China has and will be a fruitful mission field.

HALF A CENTURY AS ORGANIST OF CHURCH

Jubilee of William E. Wood

A recital of unusual interest was that given on Sept. 25 in the First Church of Arlington, Mass., by William E. Wood, organist emeritus, in celebration of his fiftieth anniversary as organist at this church. The recital was given in the afternoon and drew a large attendance of church members and friends of the faithful performer who has devoted almost a lifetime to the organ bench. The program was largely reminiscent and included several compositions which were given to Mr. Wood by his teacher, S. B. Whitney. The list of offerings included: "Te Deum Laudamus," Claussmann; Pastorale in G, Whitney; Invocation in B flat, Gullmant; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Cantilena in D flat, Salome; Trio in F, Merkel; Offertoire in A flat, Read; "Hymn of the Nuns," Lefebvre-Wely; Prayer, "Adorabunt Nationes," Friedrich Himmel; Largo (from "Xerxes"), Handel; Berceuse, Faulkes; "Marche Triomphale," Wachs.

Music, with Mr. Wood, who was born in January, 1852, has been an avocation. His manufacturing business has occupied full days since early manhood. His father, William T. Wood, who was choir leader and who played piano and the violin, started him at an early age on both instruments, and during school days he was under the instruction of S. Payson Prentiss, then organist at the First Parish Church. In 1867 he substituted for four Sundays at the Baptist Church. In May, 1868, when sixteen years of age, he obtained his first regular position as organist at the Orthodox Congregational Church and was made director the following year. His father died in July, 1871, and Mr. Wood began his service as organist and director at the Baptist Church Oct. 1 of the same year. Ill health has caused a number of interruptions during this long period, but he serves at the morning services from time to time, and the present organist, Mark S. Dickey, always graciously welcomes him.

In 1879 a new organ was installed in the former Gothic, wooden church and in preparation for that Mr. Wood studied intermittently for two years with S. B. Whitney, organist of the Church of the Advent, Boston. In 1900 the former church and organ were burned, and in 1902, under supervision of Mr. Wood, a large three-manual organ was installed in the new church, he being largely responsible for the specifications.

As Mr. Wood stepped from the choir gallery on Oct. 2, he was met at the door by Deacons Watson and Leetch, who conducted him to the pulpit platform. Here he was received by Dr. Potter, the pastor, who presented a testimonial in which the church expressed its esteem and love and appreciation of a half century of service not only as organist but as a member and long-time official. At the same time Deacon Watkins affixed to the name plate on the keyboard of the organ a bronze plate, bearing the following inscription:

1871—OCTOBER FIRST—1921

In appreciation of the devoted and gratuitous service in this church of

MUSIC REVIEW

From Carl Fischer, Cooper Square, New York City.

Your Tender Voice.....Contrell ($.40)
Only a Word.....Contrell ($.50)

These two melodious songs, issued separately under the composite caption of "Two Heart Songs," are simple in structure, with direct sentimental appeal, usable for either teaching or concert purposes. The adept hand of the composer is seen in many deft touches in the well-written and effective accompaniments; all in all, two songs that should gain a wide use for their simplicity and beauty. They are issued in two keys—for high and low voice. The ranges called for make them ideal songs for teaching purposes.

From J. Fischer & Bro., Astor Place, New York City.

In My Heart There Lives a Song.....Branscombe ($.60 net)
Travelin' to de Grave.....arr. by Reddick ($.50 net)
Wee Little Floweret, Schminke ($.50 net)
Are They Tears, Beloved.....Grieg ($.50 net)

Four very interesting and valuable songs from one of our most progressive publishers. The first two are issued in two keys (for high or low voices), the third listed appears for high and medium ranges, and the Grieg song is issued in a medium key only. In the first song noted, we have a lovely melody, charming in its easy flow, richly harmonized with an adequate supporting accompaniment. It is a "singer's song" of the better class, destined to attract because of the inherent beauty of its outlines rather than by any particular profundity of content. Mr. Reddick is gradually making a fine place for himself as arranger or imitator of the type of song known as "Negro Spiritual." Burleigh, to my notion, has never been approached in mastery of this field; it is high praise to class other arrangements with his! The number now under consideration is worthy of such comment. It is a most interesting folk-melody set by a master hand, not hard to sing, and returning fine interest on the time spent in mastering its message. The Schminke song is a simple appealing melodic number of limited range, of especial value for teaching purposes or home use. The Grieg song is a reprint of one of the great master-songs by a master-composer. Deems Taylor, well-fitted for the task by his known literary and musical achievements, has supplied an exquisite, singable translation of the original Norwegian text. A song to be studied and appreciated by all singers worthy of the name! A wider knowledge and resultant valuation of such songs would automatically banish much of the banal arid trash so steadily forced upon an ignorant or careless public by cheap publishers, who imagine that they have to play down to a debased public taste. Congratulations to Mr. Fischer for the fine class of songs he is releasing these days!

have been strengthened and feeble knees confirmed. Faint hearts have been cheered. The unifying influences of these endeavors are exceedingly interesting and important. Firm friendships have been forged among those who have thus labored together in the gospel.

Encouraged by the glowing successes in the most difficult district, where are to be found the greatest number of our pastorless churches, our small churches, our remote churches, our determination is to carry the campaigns in rapid succession through the remaining sections, until the hills and valleys of Ohio shall once again be vocal with the praises of our Redeemer. Granville. T. F. CHAMBERS

States of the Rolling Prairies

North Dakota

SEVERAL items stand out in the work of the past year. More than fifty series of revival meetings have been held in the state. Some of these were of unusual power and success. The churches reporting baptisms this year show an increase of 100 per cent over the number reported by the same churches last year. The missionary offerings of our churches show an increase of 400 per cent over those of the previous year. Naturally, along with evangelism and an enlarged giving has come consecration of life. Our Life Service League, organized during the year, now has an enrollment of seventy-five and may reach the 100 mark before the end of the year.

All of our state meetings, including those of our foreign-speaking groups, have this year been of unusual spiritual power. God has surely visited us. Our first young people's convention was held this year.

We have a still larger program of advance for the coming year. Financially, the outlook is exceedingly dark—spiritually, it is equally bright. Two new church buildings will be dedicated during the year. With more consecrated and God-fearing pastors, we shall enter new fields and assume new tasks. Grand Forks. FRED E. STOCKTON.

South Dakota

AMONG the outstanding achievements of the year past might be mentioned: 1. The payment of a large percentage of money due on our pledges to the New World Movement. 2. A very large increase over the previous year in number of additions to our churches. 3. A very large increase of money pledges on local church budgets—from 50 to 90 per cent.

The outlook for the year 1922 is hopeful. It includes a state-wide campaign for Christian Stewardship which will carry with it a deepening of spiritual life; evangelism pressed in all our churches; pastors and people all cooperating loyally to attain the objectives and put on the program adopted at Des Moines. Our aim is to make every Baptist church 100 per cent Christian and 100 per cent efficient in the work of the kingdom of God. Sioux Falls. L. L. MANN.

Nebraska

OUTSTANDING achievements are: 1. The new Grand Island College spirit. A 60 per cent gain in student body indicates the growing confidence of Nebraska Baptists in our college. The new president, John Mason Wells, is winning the hearty cooperation of all. The outlook was never so hopeful. 2. The largest amount contributed to the missionary enterprises in the history of the state. 3. Opening of our new Christian community center, "Fellowship House" in Omaha. In a field 70 per cent foreign, it promises large returns in Christian Americanization. 4. Three new churches organized. Rev. F. W. Benjamin called to lead in our town and country church work, and plans matured for an advance program including one Christian community center in a distinctly rural field. 5. The largest evangelistic results in years. Nebraska shows a larger number of baptisms compared to membership than the standard set by the denomination at large.

Nebraska, a distinctly rural state, has been hit harder than most states in the recent recession of farm prices, but the churches are evangelistic, united, led by capable, spiritual pastors, loyal to Christ and his missionary program, and we expect a year of great advance in every department of our work. Grand Island. WALTER I. FOWLE.

Kansas

FOUR outstanding achievements may be mentioned: 1. With but one exception the denomination reports the largest number of baptisms of any year in its history. 2. Although general conditions were not favorable for church building enterprises, some good meeting houses were constructed and a number of properties were remodelled or enlarged. 3. The missionary work of the convention surpassed in volume and results the records of any previous year. Ninety-six workers reported the largest number of baptisms, together with marked increase to the churches in other ways. The entire state felt constructive uplift at a time of special need. 4. The benevolent contributions of the churches were the largest for any calendar year of our history. They maintained a standard two and one-half times as high as was reported prior to the New World Movement.

The outlook for 1922 embraces four items: 1. We are now setting up our plans for a state-wide, united effort in the Continuation Campaign. Our people feel the financial strain but we are hoping for good responses in the world program. 2. More than a score of churches are promoting building enterprises and awaiting the approach of the promised "normalcy." Favorable economic and crop conditions will witness the erection of many excellent and much-needed church buildings. 3. The convention voted to accept the Home Mission Society's proposition which turns to our state grave responsibilities in the church edifice department. It was also voted to study with our Swedish Baptists, plans for enlarging the equipment and maintenance of the Sunset Home and Hospital. These two enterprises are enough to try out our mettle and aggressiveness for any one year. 4. We are hoping for definite advance in the regular constructive lines of church activities. Topeka. J. T. CRAWFORD.

Iowa

OUTSTANDING achievements of the past year are: The large increase in membership; amount of cash actually paid in during the year for the New World Movement; the new impetus given to our work at our state educational institutions through the hearty cooperation of the local, state and national leaders; the marked advance made by the Des Moines University in faculty, students and equipment; the splendid new church buildings erected during the year.

For 1922 we are justified in looking forward to a larger denominational consciousness, a general spirit of unity, and more effective cooperation; the determination to look the great task ahead of us squarely in the face; notwithstanding the tremendousness of the obstacles in the way to "carry on" in his name. Des Moines. G. P. MITCHELL.

On the Roof of America

Montana

DURING the year 1921, two edifices were completed, furnished and dedicated at Havre and at Roundup. A new edifice for Negro work was erected in Great Falls, though not completed as yet. The evangelistic spirit was evident and with one exception our churches baptized more new members than in any previous year in our history. A superintendent of evangelism was appointed for full time service. Our Indian work marked a year of unusual achievement among the Crows. The work developed through long years by the American Missionary Association was taken over and merged into our already great Baptist Crow Mission. Two new American churches were organized. Three colporteur-missionaries and three district missionaries covered untouched areas with the gospel message. Our convention cooperated heartily in the Montana plan of the Montana Home Missions Council, a unique interdenominational organization for Every Community Service Endeavor. In May the convention held a very successful annual meeting in Butte and has launched plans for a Baptist Summer Assembly to be held at Helena next June. Seven vacation Bible schools held successful meetings and were everywhere commended for excellence of service rendered. The New World Movement has been kept constantly before our churches. 1922 comes in with promise of a greatly increased interest and with one of the best programs ever adopted by our convention. Lewistown. G. CLIFFORD CRESS.

Wyoming

FEW churches of any denomination in Wyoming have adequate equipment for up-to-date work. Equipment is one of the major needs of our denomination in this state and we are glad to report that we have made some real advance along this line during the year 1921. Cheyenne First has completed additions and improvements to its old building, making it outstanding in the community as an instrument with which modern church work can be done in all of its phases. In addition to the main auditorium, the church now has a standard gymnasium and all rooms and departments needed for the social and religious educational life of the church.

Beginnings have been made and brought to a point of usable completeness at Torrington and Powell. When completed these will be up to the hour plants.

Standing on the threshold of the new year we look and hope for beginnings on four modern buildings, the completion of the religious, educational and social service unit of the building of Casper First.

the securing of an able director of religious education; a vigorous winter evangelistic campaign, full accomplishment of what is asked of us in the continuation campaign for the hundred million dollars, and a successful summer assembly on permanent grounds.

Casper.

Colorado

SIXTEEN new churches organized; six new meeting houses erected; over 1600 baptisms; 92.16 per cent collections on New World Movement pledges; enthusiastic support of the New World Movement by the women of Colorado in their continuation campaign; plans well laid for an extensive campaign to complete our New World Movement quota; not a single self-supporting church pastorless in the state the last week in December and the larger number of our mission fields well manned—these are the outstanding features of Baptist work in this state.

Denver.

F. B. PALMER.

Arizona

THE outstanding achievement for the past year has been the ability to keep all our work going in spite of the financial depression. This has been due to the New World Movement funds. With the mines of the state opening February 1, the outlook for 1922 is very encouraging. Several mission churches should come to self-support and several new church houses built. Two new stations should be opened for American and two for Mexicans.

Northern California

FOLLOWING are the outstanding achievements for Northern California for the past year: Great increase in financial receipts—1919, $57,900; 1920, $149,000; 1921, $198,000. Great spiritual uplift among churches, reaching allotment of New World Movement. Growing tendency on part of churches to give on basis of half to local work, half to world-wide missions. Five hundred more Baptists than previous year. Young people have formed Volunteers' League with forty-nine volunteers for ministers and missionaries. Phenomenal growth in foreign work. The Japanese business men of two leading centers approving Baptist policies and doctrines, made unsolicited request that our board take their church and make it Baptist. The doors are wide open in both places without effort on our part. The outlook for next year is good. The churches are setting themselves to reach every goal of the New World Movement. A simultaneous evangelistic campaign started January 1. There are no professional evangelists as leading pastors volunteered their services for conducting the campaign and meetings.

Southern California

THE year 1921 has been a notable one in Baptist circles in Southern California. There has been a constantly rising tide of spiritual interest and power.

The convention held in May at Riverside was marked by deep devotion, encouraging reports and splendid enthusiasm, indicating a year of remarkable achievements.

There has been an increase of 165 per cent in conversions and baptisms over 1920. Additions to the churches have far exceeded those of any previous year. New churches have been organized, new houses of worship and parsonages have been erected, but not a tithe of the number needed to meet the unprecedented opportunities that abound on every hand.

Work among the hundreds of thousands of foreign-speaking people has been enlarged. A training school for the preparation of ministers for the Spanish-speaking people has been established in Los Angeles.

Terms of cooperation have been effected with the Negro Baptists and assistance has been rendered them in ministering to our 150,000 Negro population, which is increasing with amazing rapidity.

Interest in religious and missionary education has exceeded all expectations. Many institutes and conferences have been held and schools of missions have had an overflowing attendance. The growth of Redlands University has been most gratifying. Although several new buildings have been erected, the attendance of students has more than kept pace with the material development. Additional accommodations are imperatively needed at once.

Consciousness of world-wide relationships and needs has been greatly developed. Every Baptist church in Southern California contributes to denominational causes. Subscriptions through the New World Movement exceeded ninety-five dollars per capita of resident members and $26.28 per capita was paid on same during the year.

Our unity and solidarity are being constantly strengthened by hearty allegiance to the Christ of the New Testament. We see no hope for the lost world excepting through God's wondrous grace in the crucified and risen Saviour. We recognize our duty to hasten to give his gospel to all men everywhere. Our preachers do not soft-pedal the essential doctrines of the historic Baptist faith.

More than 90 per cent of the pastors attended the pastors' retreat held in September. A wonderful spirit of unity, harmony and fellowship prevailed.

The outlook for 1922 indicates a continuation of the same character of achievements as those of the past year. We shall continue to place emphasis upon the spiritual life, loyalty to the Word, evangelism, world-wide missions and Christian education.

Our serious embarrassment is the amazing increase of population, the unparalleled growth of our cities and the development of new sections. With present resources we are utterly unable to meet this situation adequately. We are compelled to yield many strategic opportunities to others or leave them unimproved, opportunities that can never come again. Unless the proper foundation work is done now we cannot function largely or strongly in the terrific contest between Christian and Pagan ideals, the battleground of which is in this enchanting wonderland.

Additional Reports

Western Canada

TO those of us who are close up to the situation there have been no outstanding achievements during the past year. However, there has been real progress made in securing further and final payments on our denominational forward movement, and in spite of adverse financial conditions, considerable progress has also been made in connection with the Brandon College extension campaign.

In each one of the four provincial conventions there is an earnest effort being put forth to achieve real results in sane evangelism and along the lines of religious education.

Notwithstanding the alarming crop failures and hard shortage of funds, we are looking forward to 1922 with confidence that it will be one of the best years in our history.

HOWARD P. WHIDDEN.

Brandon, Manitoba.

Tasmania

THE outstanding achievements of the past year were:

1. The splendid foreign missionary spirit shown by our members—the giving to foreign missions was about 15 per cent of our membership and in home missions, too, the giving was good.

2. A forward move made at Hobart, the capital of our state. An Anglican building was purchased at a place called Sandy Bay and is now in charge of Rev. G. Wainwright, late of England.

Rev. E. H. Holiday returned to England at the end of this year. The Hobart Church will be ever grateful for the splendid work done by its late minister. Over 100 were added to the church in 1921.

The outlook for 1922 is fairly bright. Industries are being established by the state authorities, which will bring population. A large field will then present itself to us for work. Our need is money and men. More money would enable us to push ahead. Still God is with us.

Latrobe.

Swedish Baptist General Conference of America

DURING 1921 the interests of the Swedish Baptists have been centered largely about educational matters. The fact that the Bethel Theological Seminary was just rounding out the first half century of its existence gave occasion for the strong jubilee note that pervaded the anniversaries in St. Paul, Minn., last September. It was recorded with thanksgiving that 247 students had been graduated from the seminary since the day it was organized by Dr. J. A. Edgren in 1871 as a department of the Union Baptist Theological Seminary. As an institution it is still young and vigorous, rejoicing in an increasing number of students, a capable corps of teachers and an excellent curriculum.

During 1921 some progress has been made with reference to an Endowment Fund, although the movement along that line has been somewhat retarded by present financial depression.

The evangelistic work of the conference shows progress. Two general evangelists are at work on the conference field, and a third one has been called for the Pacific Coast region. His acceptance is confidently expected.

The prospects, in spite of changing conditions of the field, are bright with hope. Linguistically our churches are in the transition stage. But with the changing language there is no change in the message. Constantly growing in number, increasing in giving for the Lord's work, the Swedish Baptists of America are looking forward hopefully.

THE MOUNTAIN AND ITS ICY FINGER

MOUNT RANIER from Paradise Valley Ridge, near Paradise Valley Hotel, Ranier National Park, reached by easy automobile ride from either Tacoma or Seattle.

Delegates to the Northern Baptist Convention at Seattle can readily make this trip at slight expense. The chances are that few of them know that a glacier of this magnitude, put forth by a mountain like a great icy finger, can be reached so easily. Indeed the Northwest is so rich in wonderful scenery that it properly never ceases to urge that all the rest of us should "See America First."

Fresh from the Field

The Beverage Journal, formerly a Brewers' paper, says that 667 former breweries are now making non-intoxicating near beer; 431 former breweries are now making other drinks; 118 plants are making soft drink syrups; sixty-three are making malt syrups; 145 are manufacturing ice; fifty are cold storage warehouses, and 152 are still idle.

Comment was made in THE BAPTIST of Dec. 31 on the opportunity for missionary work afforded by the city of Chicago. A correspondent notes that, according to the Jewish year book there are 225,000 of that race in the city.

The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin calls attention to the international makeup of the soccer team at Cornell this year. The goal keeper is a Cuban, the full-backs are English and Irish, the half-backs American, Peruvian and Chinese. Among the forwards are two South Americans, a man from Argentina, a Frenchman and an American. Readers of THE BAPTIST should realize the foreign mission opportunity that is offered in our great universities. The Board of Education is trying to meet this end through its university pastor work.

Rev. J. W. Donnelly who was called to the Ridgewood Church, Joliet, Ill., has been released in order that he may go to the much larger field at South Haven, Mich. The Ridgewood Church, therefore, is yet looking for a leader.

While at Marietta, Ohio, where he is now acting pastor of the First Church, J. W. Weddell is using his pen for editorial work on two new volumes of Moody's sermons about to be published in book form and is making corrections for a new edition of "Your Study Bible," his marginal notes through fifty years of Bible markings.

Three thousand dollars looks mighty good to a Baptist preacher, but Rev. M. C. Eidson pastor of the Beacon Hill Baptist church, San Antonio, Texas, has just torn up a check for that amount which came to him as a mark of gratitude on the part of John Duncan, Sr., a railroad man, for the part the preacher played in leading him to Christ. "I am preaching to win souls and not for the almighty dollar," was the preacher's explanation of his conduct. When Mr. Duncan learned of the destruction of the check he arranged to accompany 100 of his fellow railroad workers to San Antonio to attend a revival conducted by Mr. Eidson.

The Auckland Baptist Tabernacle has completed a wonderful year under the ministrations of the Rev. Joseph W. Kemp. The membership stands now at 686, 120 having been added during the twelve months. In the month of March the church called the Rev. A. S. Wilson (the general secretary of Auckland Y. M. C. A.) to be associate pastor. Over 160 conversions were recorded in an evangelistic campaign conducted by the two pastors assisted by Mr. C. J. Rolls, of India.

Adelaide Street Church, London, Ontario, is experiencing a gracious time under the leadership of Rev. G. A. Lechlitter, formerly of the Colorado Avenue Church of Dayton, Ohio. The hand of fellowship was extended to nine new members at last

A Most Serious Charge

Rev. John R. Estes, of Muskegon, Mich., writes several good things about the paper as a whole and then turns on the publisher's page with vengeance: "I like it for three reasons. It has 'pep'; it is newsy and it tells the truth." This charge almost crushes us. After we have worked so hard to be judicial, why could he not have said, "It is pious, dry and equivocal." In these days who is there in the religious newspaper game who wants to be charged with telling the truth? Let them speak up.

Killam's Kollum

The Lord Pity Him

We received a letter some little time ago which would wring tears from a stone. It is from a pastor. He says: "Dear Killam, I want advice. I have in my church a maiden lady. She sits in a conspicuous place in the congregation and approves or condemns with a nod or a shake of the head. It has been for some weeks near perpetual motion. I am told that those head movements determine with accuracy the length of any man's pastorate. She has been doing a lot of 'shaking' lately and I fear I must seek another field. My chief sin has been that I have called on others to pray in the public meetings instead of doing that for which I am paid." The Lord pity him for he is almost in the position of an editor of a denominational newspaper. It is "nods" here and "shakes" there and sometimes we fear we must seek another field.

There Will Be No Bill

"Will you send me additional copies of THE BAPTIST of Jan. 7? We are to have on a Wednesday night reports of the various societies and countries. Each person will be assigned a definite part of the report. Send me a bill." When a man has the good sense to plan such a meeting it would be a crime to send him a bill. The same good sense will in due time find a way to have THE BAPTIST visit every family each week.

A Business Method

Who says pastors are not business men? That statement must be modified. It may be that some pastors are not good business men. For that matter some business men we know are not shining examples of business genius. Study for the moment the tactics of Rev. H. F. Adams of the Twelfth Avenue Church, Belmar, N. J. Very few of his people were acquainted with THE BAPTIST. He felt that it was for their interest to become acquainted. He purchased twenty copies for a series of weeks. He gave these copies out to families who ought to have the paper. He now writes: "A number have indicated their purpose to become subscribers. I shall see them all soon." We call this an example of good business sense. The denomination has established two journals—THE BAPTIST and Missions. The same sub-committee of the Administrative Committee is seeking to further the interests of both journals. Why should not every pastor make it his business to introduce his people to both of these papers? The combination rate of $3 makes a most attractive offer. Of course both subscriptions must clear through one office.

communion service. The morning attendance has doubled several times and the evening congregation crowds the Auditorium seating well over 1,100. This has been a consistent growth and the Church does not experience the usual "off nights." It has found a regular place in the lives of a host of the city folk.

The International Sunday School Association will hold its sixteenth quadrennial convention in Kansas City, Mo., June 21-27 inclusive. Prayer is asked that God's spirit may be present in power at this gathering.

The McAll Mission in France will be fifty years old on Jan. 17. It was begun at that time as a ministry of life to the newly-born French Republic. Stations of the mission have been established in Paris, Lille, Roubaix, Rouen, Amiens, St. Quentin, Nantes, St. Etienne, Marseilles and Nice, and the record of the half-century achievement is written in thousands of regenerated lives from the channel to the Italian border. An anniversary offering of $50,000 is being raised to commemorate the event.

Large Gift to McMinnville

At the annual meeting of the board of trustees of the McMinnville College held January 10, announcement was made of a magnificent gift of property, valued at more than $250,000, by Mrs. Frances Eleanor Ross Linfield, on condition that the name be changed to Linfield College as a memorial for her late husband, Rev. George Fisher Linfield, who passed away while principal of Wayland Academy, Beaver Dam, Wis. The hearts of Pacific Baptists will raise an anthem to our Great Teacher who has inspired the donor to aid our educational program on the coast, now well established. (Telegram from Dr. J. Y. Aitchison at Portland, Oregon.)

Don't Delay; Get a Calendar Today!

A NUMBER of the extremely beautiful and useful New World Movement Calendars for 1922 are still on hand, the calendar department of the General Board of Promotion at 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, reports.

More than half of January is gone, but it is by no means too late to send in your order. For the New World Movement Calendar for 1922 is much more than a mere record of time. If it did not have a single date in it anywhere, you still could not afford to be without this calendar.

Why? There are a hundred good reasons. Among them are the attractive pictures of home and foreign mission work and of educational headquarters all over the Northern Baptist field—pictures that will give you a more vivid knowledge than you ever had before of the activities and needs of the denomination. Another reason is found in the inspiration of the Bible verses for every day. A third is in the convenience of the young people's prayer-meeting topics, and the Sunday school lessons. Any one of these reasons is enough to make the calendar a part of the essential equipment of every Baptist for 1922.

The retail price of each calendar is 30 cents, while the wholesale price varies with the number purchased. The local

A Seafarer's Sketch Book

By WILLIAM B. LIPPHARD

NO. 2. THE SEA

MANY years ago an ancient Hebrew writer might have been seen standing on the shore of the Mediterranean Sea. Probably a strong northwest gale was blowing and the surging sea was piling up in watery superabundance the foamy billows at his feet. He was impressed with the unconquerable energy of the sea, the majestic fury of the storm and the wild mountainous splendor of the waves. As he gazed upon this awe-inspiring scene, noticeable on every coast yet never monotonous, out of the ecstasy of his soul he exclaimed:—"The sea is his and he made it."

What would this ancient writer have written had he had the experience of crossing the Atlantic during a stormy week in November? How would he have described the immensity of the sea? Day after day on this journey of the relief ship "Estonia" I have gazed for hours at a time at the ceaseless expanse of water. Although sailing constantly, the horizon never approached nearer in front and never seemed to recede further in the rear. At times the sea was a vast area of quiescent fluidity that reflected the glittering sunlight from a million ripples; at other times tumultuous foam-crested peaks of water lashed their fury against the sides of the ship; and again the whole sea seemed to rise and fall in an immense watery mass incapable of disintegration. Possibly the same Hebrew writer had this in mind when he wrote in another psalm, "He gathereth the waters of the sea together as a heap." How often there came to me that immortal paradox of the Ancient Mariner:

"Water, water everywhere
And not a drop to drink."

What wonderful stories the sea could tell of those who during all the years that are gone have been carried across on its heaving bosom. Over this same ocean highway on which I traveled came the Norsemen and the ancient Vikings of whom the captain of "Estonia" is a descendant. When looking into his finely chiseled face and his flashing brown eyes one is looking into the face of his heroic adventurous ancestors. Across this same sea came Columbus on his voyage of discovery and Cortez on his journey of exploitation and conquest of which there is doubtless no parallel in recorded history. These same watery mountain peaks tossed the Mayflower to and fro on her journey to Massachusetts and enabled her to bring to America those moral foundations on which the greatness of the republic has been established. Over the same highway came the multitude of slave ships with their human cargoes that were destined later to furnish the occasion for the fiery turmoil of fifty years ago. This same immense expanse of ocean carried to France that recent army of 2,000,000 modern crusaders. It was a tremendous achievement to transport them over and an equally great achievement to carry them back again across the same tempestuous waves—all except that noble company who, eternally oblivious to the turmoil of war and the unsteady readjustment of peace, now sleep beneath those thousands of white crosses on the soil of France. Over the same highway of the sea on which the "Estonia" sailed went the Unknown Soldier, then known to his friends and family and in the exuberant enthusiasm of youth. Once more the same sea was called upon to carry back his broken body, the unknown personification of self-sacrifice in a great cause.

Of equal fascination were my reflections as to what lay beneath those dark and foamy waves all along this ocean lane. Once more the ancient Hebrew anticipated my thoughts for long ago he had written "Yonder in the sea great and wide, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts." Submerged below those immense seas were gigantic fish, great sea monsters seen only occasionally and innumerable smaller inhabitants, many of which seldom are noticed near the surface. Of more absorbing interest are the sunken relics of man's maritime civilization. Hundreds of ships, the victims of the early pirates, lie buried deep in the immeasurable slime of the bed of the sea. Late one afternoon we passed directly over the spot where the Titanic sank after her encounter with the icy monarch of the North Atlantic. Early on another morning the captain pointed off in the distance to the region where the treacherous submarine emerged from the sea and sent the Lusitania to her watery sepulcher. At the bottom of the ocean highway over which we sailed were doubtless scores of wrecks sinking deeper in the soft ooze of the ocean's floor, many of them ships of mystery that sailed from their respective ports never to return. When reflecting on these things and when viewing the expanse of the illimitable sea one realizes how hopelessly inadequate is the human mind to comprehend even partially the tremendous truth stated by the writer of the book of Revelation where he describes the judgment scene and speaks of the sea as giving up the dead that were in it.

The loneliness of the sea is indescribable. During the entire voyage from New York to Cuxhaven we passed only two other ships, both of them so far away as to be discernible only through glasses. At night, when gazing at the expanse of water below and at the starry firmament above, the sense of loneliness was almost oppressive. Here again the psalm writer has anticipated. How true it is that "If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy right hand lead me and thy right hand shall hold me." Sometimes the best way to get near to God is to get far away from everybody else.

And so ships come and go and men follow their beaten course through life; but the sea, eternally restless, continually surging, constantly rising and falling but never changing, goes on forever to the achievement of its destiny. The ancient Hebrew writer was correct and what he said cannot be improved upon. In one brief trenchant sentence he has described the sea, its origin, its eternal mystery and its ultimate destiny! "The sea is his and he made it."

The Spiritual Man

ONE of the things looked for by a church not a thousand miles from New York in the man who shall become its pastor is that he shall be a "spiritual man." Unfortunately it has not defined that term and so helped all other churches in a similar position. But it may be suspected from hints which have been dropped that by spirituality it means a traditional piety touched with emotion.

What definition would you give if asked now to tell what is meant by the term "a spiritual man"? It is assumed that a man is Christian in the accepted evangelical sense. But what do you mean by "spiritual"? Would you indicate by that term a man who has a certain warmth of feeling, who uses the pious language which has long been common in our churches, who can effectively tell a few death-bed stories, who is likely to put his arm about you when he speaks or to catch hold of your buttonhole? Or would you feel that you must go deeper than this and speak of things which are far more essential? The question is a serious one and worthy of consideration, for it has much to say about the life and ideals of our churches.

The dictionary, in dealing with this aspect of the word says that spiritual means holy, pure, heavenly-minded, that it is applied to one who is controlled and inspired by the Spirit. But this does not help a great deal, for to the mystic to be heavenly-minded means to possess an attitude so far removed from the ordinary affairs of this world that one can hardly be said to belong to it in any measure. And men are accustomed to judge the control of the Spirit by its manifestations. There is not a freakish manifestation of Christian life in all Christian history to which such an explanation has not been applied.

How would it do to say that the spiritual man is the one who possesses the mind of Christ? He delights in unbroken fellowship with Christ. He is the one who takes the attitude Jesus did towards God and men, towards life and death, towards the world and all its problems, its good and its evil. He has brought every thought into subjection to Jesus in whose face he has seen God. He has a true sense of values and is seeking first those things that are above. He loves God as he has seen him manifested, with all his heart and soul and mind. He loves his neighbor and tries to practice the Golden Rule. He is ordering his life from day to day as he believes Jesus would have him do it. He is a good husband or wife or child or father or mother. He looks upon his work as a task in which he can serve men. He is unselfish. He desires to minister rather than to be ministered unto. He is doing his best to bring in the Kingdom of God in every part of life and to make Christ king among men.

Such a man may be emotional or unemotional. He may be easily moved or may be more or less stolid. But he preserves day by day, untouched by outward events his inner allegiance to God, which is an allegiance to all that is good and beautiful, and rejoices in the hope which God has given him. He is profoundly grateful for all that makes men happier and better.

Piousness is a mighty poor substitute for spirituality. No real disciple of Jesus or student of the Bible would ever mistake or confuse the two. It is because churches often do so that men whom they sadly need in their work often find themselves pushed, by silent hands, quite outside the portals of the sanctuary. The kingdom of God does not lose by this but the church does.

Beer Advocates Press Their Demands

RECENTLY the common council of Chicago passed a Resolution memorializing Congress to permit the manufacture and sale of "wholesome beers and light wines." It also ordered that the memorial be sent to all cities of 25,000 people or more with the suggestion that the governing bodies follow suit. Nobody who knows the Chicago common council will be stunned by the surprise of this action. Possibly even Congress will know about what value to place upon it. Some suspect that when a few days later President Harding spoke of the defiance of the prohibition law by numerous communities, he may have had the general attitude of the Chicago council in mind.

An editorial in the Chicago Tribune of Jan. 14 begins in this way: "The citizens who are organizing the Association Opposed to Prohibition are not wets, in the sense that word has been used. They are for the permitted use of wine and beer, but are opposed to the saloon and to that extent traffic in liquor. They are not distillers or brewers and their effort is to keep the association clear of such influences. They are liberals and they recognize, what a majority of American citizens do not recognize, that a serious change is being made in American principles and that it affects the freedom and the intelligence of the American people." There is something very familiar in that talk to men and women who have fought the liquor traffic. Camouflaged organizations have been innumerable. We thank the Tribune, however, for its tribute to "a majority of American citizens." This new association ought to extend its field and urge that the ban be taken off the selling of dope, and that there be no punishment for sexual sin, and indeed that law cease to place any restriction whatever upon the liberty of the individual. When a principle is carefully applied only in one direction the motive must naturally fall under suspicion.

In our opinion the men who are fighting prohibition are hurling themselves against a stone wall. Whenever the people have spoken on this subject they have spoken positively. The country did not have national prohibition until after three-fourths of the country, by action of the states, had been made dry. And, despite the law-breakers and those who have condoned their offense, the attitude of the people has not changed.

But this is also absolutely clear. The time has not yet come for church people to stop fighting. The battle is won but a lot of severe skirmishes yet remain. We shall need all the power of the Anti-Saloon League and the W. C. T. U. and the other valiant organizations which have engaged in this contest. Every effort must be made to keep strong the prohibition sentiment which amended the constitution, to overcome the lawlessness which is much in evidence just now and to press this matter to such a conclusion that no one will have any longer a question what the people of the United States want. We believe that they wish a United States sober and not a United States drunk. Very well, let us fight for our belief and meet every despairing onslaught of the enemy with firmness and courage.

A Boy Craves Excitement; Give It to Him

JUDGE BEN B. LINDSEY, of Denver, said recently: "The only way to combat wrong ideas in children is to crowd them out with better ones." Preoccupy the ground and the bad does not so much as get its nose into the tent.

Many decades ago, Horace Bushnell preached a sermon, whose echoes are heard to this day, on "The Explosive Power of a New Affection." The best way to drive out bad ideas is to stage an attack upon them by good ideas. If the new emotion is strong enough, the old will succumb before it.

Centuries ago Jesus told a story about a man from whom an evil spirit was cast out. But the swept and garnished room was not occupied and so the evil spirit came back in time with a lot of others, worse than himself, and the man had no defense against them.

One can call it psychology or by some other name, but it becomes all those who deal with boys to attain just a little knowledge of boy nature and also to get some idea of how to conquer undesirable habits and ideas. Wise mothers seldom attempt forcibly to take from a child object after object which he foolishly wants; instead, they divert attention by placing before the child something which for the moment is more attractive. And under the spell of the new, the old is forgotten.

Boys will loiter on the streets, they will go to forbidden places, they will easily become bad unless there is given them something more interesting to do? They crave excitement; why not give it to them under good auspices. They want action; why not see that they get it? The task of teachers and leaders of boys in our churches and in our homes is not to enforce certain prohibitions, no matter how desirable the objects in view may be. It is rather to give the boy action which he enjoys and which will produce the reactions which the church and society agree are good.

Many a good woman fails in teaching boys because she tackles a problem at the wrong end. And not all men are wise, as the constant succession of boys passing through their classes readily shows.

Stressing Stewardship

THIS issue of THE BAPTIST stresses stewardship, presenting a variety of material which is both thought-provoking and inspiring.

In connection with the material here printed the editors would refer readers to the plans proposed for our own denomination and for other arguments on the subject printed in the issues of Nov. 12, Nov. 26, and Dec. 10.

Giving, to have any permanent value in the church or the Christian life, must be on a spiritual basis. Back of it should be the sense of God's ownership of all things and of our responsibility to him. Let this recognition become strong and there will be no question of the amount of money which will flow into the treasuries of our denominational organizations. Until this comes about, we shall inevitably live from hand to mouth.

There is much encouragement for the future in the increasing number of tithers. Were all our members both tithers and stewards, as Dr. Agar shows they may be, all financial difficulties would be at an end and there would be spiritual blessing in all the churches.

We suggest that pastors and church officials and church members prayerfully study together the facts and arguments which are here presented.

Church Members Do the Giving

A SECULAR newspaper, the Boston Transcript, recently compiled the amount of the charitable gifts made by the people of the northern and eastern sections of the country. During a year the staggering amount was nearly a billion dollars. The names on the lists of donors were carefully scrutinized and it was found that seventy-eight out of every 100 names were those of communicant members of the churches, Jewish, Catholic or Protestant. When it is remembered that the communicant membership of the churches, Jewish, Catholic and Protestant, amounts to but 41 per cent of the population the figures become still more significant. Seventy-eight per cent of the givers were drawn from less than half the population; while 59 per cent of the population furnished only 22 per cent of the givers. It is safe to say that the givers who were not church members had for the most part a church-going ancestry.

The Irish Free State Launched

BY the Irish acceptance of the new treaty, the Irish Free State becomes a reality. Great Britain is already evacuating her troops from the island and passing over control as rapidly as may be. The attitude of Irish extremists is yet in doubt. Many months ago, Lloyd George intimated that England would be willing to do almost anything upon which Irishmen might agree. Such agreement was impossible to get. Will the Irish now agree among themselves? To this question there is as yet no answer although upon it depends somewhat of the world's peace of mind.

CONFIRMING THE BOOK

The next few years are destined to bring to light much material, as the result of archeological work, which will shed light on the narratives of the Bible. Work in Palestine, for instance, is to be done under better conditions than ever before, and we confidently expect that the results will be striking. As an example of what has recently been happening in another part of the old world the following editorial comment from a recent number of the Outlook is an evidence.

"The Old Testament refers to Ethiopia as a great and strong country. It is not a strong country to-day, and has not been, indeed, for so long that some critics have supposed the Biblical references rather imaginative. But discoveries just made prove the contrary.

"These discoveries were the work of the joint expedition undertaken by Harvard University and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and were made at Napata, in the Sudan. Napata was the ancient capital of Ethiopia. The tombs of twenty-four kings and twenty-nine queens of Ethiopia, buried for over two thousand years, have been brought to light with inscriptions giving a complete dynastic list and also giving information concerning the remarkable arts and crafts of the period.

"The Old Testament brackets the Ethiopians with the Libyans; the discoveries show that the Ethiopian royal family sprang from a tribe of Libyan nomads who entered Ethiopia about a thousand years before our era.

"Again, the mention of Tirhakah, King of Ethiopia, in the Second Book of Kings and in the book of Isaiah, comes to mind as we read of the unearthing at Napata of his burial chamber. Tirhaqa or Tirhakah was a notable king, and one of the five Ethiopian monarchs who also ruled over Egypt."

JESUS IS BOSS HERE

Mr. John J. Eagan of Atlanta, Georgia, recently elected president of the American Cast-Iron Pipe Company, stated on taking office, "The directors are all church members. They have elected another professing Christian as president on a basis that the teachings of Jesus Christ are to be the ruling principles of the business. I am glad if the action of the directors of our company will cause other professed followers of Christ to give this question their thought." The platform adopted by the directors declares for a reasonable living wage to the lowest paid workman, constant employment for every member of the organization, and an actual application of the Golden Rule to all relations between employee and employer.

So the good work goes on. Not very long ago men were saying that business could not be run on Christian principles. Business is business, was the word, and religion is religion and only sentimentalists would think of mixing the two. But now there is not one business but a number which are seriously trying to conduct their affairs according to the Golden Rule. And interestingly enough they are finding that the experiment pays. Men may even come generally in time to believe Paul's assertion that godliness is profitable both for the present time and that which is to come.

DIVORCE WHERE THERE IS NO DIVORCE

A despatch from Rome, under date of Jan. 10, announces that the Sacred Rota Tribunal of the Vatican has annulled the marriage of Prince Radziwill to Miss Dorothy Deacon which took place in London in 1910. Previous despatches indicated that annulment was sought by the princess on the ground that she had not entered into marriage voluntarily.

The Roman Church makes claims which lead many to suppose that it absolutely opposes divorce and allows re-marriage under no conditions. What is not so often said is that the same church will, for a number of reasons, declare a marriage contract null and void, a proceeding which has the same result as a divorce. In the first place a civil marriage is not recognized as valid and is therefore no bar to a second marriage. A marriage can be annulled on any of the following grounds: want of requisite age, impotency, disparity of worship (one or both parties being unbaptized), solemn profession in a religious order, public propriety, spiritual relations.

Probably it is true that the Roman Catholic Church has a stiffer position on this subject than most others, but its attitude often allows what is to all intents and purposes exactly the same thing as a divorce.

THE PATRONS OBJECTED

The new Civic Opera Association, which has taken charge of grand opera in Chicago has announced that the exotic opera, "Salome," in which Mary Garden has appeared, will not be produced again this year or so long as the organization controls. An announced performance was withdrawn. In explanation it is said that the protest against the opera was entirely on the part of its patrons. The city officials, so far as is known, had made no objections. Some of the subscribers had refused to attend previous performances of "Salome" declaring that the opera was unclean and that Herodias's daughter, as depicted in the Oscar Wilde version of her story, was merely a victim of perversion, demented by an unnatural passion.

Mention is made of this incident here because of the suggestion it contains. The patrons can censor any performance they wish. There is in the hands of decent people a power of protest which, if used, would prevent much indecency in all our cities.

NEW EDITOR FOR THE CONGREGATIONALIST

Rev. William E. Gilroy, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church, at Fond du Lac, Wis., has been elected Editor-in-chief of The Congregationalist, and THE BAPTIST extends to him a hearty greeting as he enters the brotherhood. He is no novice in religious journalism, having been for several years editor of the Canadian Congregationalist and a frequent contributor to the Christian Century, and is possessed of gifts which should prove of the utmost value in his new work. The committee which chose him is confident that he will be perfectly able to maintain the high standards of the paper over whose destinies he will preside.

Time For Action

By H. R. GREAVES

A CLOSE study of our financial situation at the present time shows us that the time has come, not for discouragement, not for pessimism, but for quick and concerted action on the part of the entire denomination.

The task that lies ahead of us is, by no means, an impossible one. It is undeniably true, however, that an extremely serious situation confronts all our societies and boards. This is no time for doubt and it is no time for dalliance on the part of those who love their denomination, and who desire to keep the promise made to God when the New World Movement was undertaken.

It is the time for unwavering faith, for hard work, for immediate action.

The following table gives a comparative statement of receipts on the One Hundred Million Dollar Fund from

Illusion

By ALLYN K. FOSTER

I SAT in a moving train, a local, the other day, my back to the engine. We were approaching a station. On my right, as I gazed out of the window, a fast express clattered past at high speed. All my attention was centered on that other train, and all at once a strange thing happened. I became distinctly conscious that the train I was on was backing. There could be no doubt about it, for my wits were all about me, and I could have sworn that our engine had reversed and was speeding to the rear, the direction I was facing. I became startled and wondered what had happened. All the time I had been watching that express speed by. Suddenly and with something akin to alarm I shot a swift glance to my left, and then my ocular nerves untwisted. We were not going backwards at all, but making a good steady pace forward.

The fact is that I was watching the faster train, and my eye geared me up to that. Compared to that fast train which was passing we were going in the opposite direction. The eye, which is a very unsophisticated organ, was easily deceived, and easily in turn deceived me. I suppose, strictly speaking, our slowness to that fast train was a backward sweep. The truth was that I looked too long out of one side of my train. On that side everything was passing me and I got the notion that we were not going ahead at all. When I looked in the right direction, where the stationary objects were, the only things that could furnish me the measure of motion, I saw that we were not only not still nor going backward, but forging merrily ahead.

There are sermons in trains as well as in stones, and I saw the parallel which is a parable. Progress has a varying speed. Thirty miles an hour is only half of sixty, but it is speed just the same. Measure your progress by the static things sometimes as well as by the moving things. Are you passing any landmarks or milestones, and are you with proper speed making along toward your station? Be an express if the old engine has the power. It is a shame for an express to be a local when it might be a "flyer." Stoke her up and open out the valves, and make her old ribs rattle. Sand your tracks if she gets a mood to slide. But remember, old man, a local, by her patient acquiescence in the wishes of others, accommodates more people than an express. Short hauls and swift runs are both necessary and a freight would be ridiculous if it tried to be a "Century Limited," as a "Limited" is not adapted to pull coal cars.

Speed is the arch-deceiver of this age. Many a man has been ditched by the lure of it. Getting there first either blots out the scenery or leaves a person with too much dangerous leisure. The figures prove that if you get rich quick you will speed up in ill-spending which damns more souls proportionately than poverty ever did. The need of the age is that every worker shall see that gains are won only by the honest payment of effort. Gambling and speculation are wrecking the nerves and the morals of this generation at an alarming rate. Men on the locals are too often riding backwards and gazing curiously at the flying express, and a sickish feeling comes over them that makes them feel that they are going in the wrong direction or standing still. Look out of the other window, men! You are in the grip of an ocular illusion!

Steady plugging away has little of the poetry and the glamour of speed, but its everlasting joy is that it reaches its stations one by one. Speed speeds up everything in the neighborhood. If you go fast all your sensibilities go fast too. Make more money and your tastes grow more expensive. Work too fast and your nerves will run away with you. If you get everything you go after, you may gain the whole world and lose your soul, which holds your power to enjoy normally. There is a speed that is natural to trains and to men. Get the natural speed out of your engine. Don't let it shirk and don't, by all means, let it get away with you. Express time to an express and local time to a local but when you measure motion find the static things to measure by. That is the only way to gauge your situation.

The next time I ride on a local, I am going to sit facing the engine, and I am going to keep my eye to that side of the train where the stations are.

Sovereignty and Stewardship

To possess the Savior is to acknowledge him owner. The Lord puts us on a partnership basis. He prefers the fruits of love rather than the products of duty.

By FREDERICK A. AGAR

SALVATION is the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ. It cannot be bought or earned. But when you have received the gift, its increasing value to you will be largely determined by the price you pay to demonstrate its power in world salvation. The price will include a thorough-going stewardship of all the elements that inhere in or belong to the life. That type of stewardship will be a constant and loving demonstration of the sovereignty of God over all that makes up your life.

To possess the Saviour is of necessity to acknowledge the Lord because the Saviour of the soul is the Lord Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of the Father—Owner. To acknowledge the Lordship of Christ is at once and in the fullest sense to recognize that every saved soul owns nothing, but is a steward of all that inheres in and belongs to the life, which includes the life itself and all its elements, such as time, energy, talent, personality and substance or money. A true stewardship does not attempt to eliminate any one of these elements from the accountability to God nor to substitute one element for another but does, wholeheartedly, give to God the fruitage of all in the life. Notice that I use the word "gives," because the Father-Owner, while he has the right and the power to exact a proper accounting or payment, always prefers to deal with his children on a giving rather than on a paying basis. He really puts us on a partnership basis. He prefers the fruits of love rather than the products of duty.

What Stewardship Covers

Stewardship that is truly Christian covers getting, spending, giving and keeping, and is related to every element in the life and not alone to money, for all of these experiences are parts of the administration of our stewardship. Jesus is Lord of all. The life must needs be a balanced one, in that the passion or endeavor to get does not obscure the necessity of spending wisely, nor the desire to save obscure the wisdom and need to give the Father-Owner the first portion of everything.

Do not confound tithing and stewardship, for stewardship is the underlying principle as well as practice, while tithing is just one of the practices that result from a minimum accountability of the money element in the life. Some tithers are good stewards, but not every tither is a steward, for the element of proportion must be taken into account. Let me illustrate by telling of two cases that recently came into my experience in a local church.

Both Tither and Steward

A noble widow was left with three small children to care for and she earned the living over the wash-tub and the ironing-board. She was able to earn about $9 a week on an average. Her pledges to current expense and missions for herself and the tots amounted to 90 cents a week. Now she was not only a tither but she was most assuredly a good steward.

In that same church was a man earning $5,500 a year, who himself said that he had laid up about $50,000 in savings. He also constantly proclaimed that he was a tither and gave a tenth of his salary to the extent of $550 a year, about half of which he distributed through church channels. But he was only a tither while he was not a good steward. The widow gave $46.80 a year and had left $421.20 with which to provide for her growing brood of children while the man, it is true, gave $550 a year; but had $1,950. with no family even to provide for. The income from his savings he re-invested and did not count as income to be tithed. The two people are not in the same class of givers, for while the man was a tither of his salary he was not a tither of his income or a good steward. He gave more in amount, but far less in proportion. Proportionate giving is part of stewardship. The widow was constantly in prayer meeting, in Bible school with all her children, and many a night, when the children had been tucked away in their bed, she went out to do good unto others by personal ministry, while the man gave a tenth of his salary, allowed the income from his savings to pile up through compound interest and was only seen at the morning service and when asked to give of his time, energy, talents and personality, he would curtly refuse. Stewardship is giving distributed over all that is in the life. The good steward accounts to his Lord for all that is in life because his Lord is sovereign over all. Furthermore, the good steward learns how to get and give, how to spend and save every element in his life because his sovereign is his Saviour and love is the great incentive of his life.

There is a joy in stewardship. Of late I have been making public inquiry whether any of my hearers knew of any who became stewards just of their money who went back to the old haphazard manner of distributing their substance and no one has yet responded, but at once there are those who arise to say that their whole life has been on a bigger and better basis with joys before unknown because they have adopted the above practice. Yes, there is a real joy in knowing that God is intimately related to the whole life and very often the key that unlocks the door to this joy is found in beginning with a stewardship of money.

Discipline in Stewardship

There is a discipline in stewardship. A woman recently made a stewardship covenant with her Lord and church. She went home to examine her life and found it without either plan or program. She had been drifting through her days and years. She therefore proceeded to analyze her day and her year and at once it became apparent that she had been doing the easy and pleasant things to the exclusion of many things quite essential to a well-ordered living. Her days, planned and programmed now, are producing a disciplined soul. She has learned how to make a life instead of living. The words disciple and discipline are the same in the Christian dictionary.

There is victory in stewardship. Some weeks ago a young newly-married couple attended one of our conference sessions and went home to reorganize their household. First came a time schedule with a definite hour for arising, then the breakfast period with family worship and so on through the day and the week. Two of the afternoons of the wife's time were set apart for church work.

Besides prayer meeting attendance one other week night was assigned to Christian work. Each of them had been giving 25 cents a week to current expense and nothing for beneficences because they said that they did not believe in missions. When their new pledges came in on the following Sunday each of them was scheduled to give $1.50 per week divided equally between missions and church support. A good steward cannot disbelieve in the plan of world redemption for which his Lord laid down his life. It seems to me that I can hear the apostle Paul quoting, "Thanks be unto God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ," for in the grace of stewardship those young people found the victory over careless living and by finding a real purpose in life pressed forward, "toward the mark" of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus our Lord." Thus they put on the living that is immortal and incorruptible because it is "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

There is education in stewardship, for it requires a growing knowledge of the Father-Owner's plans for a life. At the same time stewardship produces the wonderful knowledge of how the Senior Partner operates to save not only a soul, but a world of sinners. It is a splendidly informing thing to be partner in an enterprise that is world-wide and in which one can invest the elements deposited in his charge called energy, talent, personality, and money.

The local church must be an enlistment force for stewards as well as a training camp for them, but if the influence and projecting power of the local organization does not go beyond enlistment and training, the church will have failed in its mission and the potential stewardship resources in the lives of believers will never be developed and projected according to the plans of the Father-Owner. The world is a place of wonderful possibilities for the carrying out of the plans made by the Senior Partner, but it requires the immediate enlistment, development and projection of all potential stewards if God is not to be disappointed.

Idealism, you say! Yes, idealism, I answer. Practical idealism, however, through sustained, rightly related living under our Lord's plan. Try it and see how wonderful such idealism works under the sovereignty of God.

You have finished the reading, now sing; sing in your soul, sing under your breath or sing aloud.

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,

Let angels prostrate fall;

Bring forth the royal diadem

And crown Him Lord of all."

Sing it soul, sing it again, sing it over and over I say. Sing it, and go out to live it, for it means everything to you, yes, and to your Lord.

The Stewardship Plans of Other Denominations

By GILBERT N. BRINK

I. The Plan of the Methodist Episcopal Church

OUR Methodist brethren have designated 1922 as stewardship year. Their immediate goal is 1,000,000 signed tithing stewards by Jan. 1, 1923. Their ultimate goal is every Methodist a steward. The week preceding Easter is set apart as stewardship week, when, in addition to devoting much time to prayer and personal consecration to the Master, every member of every church will be urged to tithe his or her income for that week; the whole of this tithe to be presented at the church service as a special offering on Easter Sunday.

A new literature, with text books, is being prepared to cover the whole subject of stewardship. The formation of a stewardship band, a league or association in each congregation is urged with a view to extending the practice of stewardship, and with the payment of the tithe as an acknowledgement of stewardship.

A training conference for national field-men has been held in Chicago. The coaching of stewardship representatives is arranged for. A district stewardship leader will be appointed for every district in the United States. This will provide a force of 453 carefully selected men, nearly all pastors, sympathetic with both stewardship ideals and local church needs, who, unsalaried and unrewarded, will assist pastors and churches, and speak at local and district training conferences.

A working stewardship organization is planned for each local church, and a definite form of stewardship campaign in each church, including a Sunday preaching program, stewardship study classes, stewardship reading contests, stewardship topics for the mid-week service, young people's courses and Sunday-school programs. It is to be a well planned, thoroughly organized, intensive campaign, that will be pushed throughout the entire year in all the churches of Methodism.

II. Stewardship in the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.

In the Presbyterian church the stewardship department has been a natural outgrowth of the development of the Every Member Plan. Commencing as far back as 1902, in what was then known as the "Forward Movement" of the Board of Foreign Missions, attention was focused upon the installing of the silver rule of the early church, "Let every one of you lay by in store on the first day of the week, as he has prospered." For a dozen years or more emphasis was laid upon the systematic side of giving as an integral factor in worship every Lord's day. Like a rising tide, the gifts of the Presbyterian church grew steadily year by year under this persistent process of inculcating system in giving. But during the latter part of 1916 or early in 1917, another note began to be sounded. It was that of proportionate giving "as the Lord has prospered." Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, then moderator of the general assembly, sent out a letter to all Presbyterian pastors in the autumn of 1917, suggesting that the time had now come to add to systematic giving the no less important element of proportionate giving. A conference was called at Princeton, at which addresses were delivered by outstanding leaders of the church, urging that this further step in advance be taken without delay. Within a short time after that the textbook "Money The Acid Test" was prepared and soon attained the circulation of a popular novel, reaching nearly 100,000. This book treats stewardship not as a scheme for raising money, but as a school for raising men. It stresses especially the reflex effect upon character, resulting from the handling of money as a sacred trust. Passing by the well-worn arguments for tithing, it took the broader ground that when men have come to act upon the principle that God's ownership of all implies their stewardship of all, then in no servile spirit of bondage, but in the glad freedom of partnership, they will delight in administering every dollar of income according to the will of God; "Whether ye eat or drink or whatsoever ye do, do all the glory of God." It was not long before the message of "Money The Acid Test" was being sounded in thousands of Presbyterian pulpits and the text-book continues to be used for study classes throughout the church.

Charts and pamphlets and lantern lectures and Biblical lessons for use in the Sunday school, dialogues and other helps have been prepared and are being widely used throughout the church. Nearly 100,000 enrollments are reported. A special Sunday is set apart each year for enrollment as Christian stewards, that for 1922 being February 26.

III. Stewardship Plans for our Brethren of the Southern Baptist Convention

The Convention Committee of Nine recommended the following organization for the promotion of stewardship:

1. To plan and supervise the campaign in each state a steering committee of five is suggested; the chairman of the Laymen's Executive Committee for the state, the corresponding secretary of the State Board, the corresponding secretary of the Woman's Missionary Union, an enlistment man and the state B. Y. P. U. and Sunday-school secretary.

2. This committee is expected, if possible, to secure an active, dependable layman in each association as organizer. It is recommended that he associate with him a live pastor and the leader of the Woman's Missionary Union for that association.

Note: While the committee considered it important to secure a layman as organizer, for the sake of enlisting and developing a large company of such men, yet it would not sacrifice efficiency for the sake of securing a layman. In such cases it may be wise to secure a preacher or a woman.

3. The associational organizer with the other two members of his committee is expected to formulate and execute a plan that will present this cause in an effective way before every church in the district.

Note: The committee strongly recommends that those churches that have good leadership be encouraged to conduct this campaign without any help from the outside. This policy tends to develop local leadership and to promote the efficiency of the local church. The associational committee, however, must furnish help for those churches that need assistance.

4. The committee thinks it vitally important that the state and associational committees shall cooperate in making arrangements to have this cause forcefully presented at the meeting of every district association.

5. The committee recommends that November 27-December 4, a period of eight days, including two Sundays, be designated as the round-up period for this campaign and that it be known as "Half-Million Week."

Note: It is strongly advised that a large number of churches, cities and even district associations put over this campaign in advance; such policy would stimulate other churches, advertise the campaign, inspire hope, develop leaders and keep the cause constantly before the people.

6. While the Woman's Missionary Union and some of the secretaries have pledge cards on hand and use them, so far as practicable the committee suggests the use of a uniform card. Each state leader is requested to notify the general secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement as to the number of cards needed for his state.

7. One-half million tithers is about one-sixth of the total number of Baptists in the Convention. While a quota for the association will be furnished by the state steering committee, and a quota for each church by the associational committee, those who wish to put on this campaign in advance will be safe in setting their goal for at least one-sixth of the membership.

8. This committee recommends that those who agree to tithe sign one card; that the cards be preserved by the local church and a correct list of the tithers be sent to state headquarters. When a member agrees to adopt the tenth, but prefers not to sign a pledge, the committee suggests that such a member be included in the list of tithers.

Note: There are doubtless other denominations that are undertaking systematic stewardship campaigns, but exact data were not at hand for inclusion in this article.

The Arrival of the Ship of Fellowship in Poland

By K. W. STRZELEC

THE Estonia arrived at Danzig Dec. 6. I and three other representatives of Poland stood on shore watching her as she slowly plowed in with the precious cargo which represented to us the inexpressible joy and gratitude of the thousands who would benefit by it.

Mr. Lippard greeted us from deck. He had arranged with the ship authorities for a dinner for us. We were disappointed to hear that there were only 600 bales of clothing instead of 700 which we were expecting for Poland. We have the border to Soviet Russia open now, and the representatives of our Baptist churches come to us for help. After talking the matter over, Mr. Lippard agreed to allow us fifty bales from the portion designated for Lebau to the international Red Cross in Russia. These and fifty bales from Poland's portion will enable us to supply the most urgent needs of those for whom no provision was made.

Poland has received help from various societies for the past three years, but because the country was so plundered by the various armies passing to and fro, the help, though great, is still unnoticeable in many places, especially in the regions in which the war between Poles and Bolsheviks lasted up to March, 1921.

We have twenty-one Russian and Ukrainian missionary pastors helping us in distributing the gifts in these regions. They are not employed by our society, being in the service of various denominations, but most of them independent. Besides these we have nineteen German and six Polish Baptist pastors lined up in the relief work, so we feel confident that the clothing will be distributed conscientiously and officially among those who need it most urgently and immediately.

There are many concentration camps, where the refugees from Soviet Russia live in barracks under deplorable conditions. Among these the Y. M. C. A. central office in Warsaw is doing relief work. We have agreed to supply them with needed clothes because their supply is exhausted.

On Dec. 17 there came to my office a gentleman in a long old raincoat under which the only clothing he wore were remnants of a shirt and trousers; this young man comes from a prominent family and before the war was in the government postal service. On Dec. 19 there came three former Russian officers, homeless, no means of support and no clothing to speak of. Hundreds of families returning from Soviet Russia have their children clothed in old burlap bags in place of coats. What other clothing they wore under these, I did not try to investigate. I have been told by our missionaries that among these can be found some Baptist families.

During the past year we have helped clothe and feed children in three orphanages: one Protestant in Lodz, one Russian Orthodox in Grodno and one Roman Catholic in Wilno. These three institutions are looking to us now for clothing.

The Baptist orphans, as far as we were able to reach them, are provided with the most necessary things. We have among them children born in 1913-1914 and later who have never seen a toy. You can imagine the rapture and curiosity with which they will welcome our gifts of toys.

We expect the first carloads of supplies in Warsaw and Lodz today (Dec. 20), and we will begin the distribution at once.

Leadership in the Pulpit Produces Givers in the Pew

By ARTHUR M. HARRIS

CAN a business, organized to sell soap, pickles, collars or securities, make a success without real leadership at the head of its sales department? Will salesmen follow the head who has not real leadership? The answers are obvious. Real leadership requires that ability and enthusiasm on the part of the head which enables him first to sell himself to his salesmen. Having sold himself to his men, that is having won their confidence, they will follow his leadership because they believe in him.

Note the giving in different churches and shall we not find that in the church where the proportionate amount given and the proportionate number of givers is large, there you find the church which has for its pastor one who has sold to his people the truth—"It is more blessed to give than to receive." There is a vast difference between occasionally leading a church to give to some particular object and constantly and consistently so leading that the membership will be trained to give joyfully, regularly, proportionately and systematically.

Let a young man just beginning his Christian life in a church with real giving leadership, form the habit of systematic and proportionate giving and he will rarely abandon the principle, but let him form the habit of giving only occasionally and as he may then be induced and that will become his fixed policy in all his giving. Let a man grow into middle life under a preaching that because of its lack of real leadership in the matter of giving develops the "tightwad" spirit and a "tightwad" he will die.

In too many of our Sunday schools we teach the child to sing "Hear the pennies dropping" and neither teacher or preacher ever takes the trouble to teach him anything else. Too many of our laymen are ungenerous largely because they have not been fortunate enough to sit under the preaching of that kind of leadership which develops a consecrated check book.

Ministers, "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Many are doing so, but too many are not.

Dreams and Drives

By JOHN SNAPE

LET us not abandon all drives. Drives are dreams and we must dream big dreams—if we are to become participants in big achievements. But our people are a-weary of financial drives. My judgment is that the sooner we drop the vocabulary of the "New World Movement" (it has become a shibboleth in some quarters and a red flag in others), and begin to focus the attention of our people upon our regular denominational beneficences, the faster and farther shall we get on toward our goal.

You ask for personal experiences. Here is one. First Church, Oakland, through a campaign conducted by her young people, has recently secured 250 signed tithers. This is about one-fourth of our church membership. When one-fourth of the 1,250,000 Northern Baptists become tithers, the day of financial drives will have become unnecessary. Every new member who unites with us (198 united in 1921) is given a pledge card and a box of envelopes before he is received by letter or accepted for baptism and at that time instructed by the pastor in the joy and duty of cooperating with his brethren in helping God get his work done in the world.

I wish that for a solid year we could focus our forces—church, Bible school, B. Y. P. U., women's circles, brotherhood and all the rest—upon evangelism. Thus focusing our forces we should unite our forces and make a great advance in the incarnation and proclamation of the dynamic good news which is the greatest need of our day. And this is vitally connected with the question of financial drives. Nothing is so essential to successful money raising as a warm, evangelistic mood.

A Presbyterian Who Is Educating Baptists

"LAYMAN" is eighty-five years old. For almost half century or, to be accurate, since the Centennial year 1876, pamphlets, articles and letters by the millions have gone out from Chicago to ministers, divinity students and laymen of all denominations.

"Layman" is a Presbyterian. He was for years a commissioner to the Grand Assembly but his ministry has been to all denominations.

A few days ago the editor of THE BAPTIST visited his office in a loop building. He found the old gentleman at his desk busy in the preparation of material for the tither's corner in a religious journal. After a few moments of conversation, Thomas Kane, for that is his name, said: "The Baptist denomination gives promise of a more striking development along the lines of tithing than any of our other Christian bodies. This is largely due to the fact that its members have not been spoiled hitherto by some of the mistakes that have entered into the stewardship plans of some of the other denominations. I do not mean that the Baptist denomination will of necessity reach a higher per capita of giving, taking Baptists the country over, but that the advance will be marked by a raising of the general standard of giving."

This was interesting as coming from a man whose meat and drink has been for nearly half century the study of the financial plans of God and of the churches.

"You will be surprised to know," he continued, "that during the past sixty days upwards of 300,000 pamphlets have gone out from this office to the Baptist churches of the land."

We were surprised, for the stream flows out not only to our own denomination, but to all denominations where interest leads to definite requests and a definite promise of careful distribution.

Thomas Kane furnished the older folks among our readers with the "silent" slate—the school slate with the red felt binding. He furnished some of us as students in the seminary with pamphlets upon tithing, and now in his old age he is showing the same keen interest in the increased provision of the churches for their enlarging work.

Tithing in Christian Experience

By CORWIN S. SHANK

YOU ask whether our church has found a satisfactory method of raising money. Yes, and I can tell you in one word what it is—tithing. All of our church members are not tithers, but we have a Tithers' League representing a large proportion of the finances contributed to our church.

Notwithstanding the undisputed facts of history and the evidence which is overwhelming in the lives of men and churches proving the plainly-expressed and thoroughly demonstrated declarations of Scripture, there are many ministers as well as laymen who will lay aside this evidence which stands proven beyond any reasonable doubt and say that tithing is a wrong doctrine to teach and that the only true statement of our financial obligations to God is expressed in the over-worked and soothing word "stewardship." I venture the statement that no man who has ever kept an account with his Lord and truly practiced tithing doubts the divine authority for it. The argument comes from non-believers in it and those inexperienced in the practice of its principles, from theorists, not from practitioners. These same ministers and laymen criticize severely the man outside the church who finds fault with the church because he is not in it and cannot speak with as equal authority as the man who is in the church. The same rule is applicable to the experience of a man within the church who is criticized by another man within the church who does not know anything about the practice of the principle. It is the old story of the maiden lady who gives instruction as to the science of raising children, of the mechanic who endeavors to teach political economy, and the like. Let us deal with this question fairly and let us have the voice of men and women who know its action upon their lives and not be guided by unbelievers.

The principle of tithing comprehends the broadest sweep of stewardship, but stewardship as now taught is in many ways simply a cloud behind which some are able to hide and thus fall in the deeper duty resting upon them. Simply because the Bible teaches stewardship does not necessarily negative that it teaches also some specific things with reference to finances. God specified a few "thou-shalt-not's" and a few things that are holy. Among the latter are the Sabbath Day and the one-tenth. We have a stewardship of time, and yet the Sabbath Day is specified as a thing holy unto him. We have a stewardship of things, and yet the one-tenth is holy unto him. It would give me great pleasure to have any one who criticizes this position upon tithing to state first whether he does in fact keep a true account with his Lord of his income and account to him for the one-tenth. There are experiences in the lives of men which are unanswerable by men who argue from theory.

Again I state that if our great denomination could realize the blessing that would flow from the practice of tithing devoutly and prayerfully followed, there would not only be ample money in the treasury, but a spiritual revival the like of which is unknown. The problems we are now facing as a denomination would be solved and our denominational leaders as well as the ministers would be devoting their time to spiritual rather than to financial matters.

Let's Begin Again, and Begin Right

By WILLIAM HOLLOWAY MAIN

THE general impression seems to be that the day of big financial drives is past, and what the general impression is would seem to be true to the fact.

Yes, there is a much better way. It is to make the great scriptural principle of stewardship the very heart of our Christian nature and teaching.

You cannot get much money from one who doesn't want to give it.

One who is wrong in money matters is usually wrong in other matters, so we must go deeper than the mere emphasis of money-giving.

What a time we have had in raising money when all the time God had a simple and sure way—the tithing of everything He has given us, which of course includes money.

There ought never to be a big drive or every-member-canvass for money, but every Christian ought to bring himself and his gifts to the house of God.

Let us now, as we begin all over again, begin right. There is the stewardship in worship. People who have not been in the church for months, perhaps years, say: "I will send the usual check." The "usual" check is about the price of a few movie shows or one evening's entertainment of friends. We must get away from the "usual" check as we have gotten away from the "dollar a year for missions" and "Hear the pennies dropping."

The "usual" check follows the usual worship.

There will never be a sure and steady income for the work of our Lord until there is a steady worship in the house of the Lord.

There is the stewardship of time. There are 168 hours in each week. Of each day we have eight hours for labor, eight hours for sleep, and eight hours for—?

Before we can get a tithe of money there must be a tithe of interests. The need of this hour is the giving of specific work for Christ, and with increasing interest there will be increasing gifts of money.

We have sixteen hours, aside from sleeping, each Lord's day—how are they being used?

There is the stewardship of influence. Where is the emphasis? Just generally good, or throwing the whole power of Christian personality into the work of the kingdom?

Do something definite towards turning the tide of thought and life Christward.

There is the stewardship of knowledge. We know! Are we helping others to know? The most pathetic thing possible is a large church and a shortage of Bible school teachers.

We have been taught—shall we not teach?

Are we robbing God of a part of which he has given us?

The youth of today trained in stewardship means a prosperous church and the coming of the kingdom in the world—tomorrow.

There is the stewardship of prayer. We thank God for material blessings and pray that they may continue. We pray for ourselves, our homes, our friends—do we daily pray for the Kingdom of God, The Board of Promotion, our great societies, our churches?

Earnest prayer means liberal giving.

There is the stewardship of personal work. We buy, sell, persuade and plead every day. For what? Do we say a good word about our Lord and his work? Enlarged personal work means enlarged interest, and enlarging gifts to the cause for which we work.

Christianity is not an esthetic something, the church a place in which to hear an address—occasionally—and enjoy fellowship. The church stands for a great commission to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.

Because of our failure in these essential things we are getting only a tithe of spiritual blessing.

Now, Mr. Editor, I know just what you are saying.

You asked for something about the best way to raise money, so greatly needed, and you think that I have failed to answer your request. I do not think I have failed. We can never have a sure, steady and large income for our part in this great work until we have a genuine deepening of spiritual life and a real broadening of spiritual vision.

High Pressure or Consistent Giving

By JOHN H. McLEAN

THE day of the drive is over, or at least its value is greatly diminished. Every pastor who is keeping close to his people and community feels this fact. We have had so many of these efforts during the war and since that men are weary of them and the psychology of our day is quite against them. I think that the financial drive should never have been anything more than an emergency method. In some cases, as during the crisis of the war, the drive may be useful and necessary. As soon as the emergency has passed, however, it ceases to have value and power. This is especially true of all of the causes and agencies which in the last few years have sought to secure their financial support by these methods. It is high time that we leave behind the high pressure, emergency and occasional way of financing our church program and get down to the steady pull of systematical and consistent giving.

This brings us to the fundamental objection to the drive as a method of money raising, especially from the Christian's standpoint. In the last analysis it must be classed with all other devices for getting money—bazaars, oyster suppers, etc. It is time that we put from our minds the thought that the ultimate object sought is an amount of money without much regard as to how it comes. The Christian gospel seeks to get life, and when life is secured other things come in their proper place. All Christian churches have had too artificial a notion of the meaning of religion, salvation and the obligation of church membership. There has been little regular systematical emphasis upon the teaching and practice of stewardship as a necessary and regular manifestation of Christian faith fifty-two weeks in the year. The next great movement and emphasis of our evangelical faith will be along these lines and a generation from now we will find the requirement of stewardship, honesty and faithfully obeyed, to be one of the essential requirements for church membership. The drive serves its purpose as a spurt in an emergency, but to keep our missionary program going steadily and continuously throughout the years we must turn to the teaching and practice of fundamental stewardship principles. As a matter of fact we have not really begun to live the Christian life until we apply it to the possessions. Jesus' teaching on this subject of money is very illuminating. When the day comes that we put the emphasis where he did we will not need the drive for raising money, except in some occasional times of emergency which is its only proper place.

Baptist Tithers' League

By JAMES A. WHITE

1. A Beginning. About four years ago, Rev. C. B. Althoff, pastor of Lorimer Memorial Church, Chicago, became interested in pushing tithing among the young people. He brought the matter to the attention of Mr. Orlo O. Montague, that princely young layman of Englewood Church. At that time, Mr. Montague was actively connected with the city Young People's Union. On several occasions he brought the subject of tithing to the attention of the writer. At first I paid but little attention to it, for like so many other ministers of today I did not especially care about tithing, considering it principally an Old Testament affair and connected with the religious life of the Jews.

2. A Personal Experience. Finally, on Mr. Montague's insistence, I visited Mr. Thomas Kane, who for more than forty years has been a devoted apostle of tithing. From his office there have gone out millions of pamphlets on the subject of tithing to any and everybody who would use them. At last I decided to sign up, and conscientiously I began the practice. The first thing it did for me was to force upon me, the keeping of exact accounts with the Lord, if I expected to be an honest man. The next thing was to convince me very quickly that I was not doing all that I should do for benevolences. A decided increase was made. Scarcely has there been a day since I began to tithe that I have not had some money to meet calls which naturally come to a religious worker. The third thing tithing did for me was to bring to me a richness of religious experience which I have not had since the day of my conversion. A realization of the fact that I am in partnership with the Lord has meant great spiritual blessing. At the close of business each year I find a real joy in charging off a great deal more than my tithe.

3. A Wider Outreach. Having become absolutely convinced of tithing as a great character builder, it was now my duty and privilege as General Secretary of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, to institute the Baptist Tithers' League as one of the departments of work. But we had no money and few ministers would listen to our story. The laymen

Pithy Paragraphs on Stewardship

Widow's Mite Equals $400

THERE is a booming town in the West where they are building a splendid Baptist church that will be a credit to the denomination. One Sunday when they were taking pledges for the new building a young fellow came forward and presented four $100 Liberty Bonds. He was the oldest son of a widowed mother and practically the sole support of a family of five. The family were intensely interested in the Liberty Bonds as they represented much sacrifice and it was planned to use them for the purchase of a Ford car which would save mother walking the long distance to church. But as the young fellow said, when he gladly made his offering that Sunday morning: "It is more important to have a church than to have a car in which to go to church." Once more the widow had given her mite.

Swede Gives a Cow

THERE are many Swedes in Minnesota but not all have the conscience of the one who sent a check to our state headquarters with the following explanation: "I have been sick and God restored me, and for this I give him the best cow; sold for $65 and I add $5, in all $70." A few months later came another check as a special offering from the same man: "Give $5.00 to home mission as I was avoided from an unlucky cause which not the whole world could restore as a gun vent off immature and nearly killed my only son." What debtors we all are to God's goodness continually as well as when he helps us in special times of need.

Knocked and It Was Opened

I WAS making an every-member canvass for one of our churches and we had met at the church and started out two by two; a brother officer in the church was with me, and we had called on nearly all on our list when he read off the name of a woman and remarked, "There's no use calling on her, she is a poor widow and has nothing." I said, "Where does she live?" He pointed out a small cottage of two rooms standing back in a lot. We knocked at the door and it was opened by an old lady. She said she was so glad we had called and I mentioned our mission. The good brother who was with me added: "But we don't expect anything from you." "Well," she said, "since my husband died I have been nursing and of what I make in this way I give one-tenth to the Lord and I always keep his money separate. Wait and I will see." She was gone a few moments and returned with a pocket book and opened it in our presence. "See," she said, "I have quite a little for the Lord," and she handed us $10. "Now," she said, "you can come again."

A Stingy Man

THERE is a man in Baltimore who, for the past thirty years, has been heating up the enmity of his business associates by his utter stinginess. Poor devil, he thinks he is a Christian, but he knows not the man who satisfied his hunger with a handful of grain from the wheat field. And the tragedy of it now is that, just after the prime of life, he has been attacked by an incurable illness which is destroying the sense on which he depended most for his living. He goes on his way alone. His greed has embittered his associates so that they keep out of his path. "Terribly sad case," they say, but few are the words of sympathy they give him, and these are obviously strained and better unsaid. Rightly or wrongly they feel that there is a direct connection between his selfishness and his affliction.

A Christian

ONE of the men I most admire is one of the most righteous men I know. He is a tither. Yes, with an income of not more than $1,500 a year, he gives a tenth and more to the church, the poor and other worthy causes. And he says without qualification that his gifts have never failed to bring back to him manyfold their value. He believes in the literal interpretation of Holy Writ on the

If one in five of Northern Baptists earns as much as the average young business woman and gives the tithe of it, this one-fifth of the denomination could pay the whole One Hundred Millions in four years.

When a Christian begins to make money, God either gains a fortune or loses a man.

A man may give without loving, but he cannot love without giving.

A revival in the realm of Christian stewardship will bring every other blessing needed in the church of Christ.

to whom we talked about the matter always showed the greatest sympathy. Again Mr. Kane came to our rescue. For a long time he furnished us without cost all the pamphlets we could use. With the free literature, there was the expense of clerical help and mailing. It actually cost in educational propaganda in those days, about 10 cents to secure a tithing signature. It was suggested that we secure partners who would be willing to share in this expense. We again turned to the laymen. Mr. Orlo O. Montague and Mr. H. G. Baldwin, of Cleveland, responded. For a number of months we submitted statements to these men of God and they faithfully forwarded their checks to cover cost. Mr. H. R. Clissold, of Morgan Park, also assisted.

As time passed and our demands for literature grew, Mr. Kane requested that we take over one-half of the cost of the literature. Till this day, Mr. Kane is still our partner. For every dollar that we put into tithing pamphlets published by "Layman," Mr. Kane contributes one. Months and months of quiet work and waiting have brought their reward. We now have a budget, though still inadequate, to push the work. The General Board of Promotion has looked with favor upon our accomplishments. A great effort is now on, backed by the whole denomination, to enroll a large number of tithing stewards.

4. Present-day Proportions. In the beginning we ordered only a few hundred pamphlets of material at a time. From December 12 to 30, 1921, we sent out to the constituency of the Northern Baptist Convention 25,304 leaflets on tithing. The first week in January saw a shipment of 47,000 on its way to our San Francisco office for distribution throughout the Pacific Coast states; a shipment of 96,000 delivered to our Chicago office, and a rush order placed for 75,000. Twenty-seven states have already ordered material through their Young People's Department for the big February Stewardship Campaign. We are very happy over the results.

subject of giving. There are other tithers of my acquaintance who do not so believe, but their lives are the most sunshiny, beautiful and helpful I know.—B & O Magazine.

Thought Provokers

Kotlah, a goat herder in South India is a Christian, and although he is sixty years of age, every year he walks from his village to the mission station to attend the harvest festival and brings a goat with him. He takes the first goat that is born each year and gives it to the Lord. It would take one month to earn enough to buy a goat. It is, therefore, a large offering. For ten years he has brought in the goat as soon as it was grown. In his poverty he recognizes his stewardship and gives largely.

If one Baptist in sixteen earns as much as a city brick-layer that sixteenth could with their tithe pay the whole One Hundred Million in four years.

Not how much of my money shall I give to God, but how much of God's money shall I keep for myself.

Additional World Survey Reports

Oregon

THE outstanding achievement of the past year in Oregon consisted in the raising of approximately $100,000 for the Baptist New World Movement, the purchasing of a permanent Baptist assembly site, and the baptizing of the largest number of candidates into our church in any one year of the history of the convention. In benevolences this represented an increase of approximately 300 per cent, in baptisms an increase over past years of approximately 30 per cent.

The outlook for the new year clusters about the program of evangelism, religious education in our churches and Sunday schools, promotion of our Baptist world program, looking toward the achievement of our part in the $30,000,000 asked, and, speaking educationally, of a marked advance in the interest of our college at McMinnville, the freshman class numbering about 100, which is the largest in the history of the institution. The first of the new buildings was erected when a splendid gymnasium was constructed the past summer. President Riley is supported by an efficient faculty, and the student body is the finest ever. Our churches are all hopeful, our pastors are all able and alert, and while we feel the financial depression we are not discouraged.

The Czecho-Slovak Baptists

THANK the Lord, we had a very fruitful year. Our last year's conference met in July under the sunny Southern skies in old Richmond, Va., where we have a Slovak church, and a host of Southern Baptist friends. The reports from the field were very encouraging. We now have thirty-two churches and missions in America with a membership of 1,800, and a Sunday School enrollment of 2,313. There were 176 baptized last conference year. Our members, notwithstanding the financial depression, raised a total of $57,841 for various church needs.

Four of our pastors—two Czechs and two Slovaks—left us to conduct Baptist work in Czecho-Slovakia. Also Rev. V. Kralicek, pastor of the First Bohemian Church, Chicago, and professor in the Slavic Baptist Training School, resigned to accept an important appointment by President Masaryk of whom Mr. Kralicek has been an intimate friend for many years.

On the other hand we were re-enforced by five new pastors, namely: Messrs. Catlos, Hadraba, Cech, Profant, and Shuldes, who graduated from the above-named school last June. All of them are in active work. Mr. Paul Kubick, a student in the Northern Bapt. Seminary, succeeds as pastor of the Slovak church, Chicago, Rev. A. P. Slabey who was appointed instructor in the Czecho-Slovak department of the International Bapt. Seminary, at East Orange, N. J.

We are especially grateful for this institution. It is in an ideal location and well adapted to its needs. The American Baptists are pursuing a wise policy in training their foreign pastors in their respective mother tongue as well as in English. We now have eight Slovak students in this seminary and several others are studying in various American schools.

Our brethren in Czecho-Slovakia have also had a great year. They are in the midst of a great religious awakening. Full religious liberty is enjoyed by all. The Slovaks who were severely oppressed by the former Magyar (Hungarian) hegemony, are now fast recuperating under the liberal Czecho-Slovak government. It makes a big difference when a nation is free.

Our outlook for the future is even brighter. In America even the Slovak secular papers are freely discussing religious matters. There is considerable dissatisfaction with formalistic, ritualistic religion, and practical Christianity after the teachings of Jesus is demanded. Even the Roman Catholic priests are publicly criticized. Everything is pointing to a better day in our Lord's harvest. If we only had more laborers. We pray that the Lord shall send them.

ANDREW PAUL SLABEY.

Burma

1. The outstanding features of the past year have been the increased emphasis on evangelism by the membership of the churches and by the teachers, not ordained, in our mission schools, with results which have gladdened all hearts, and the increased interest in "devolution," the putting of greater responsibility upon the membership of the native churches.

2. As to the outlook for 1922, it is simply "more of the same and better." We are pushing along these same lines for the next year with hopes of better and better success despite political unrest, which, however, very slightly interferes with work.

3. Our needs are more men and more money, for it takes both to direct the ever-growing work, despite all the devolution we have accomplished and can accomplish. There are ever open doors and broader fields to cover and every accomplishment only opens the way to greater opportunity.

Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay

THE Argentine Baptist Mission, operating under the auspices of the Southern Baptist Board, Richmond, Va., may look back over the past year, the eighteenth in its history, with genuine gratitude to God. At date of writing no tabulated figures are to hand, but the following outstanding achievements will be of interest: A marked extension of the work into the interior province of Cordoba. An unusually good year in both the theological seminary and the boys' academy, which is in its second year. A successful beginning of Sunday school teacher training classes. An encouraging progress in the erection of church buildings, with considerable help from native money and effort. The maintenance of a healthy denominationalism, free from entangling alliances, and the faithful preaching of the Word by an increasing number of efficient native pastors. The acquisition of a beautiful site and building in Buenos Aires for the Baptist Boys' Academy and Seminary. The reinforcement of our missionary staff with four new couples, making eleven couples in all. The successful advance with the gospel into Paraguay by our native missionary board.

What is the outlook for 1922? Given a year of political peace, with the grace of God we enter a year of unprecedented opportunity. While we do not count upon any special large gifts in 1922, the home base, in spite of a financial crisis, is loyally and generously supporting all our normal advance movements. The native churches, some thirty in number, with numerous outstations, are keyed up for sacrificial giving, are deeply interested in their building projects, and are more sensitive than ever as to the need of education, of organizing the young people's and women's work, and of personal responsibility in evangelism.

As always, we have needs. We could think of many special needs, were we to conceive of a program fully meeting the spiritual crisis in these republics of the River Plate, whose area nearly equals that of half the United States. But with our present program, among the chief needs yet to be filled should be mentioned at least the following: Additional missionary pastors and evangelists to open up and man many promising interior points, in which the gospel is not yet proclaimed. Better church buildings in our larger centers. Institutions for the training of girls and women. Additional buildings and equipment for the seminary and boys' academy. More educational missionaries.

South Brazil

1. In addition to the number of conversions which we have recorded in the various churches in this section of Brazil—I cannot give the figures now—I would say that one of the most outstanding features of our work is the rapid establishment and growth of schools. Of course we have had a few central schools and these have had a constant growth, but during the year we have founded a great number of what we call "Escolas Anexas," day schools in connection with the churches. As the reader will readily recall, Brazil is one of the countries which shows a large percentage of illiteracy—about 80 per cent according to recent figures. The people are beginning to see the shame of this condition and to whom belongs this blame for such conditions, namely, the Catholics. We had one school which is more interesting than the others. It had survived through the past year and at the beginning of this year the teacher (who is not at all advanced in his studies) decided to put on a little campaign for students. He did so, and the Catholics put on a counter-campaign, saying that they would close up our school on a certain day. But they did not close it up; they only sent us on the day set to close it up about 100 pupils! The brother in whose house I am at present has just returned from a trip into the interior of the State of Minas Geraes, and he says that they founded four schools without any trouble. The school work is one of the outstanding features of our work at present.

2. The outlook for 1922 is fine for all lines of our work. The great drawback to the work is the lack of trained workers. Our seminary cannot supply the preachers needed for one state, and the

The Church and Labor

The story of how a Baptist church became a "labor temple." "The churches that are trying to solve the great economic problems of the day would succeed faster if they came out of the clouds and lived among the people."

By THE PASTOR

RECENTLY the writer spoke before the local Rotary club on why men stay away from church services. We are not complaining as our building is full, of men mostly, every Sunday evening; but the secret of how they began to come may be of interest to others.

When I came here the railroad men, (because of the predecessor's attitude toward organized labor) had withdrawn all support from the church not only from ours, but also from all other churches in this city of six thousand. Every Sunday we faced a little band of women and children. The salary was always behind several weeks or months.

How could men so embittered against the church be reached? How could the industrial prejudice against the churches be annihilated? How could these professed infidels be persuaded to listen to Christ's message? These and related questions were asked by the local preachers.

The writer, having been in his early days a member of the coal miners union, was naturally drawn to the men of the shops and railroad. He proposed to the other ministers a plan of action which was considered by them impractical, too radical, and likely to oppose the business men of the town to the church that would dare approve the plan. After much prayer and thought, the writer (pastor of the local Baptist church), decided upon a plan of action for himself. He sought the Lord's advice, and when he got it he asked the Lord for wisdom and strength to face what would perhaps be his ministerial suicide so far as that city was concerned.

On the Trail of the Men

First, he made a quiet survey of living conditions of railroad men. In this survey he ran across many cases of need, poverty, sickness and other forms of distress. He called a meeting of the church and stated what must be done to alleviate these conditions. About this time he was made an honorary member of the Chamber of Commerce, and in a speech before that body he pictured the neglect of the laboring element by both business and religious organizations. He pictured the need of closer co-operation before real community living conditions could prevail. A series of sermons was prepared and eight hundred or more men were sent a personal invitation to hear them. Several sermons were preached before any interest was manifested on the part of the men. In the meantime the preachers and churches were prophesying sure failure, saying that statements regarding profiteering made in some of the sermons would cause the business men members of the church to leave.

One Sunday evening was set aside for railroad men only. Baptists were asked to stay home, and announcement made that as long as a seat remained it would be held for a railroad man. The topic was "Christ and the Laboring Man." This sermon made such a hit, that the men who had been so prejudiced and had come to church with great reluctance, asked me to have five thousand copies printed. This was done and they paid the bill. This sermon was sent to every railroad center of the United States. Though that was eight months ago, requests for copies keep coming in. Another issue of this sermon is in preparation.

Soon men began to come to the evening services and a month after that meeting some began to send their children to Bible school, until our school filled the church and the parsonage was opened for the overflow. It was not long, before the pastor was asked from time to time to address the various sixteen unions. He mingled with them in their shops, rode with them on their trains and talked religion to them. After a while he baptised some of them, and today there is a concerted move on, begun by themselves, to send all their children to the Baptist church.

Union Meets in Church Building

The result has been remarkable. From the rear of the procession the Baptist church has forged to second place and is on the heel of the first. It is only about fifty behind the largest school. About two months ago the church trustees, headed by two business-men members, offered to all the unions the free use of the church building in which they might hold their meetings and other lodge activities. The result was consternation among the other churches. The unions immediately accepted the offer and now every evening except Wednesday there is at least one organized labor meeting in our social parlors. Every Sunday evening people are turned away from the service because of lack of room. This is the only church with over 75 per cent men in the audience; it has the greatest men's Bible class in the city; it is on easy street financially, and the outlook for the future is rosy indeed. The pastor, has been made an honorary member of all unions and editor of the labor column in the local papers. He was recently sent as their delegate to a convention, and is consulted regarding all the problems that go to make up the life of a railroad man. The church is forced to consider enlarging its plant, as the men look to it for all their religious needs. The auditorium holds but three hundred comfortably, yet five hundred men desire to make this their church home. Of course all these have not been converted, but there is hope of baptising many of them before another year is gone. The membership has almost doubled, and it is believed that the present membership will be doubled in another year.

*"Oh that my tongue might so possess
The secret of his tenderness
That every word I breathed should bless!"*

*"For those who mourn, a word of cheer;
A word of hope to those who fear;
And love to all men, far or near."*

*"Oh that it might be said of me;
Surely thy speech betrayeth thee
As friend of Christ of Galilee!"*

The men have christened this church, the "labor temple." The pastor is looked upon as their leader in political, commercial, social and religious life. A mass meeting was called at the church to consider the political course they should take next fall and at the spring municipal election. Their appreciation is shown in substantial ways. Only this week three checks were received totaling a handsome sum for Xmas presents. They are inquiring whether the coal bill is paid. They inquire into the financial condition of the church and are anxious to see an addition or a new building.

The church is about to celebrate its anniversary and looks back upon the greatest year of its history. But the greatest victory is not the almost doubled membership, but the winning of the confidence of the labor organization to the church and Christ. The Lord is gradually opening up a field of labor that sometimes makes his people tremble but when they trust and obey they find that he still performs miracles. The church hopes to make this the greatest laboring-man's church in the country. Its vision is weekly being realized and it believes that God has greater things in store for his people. Too long has it been neglecting the great mass of laboring men. Christ had a peculiar sympathy for the toiling masses, and no church that neglects the poor can hope to prosper. Lincoln said that the Lord must have loved the poor, for he made so many of them.

The Church Must Overhaul Itself

The churches that are trying to solve the great economic questions of the day would succeed faster if they came out of the clouds, and lived among the people. We have been too high, both religiously and socially, to impress the man whose chief business in life is to feed his family. We criticise him for frequenting pool and dance halls, then lock the doors of the church for six days a week. We prohibit him entering the church and criticise him for entering the only open doors where they are welcome. The church in the industrial centers must overhaul itself and get down to "brass tacks." The average man is honest, and open and above board, and has no use for the mere shams the churches hand out too often.

The laboring man, as a rule, is in earnest and has no use for the hypocritical effort the average church puts forth to down the men who are responsible for the economic highway robbery that the country is suffering under today. He wants religion that he can use today. Give him a religion that will help him in his shop and in his home and he will respond. He does respond, and when he does he's there with his whole heart and soul. He takes pride in the man who shows real interest in him and his family. He wants to listen to a language he can understand, and cares little about the original language in which the Bible was given. He wants a message from the Bible in the present language, that will solve his present difficulties.

International Uniform Lesson for February 5

ELIJAH TAKEN UP INTO HEAVEN
2 Kings 2:1-18. Golden Text: Revelation 2:10

Survey

The death of Ahab in battle, the succession of his wicked son Ahaziah to the throne, his death and the succession of his son Jehoram to the throne have taken place in intervening chapters. During these last years Elijah has been teaching in the schools of the prophets at Gilgal, Bethel and Jericho. The Gilgal mentioned in this lesson was probably the one about eight miles north of Bethel. Bethel was on the southern frontier of Samaria fifteen miles from Jericho. Jericho was about five miles from the Jordan and the same distance from it on the other side lay the Dead Sea.

Lesson

Elijah, knowing that the time had come when he would be taken up into heaven, started with Elisha from Gilgal to Bethel, thence to Jericho. Doubtless he wished to make a farewell visit to these schools which had been the scenes of his labors for years. He was an old man now, probably feeble, which led the young men at Bethel and Jericho to say to Elisha, "Knowest thou that Jehovah will take away thy master today?" "Today" in oriental language probably meant soon. Perhaps the feebleness of his companion had something to do with the persistence of Elisha in refusing to be left behind, when Elijah urged him to tarry while he went on to the Jordan. Probably, too, he wanted to be at hand when the great change came to his master. With fifty of the young prophets standing afar off, Elijah took his mantle and smote the waters of the Jordan so that they passed over on dry ground. When Elijah said to the young man who had been his close companion and attendant for nearly ten years, "Ask what I shall do for thee before I am taken from thee," Elisha, faithful to the best in himself, answered, "Let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me." Doubtless double that which a younger son would ordinarily receive. "If thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so." And as they went on and talked Elijah went by a whirlwind into heaven. Elisha lamented and rent his garments, then he stooped and picked up the mantle of Elijah.

Leading Thought

Faithfulness to Jehovah and his life work made Elijah go forth unafraid to meet his Lord. Faithfulness kept young Elisha by his side until the last moment. Faithfulness and faith brought to Elisha the mantle of the great prophet.

Religious Education in the Family

By T. E. HUGHES

IN VIEW of the fact that the family worship of by-gone days has gone the way of all worn-out good things of the past, and that a more modern and effective system should take its place, the following method is suggested: Provide a series of printed instruction covering one year, adapted to the various ages of the children, including hymns and forms of prayer. Secure the willing and universal adoption and regular use of the system by every family in the parish.

While there is scarcely a congregation which does not include some person competent to arrange a suitable course of lessons for such purpose, it would seem to be much better to have our Publication Society issue the series the same as they do the lessons for use in Sunday schools.

There is much to be said in favor of the immediate adoption of some such measures as will supply the place formerly, though inadequately, filled by the catechism and family worship; but it goes without saying that pastors and laymen are keenly alive to the need of more efficient and effective religious training of our children than the great majority of them are now receiving.

The lack of adequate family religious instruction in the past generation has been strikingly brought out in the recent published report of the service of chaplains in the recent world war entitled, "Religion Among American Men." This shows a marked difference between Catholic and Lutheran soldier boys in comparison with Protestant soldier boys, as to definite knowledge of religious principles according to the faith of their parents, and this can be accounted for solely on the ground of special religious training along definite lines by parochial schools and parental teachers.

Such being the case with the present generation of Protestants, what may we expect from the next and succeeding generations but a slump and sure decline in genuine spiritual religion?

While Baptists in general are without doubt coming to see the need, and while plans and systems will in time appear from some quarter as a result of the demand, why should not the Baptist churches lead the way and not longer wait for others but assume the initiative because of the urgent need? There are those among our teachers (and educators, if not to be found in every congregation, are in most of them), who are amply capable of constructing a pedagogical system for family use. If the need is conceded, why not go about it at once?

The Church Week-day School

By THOMAS S. YOUNG

THE church week-day school has come to stay. The first formal attempt of a sustained character was that in Gary, Ind., begun in 1914. Because of the character of the public school system, the conditions are different from those obtaining in other places, yet it has furnished much material and inspiration of untold value. Over 4,000 pupils are in regular attendance in these schools. In Toledo the movement is in its fifth year, and has something over 3,000 pupils registered.

There are over 150 cities and towns which have church week-day schools either in operation or in process of organization. Of this number, about 50 per cent are using public-school time. Very few use the public-school building. Field workers earnestly advise the use of churches wherever it is a physical possibility. Where public school time is used, the whole problem is greatly simplified.

These church week-day schools are held at four different times. After the public school day, as in Philadelphia; on Saturday afternoon; some evening during the week as in a church night school; or during the public-school day. The percentage of attendance of available pupils for any time aside from the public-school day is approximately 25 per cent under favorable conditions. When public school time is used, the lowest percentage of attendance on record is that of a high school having 65 per cent. There are very many schools with a record between 80 and 90 per cent, several with from 90 to 97 per cent, and at least three with 99 per cent of available pupils in attendance.

One of the most interesting facts in the movement is that in almost every city where public school time is used, the superintendent of public schools has either initiated the movement or is an enthusiastic supporter of it. In many cities, the school boards have offered public-school time to the churches as soon as they were prepared to present an acceptable program.

Another interesting fact is that Protestants, Catholics and Jews are frequently in hearty cooperation in asking for public-school time. Whenever the Protestants of a community at the very beginning of the movement go to representatives of the Jews and Catholics and place the whole matter before them, there is usually cooperation as a result. Of course, this cooperation extends only to the matter of securing public-school time. Whenever there is opposition from one or both of these communions, it usually has its origin in one of two things—either they have been ignored in the movement and are therefore suspicious of it, or political factors enter in and cause the trouble.

The Chimney Corner

They Have Faith in "Her"

TO THE READERS OF THE CHIMNEY CORNER:

It is just a year this month since it became my pleasant task to furnish articles for these columns, and I have not yet ventured to address a personal word to you. But "the time has come, the walrus said!" And it has come because I want to beg you to read through the delightful little poems on these pages; surely as you look them over you will also be good enough to overlook any strange peculiarities in meter or rhyme, for the poets are still rather young, but at least they have two qualities which are requisites for versification—a passionate belief, and a yearning that burns! So allow me to introduce you to these Young Reserves of ours. As a rule they keep modestly within their own bounds on the opposite page, although every once in awhile they break forth into writing me the most delectable letters and into competing diligently in all our contests. So it occurred to me to see how they would react to this new Continuation Campaign of yours and mine. Such a mouthful of a name to descend upon youthful poets unawares! It remained to be seen whether they would spend any too precious hours of their Christmas vacations on us.

Can't you, in imagination, picture them with their legs curled around desk chairs, nibbling the ends off their new Christmas pencils as they wrestled with words. Words are such slippery eels; you think you have the very one, but dear me, once you land it, it's too uncomfortably long for a poem, or it won't rhyme reasonably. "Continuation," for example! Can't you hear a plaintive: "Mother, what in the world rhymes with continuation?"

Mother, mending socks, thinks it over; then presently: "I have it! Insinuation!"

So into the famous poem goes that tremendously significant word. And I would beg of you to let these heartfelt little verses insinuate themselves into your heart. For our Young Reserves are desperately in earnest. They have faith in us. Indeed they have! And it is a dreadful thing to lose faith in anybody when you're young. Never shall I forget, once upon a time, losing faith in a "Her." A Bible "Her," at that!

They were reading me in Exodus a passage so timely for you and me today that I quote it: "Moses, Aaron and Hur went up to the top of the hill. And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed. But Moses' hands were heavy; so they took a stone, and put it under him and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun."

It was so pleasant to find a lady doing conspicuous valiant things in the Bible that I remember asking curiously about this "her." Never shall I forget the exasperated thud of disappointment at discovering that Hur was a—man!

That disappointment has tugged away ever since: is it always to be men who give the valiant supportings? Not a bit of it! There are Promised Lands stretching before our denomination right now, and day-before-yesterday we set out to take them. But an "Amalek" met us half-way. (You know Amalek?) Yet as long as the hands of the denomination were held up, we prevailed; but yesterday, when those hands suddenly let down, this sly old wretch of an Amalek prevailed. So today we have planned a new plan: Aaron to hold up the hand on one side and a very enthusiastic Her to hold up the hand on the other side. Yes, even though that hand costs $6,000,000 she will hold it up! And I think one of the spurs to victory may be that there are these Young Baptist Reserves on the side-lines watching, with all the confidence in the world in—Her!

Very faithfully yours,

MARGARET T. APPLEGARTH.

*There was a lady—Mrs. Taft—
Feared Baptist women had gone daft;
How can they raise six million dollars
From housewives and from youthful scholars?"*

*Give her the answers she deserves
In clever poems, O Young Reserves!*

"The Continuation Fund"

By CLAIRE JACOBS, Salt Lake City, Utah

THE Northern Baptists some years ago
A vision saw—a world in woe:
America, Europe, the isles of the sea,
Africa, China, as dark as could be.

O'er the wide world this darkness had spread

Until all light and hope had fled.
"This must not be," the Baptists said,
"Let there be light; arise from the dead!"

And so with purpose brave and true
The Baptists arose to dare and do;
One hundred million dollars, a fund to raise

To send the light, God's Son to praise.

From far and near the pledges came Until—almost—the goal was seen.
Carry on! Carry on! we shall succeed,
We must supply the world's great need.

"We, too, shall help," the women cry,
We can, we must, we will or die!
Six million dollars our share shall be
To set the world from bondage free."

To Bee or Not To Bee

By Y. T., New York

WHILE Bumble Bee stored up her honey

Poor Grumble Bee stored up her money:
"I haven't got a cent to spare,"

She buzzed in high disgust, "so there!"
And as for me, I think it's funny

For Christian Bees to "give" such stings

When they should give the gospel wings
And fly to Oriental gardens

To beg the heathen children's pardons

For storing up so much that's sweet

We surely ought to share this treat,

For in the Bible we perceive:

"Freely give, ye who receive!"

My Bit

By STACY JOHNSTON, Denver, Colo.

I'D like to give an awful lot,

But I'm not very rich,

Yet if I give just what I've got

I guess God has a niche

Where he can use my bit of money

And say, "I thank you sonny."

Maid of Money

By GEORGIE SMYTHE, Lincoln, Neb.

MAID of Money earned a dollar,
"This is for a mission scholar!"

Maid of Money saved a quarter:

"This is for some convert's daughter!"

Maid of Money took two nickels:

"To teach immigrant's babies not to eat pickles!"

Maid of Money gave a foot of dimes

To heal sick children of other climes.

And the Great Physician who watched each cure

Said: "Thank you, dear, for I know you're poor."

Listen!

By C. F. STOBIE, Fairmont, W. Va.

HEAR the women's millions

Jingling as they roll,

Telling to all peoples

How Baptists reach their goal!

They are casting down their idols

Melting them to dollars

With the bright cooperation

Of the youthful Baptist scholars.

Eventually—Why Not Now?

By LESLIE CROWN, SHIRLEY CROWN and JACK CROWN, Denver, Colo.

SUPPOSE, my little lady, that you couldn't read a word
And that your thoughts about the earth were really quite absurd:
Suppose you thought it rested on a restless dragon's back
And if he opened wide his jaws to give a monstrous smack
You really might get swallowed up and never more be seen—
Don't you think you'd probably wish some Baptist girls weren't mean?
Suppose, my little fellow, that you were very sick
And that the heathen doctor's cure was needles he would stick
Here and there all over you to let pain demons out.
Oh! don't you think you'd squirm and kick and very likely shout:
"What's happened to those Baptist boys that live in Christian lands, It's high time that they looked to see me stretching out my hands!"
Suppose, my BAPTIST readers, that every Young Reserve
Got exactly what their pocketbooks show that they deserve,
Don't you suppose that some of us would never attend schools,
And others would be ignorant of all the hygiene rules,
While others would be kneeling at some heathen idol's feet—
Afraid to live, afraid to die, afraid to walk the street!
I guess we'd wish we'd championed This splendid world-wide Baptist fund!

The Crusader Spirit

By ADELAIDE NOBLE, Buffalo, N. Y.

WE'LL bring our dimes by feet and inches,
We'll save and save until it pinches,
We'll get our friends to help us, too,
And go over the top, as the big folks do.

To China, India and Assam
Our money goes as fast as it can.
Six thousand dollars from a thousand bands
All of it given by loving hands.

S. O. S. and I. O. U.

By "SWEET SIXTEEN," Detroit

FROM Alaska's icy mountains
To Cuba's coral strand,
From Africa's sunny fountains
To our own precious land,
From China's Yellow River
To India's palmy plain
They call us to deliver
Their lands from error's chain.
Shall Baptists who are lighted
With wisdom from on high,
Shall Baptists to those benighted
The lamp of life deny?
Ah, yes, Continuation
We name our new Campaign:
Continue till each nation
Has learned Messiah's name.

Women's (W) Rites!

By W. T. WILLIAMS, San Francisco

SOME Baptists said that it couldn't be done,
But she, with a chuckle, replied
That maybe it couldn't, but she would be one
Who wouldn't say so till she'd tried.
So she waded right in with a trace of a grin
On her face—if she worried she hid it;
She started to sing as she tackled the thing
That couldn't be done—and she did it!
Some Baptist scoffed: "Why, you'll never raise that,
At least, women never have raised it!"
But she put on her coat and she put on her hat
And the first thing we knew she'd begun it.
With a lift of her chin, and a bit of a grin,
Without any shouting or credit
She started to sing as she tackled the thing
That couldn't be done—and she did it!

Ode (Owed!) to Our Missionary Soldiers

By DOROTHY EVANS, El Paso, Ill.

THEY who fought for freedom's cause,
They who went when others stayed,
Have they gotten their just applause?
Have they received their needed aid?
They who gave their all for us,
They who gave their lives—and more,
We who make a complaint and fuss:
Hadn't we better think it o'er?

No matter how often we may say
"Oh! I'll wait till another day,"
Don't you think it would be best
If you'd give now and help the rest?

So think it o'er, my brother;
See if you can't help another.
Pass it on! This word sublime:
"Give till it hurts, then give your time!"

The Continuation Fund

By LOIS J. WOOD, Boise, Idaho

THE schools and the scholars
Wanted six million dollars:
They asked our good women to raise it.
The women, they thought,
That they really ought
To find plenty here who would pay it.
So they quickly began
On a definite plan
To find how the task could be done.
They asked that each one
Pay a small or large sum
To make out the six million dollars.
Many littles make much, we are told,
And with such a plan
I'm certain we can
Complete the fund in full measure.
So the scholars and schools,
As they follow their rules,
Will receive their amount with great pleasure!

Our Part

By HELEN M. GOODWIN, Northwood, N. H.

WE will raise six million dollars
To send across the sea,
To people who need the gospel
As much as you and me.

In this great work of ours
Each Young Reserve has a part,
He'll rally to the standard
And give with all his heart.

All Baptist women and children
Will do what they know is right,
They'll dig down into their pockets
And give with all their might.

When the victory is won,
In which all have had a share;
Great will be the rejoicing
Of the heathen over there.

The Income-Tax Girl

By JEREMY JONES, Newark, N. J.

THERE once was a civilian fair
Who longed to be a millionaire:
"I'll pledge your Fund a ton of money!"
(Meanwhile she practiced parsimony.)
For though she drew her weekly cash
She spent it all to cut a dash,
And squashed our mild insinuation
To tithe it for "Continuation."
We made her read the "Survey" through Whereat she cried: "Here's something new!
I've simply got to have a part
In carrying through what Baptists start!"

C. W. C. and That "Foot of Dimes"

THERE once were some Crusader dimes
That had the most Crusoe-dear times
Following foot-prints as fast as could be
As they set out to See-Double-You-See
(C. W. C.)
The black Fridays of other climes—
Such as Topsy and elephant tooth, Rustling Chief, Poor Dirt and Old Ruth.
And every last child
Cried: "Oh, we've been wild
To hear this great Story of Truth."

"One Sent"

By Y. T., New York

"I'M going to Burma,"
Said busy little Irma.
So off she sailed in an upsidedown chair
And waved to us fondly when once she got there.
And no one was ever as busy as she Converting her Burmans under a tree!
So when she sailed back—still visionary—
We dubbed her our family missionary!
She asked us at once what that long word meant;
And we said that a missionary meant one sent.
And now I fear this tale's on me—
For the very next day, at half past three,
We attended a meeting and heard them explain

If so, we can greatly improve the society immediately and for years to come by introducing the splendid Christian Culture Course as outlined on the Young People's pages of THE BAPTIST.

Young People's Page

Negotiations with THE BAPTIST resulted in an additional page for presenting the work of our Baptist young people, on the condition that the paper should not have to carry extra overhead expense.

The paper is growing in popularity with the young people of the denomination, hence this additional space.

The Baptist Young People's Union of America has assumed the financial and editorial responsibility. We desire to ask our young people to share this responsibility with us in two ways:

1. In new annual subscriptions. For each 1,000 new annual subscribers sent in by the various young people's organizations, B. Y. P. U., Christian Endeavor, Organized Class, and World Wide Guild, at the annual subscription rate of $2.50 single subscription or club subscriptions when the list is equal to 10 per cent of the reported membership of the church, $2 per year, THE BAPTIST will give us credit for $500.

In cases where it is impossible to reach a 10 per cent list THE BAPTIST will grant a rate of $3 for THE BAPTIST and Missions provided both subscriptions clear through the office of THE BAPTIST, 417 S. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Special blanks for reporting subscriptions may be secured from the office of the B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Such a plan makes it possible for the young people to secure this fine space in THE BAPTIST with practically no expense. Four thousand such subscriptions will just about care for the expense for one year.

Our pastors are requested to appoint the young people as a committee for placing THE BAPTIST in the homes of our people. We ask all young people's organizations to take the matter up at a very early date. It is quite possible a subscription week will be announced at an early date, but do not wait.

2. Publicity. We urge every young people's organization of whatever name to appoint a strong publicity committee to furnish our office with the latest news from the field such as bright ideas for entertaining stunts for socials, live programs for devotional meetings and missionary meetings.

Special Awards

To the young people's organization securing subscriptions equal to 10 per cent of reported church membership, we will send free and postpaid a library containing the following helpful books:

"Our B. Y. P. U."
"Training the Devotional Life"
"The Triumph of the Missionary Motive"
"You and Your Church"
"Baptist Beliefs"

In churches of 1,000 members and over, this library will be given for securing subscriptions equal to 10 per cent up to 1,000, namely, 100 or more subscriptions. Such a church, however, could not be considered a "10 per cent church." Subscriptions must be taken at $2.50 each, or at $3, the combination rate for THE BAPTIST and Missions. Such a plan places a library within the reach of the small church as well as the large.

For securing 20 per cent and over of reported membership, the following library will be given:

"Our B. Y. P. U."
"Training the Devotional Life"
"Triumph of the Missionary Motive"
"You and Your Church"
"Baptist Beliefs"
"Church Vacation Schools"
"Story Telling"
"Baptist Young People at Work"
"Church a Field of Service"
"Short History of the Baptist"

These libraries will be of great educational value. The placing of our denominational paper in the homes of our people will go a long way toward solving many of our problems.

The service asked of our young people is not a hard one. If entered into enthusiastically, we believe the task will be a joyful one.

JAMES ASA WHITE, Gen. Secy. B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Note: The above plan in no way changes the subscription policy of THE BAPTIST. No individual local organization or church receives any financial benefit whatever from this arrangement.

A man's moral character can be determined by his ability to see clearly the moral good in his fellowmen.—C. M. CARTER.

Christian Culture Course

MOTTO:

"We Study that we may Serve"

ANNOUNCEMENT

We are happy to announce to our constituency that the American Baptist Publication Society through its Young People's Division and the Baptist Young People's Union of America have worked out and are promoting together this study course for young people. What has been known as the "Baptist Trained Leaders' Course" has been extended and enlarged to the "Christian Culture Course." This course ought to care for the training needs of our young people in so far as they can be met by local class or correspondence study.

All details, such as examinations, records, etc., in connection with the "Christian Culture Course" will be cared for by the Baptist Young People's Union of America, 125 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. All books should be ordered from American Baptist Publication Society, 1701 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., or any Branch House.

We sincerely hope this course will meet a real need and will have a large place in the educational program of our Baptist young people.

JAMES ASA WHITE,
General Secretary.

AN AMERICAN LEGION POST ON DEBS

I have been directed by the members of Templeton-Parry Post, No. 126, American Legion, speaking through their executive committee, to address to you our formal protest against the editorial entitled, "The Freeing of Debs," which appeared in the December 31 issue of THE BAPTIST.

Debs is an arch-traitor to America, a supreme villain, a knave who is ever working to bring about the overthrow of law, government and the church. His release from the penitentiary was a crying disgrace to the present administration, and an insult to every man who wore our country's uniform during the war.

It is almost unbelievable that THE BAPTIST would uphold Debs' release. We might expect such an attitude from papers like the Illinois Staats-Zeitung, but never from the official organ of the Northern Baptist Convention. The editorial pictures Debs as the "victim of a war hysteria"! Shame upon the paper for that! What shameful folly to attempt to make a martyr out of the greatest traitor God ever suffered to harass America!

One hundred sixty-six members of the First Church of Indianapolis, which sponsors the Templeton-Parry Post No. 126, American Legion, likewise were "victims of a war hysteria." Thank God they were "victimized" into putting on the khaki and going forth to fight for the greatest country, the greatest flag and the greatest principle that the world will ever see! Some of them died for America, and their souls cry out in anguish that brethren of their faith now seek to acclaim as a martyr the man who was and still is their vilest enemy.

The Templeton-Parry Post of the American Legion, a Post 100 per cent Baptist and 100 per cent loyal to our country, protests against an editorial policy or an editorial weakness that will allow such an article as that on "The Freeing of Debs" to appear in THE BAPTIST. We claim that that article does not represent the attitude of Baptists in the Northern Convention.

TEMPLETON-PARRY POST No. 126, Ralph G. Elvin, Adjutant.
Indianapolis, Ind.

ANOTHER SOLDIER SPEAKS OF DEBS

I want to express my appreciation of the liberal and thoroughly Christian way in which you handle comment on current events. For instance, the copy of THE BAPTIST which arrived today thanks God for the returning sanity of the American people after the war, which demands the freeing of Debs, and which opposes the continued imprisonment of political prisoners. During the war I was a combat officer in a machine gun battalion in France, and the Prussianism which we found well entrenched here on our return bade fair to negate that for which we thought we fought. We can well thank God that sanity is beginning to return, and that we realize we have not been Christian in all our relationships.

Golden, Colo.

G. L. COLLINS

THE WORDS THAT JAILED DEBS

Now what did Debs say or do? I wish I had space to quote his exact words which the daily press has been so careful to avoid doing, but the statement is too long, so I will give the substance of it.

In a speech at Canton, Ohio, in June, 1918, he said that wars are usually declared by statesmen at the behest of the ruling class in order to advance the interest of that class; that these gentlemen never go to the front to fight the wars, but by appeals to patriotism, flag waving and other well-known devices try to induce the young men of the country to enlist, and if these schemes fail, they are drafted. They are then sent to the front to slaughter other men whom they have never seen and against whom they have no grievance, and are slaughtered and maimed by thousands and millions, and those who are not killed, at the end of the war return and are compelled to slave the rest of their lives to pay the cost of the war.

That is what Debs said and that is what he was sent to prison for. Are those words of his true? Every sane person, viewing the events of the last few years, knows that they are true.

The attorney general says that Debs has not been pardoned, but is released merely as an act of grace, that the government still believes him guilty of violating the law, that is, of violating a law that is unconstitutional. And there are people who profess to wonder why respect for law seems to be decreasing.

C. S. GRIEVES, of Amesbury, Mass., in Newburyport Daily News.

POLITICAL PRISONERS AND THE CHRISTIAN CONSCIENCE

The record of our attitude toward those who "for conscience sake" refused to support the war is a matter which Christian intelligence can no longer decline to contemplate. We passed laws depriving such men of what they had supposed were their constitutional rights of freedom of speech and press. We enforced those laws with a degree of passion in excess of that obtaining in any other country, not excepting even Germany itself. We stretched and strained their language far beyond its face value. For their violation we imposed sentences of ten and twenty years' imprisonment while our allies were punishing similar offenders with sentences of six months to three years. When the war was over we refused to grant the amnesty that was given after our civil war on the ground that these men were criminals because they had disobeyed a statute which made the expression of opinion a criminal offense. By the same legal sophistry we might pass a law declaring wilful homicide not to be murder and there would then be no murderers in jail. Finally we let a few of these men out into the sunlight with the same action that sets free others condemned for murder. Some of them we let go on condition that they consent to deportation and pay their own expenses. The rest we do not pardon, for that would restore their citizenship rights; so we commute their sentences. In France such men had their citizenship restored by law and in England and Italy several of them are serving in the national legislatures, and that by vote largely of ex-soldiers.

Surely this latest act in the passionate tragedy of the conflict between war and conscience is a halting, grudging gesture. Yet it is perfectly typical of the feeble, fumbling manner in which we are slowly disengaging the national mind from the clutch of war propaganda and painfully feeling our way toward political sanity and Christian justice. . . . We are continually stultifying and nullifying our ideals, failing to do the thing we know is right, in church as well as in state, because it will put us in conflict with some small but powerful group, whose economic interest is therefore able to assert itself successfully over our convictions.—The Christian Century.

THE CHURCH IN WAR AND PEACE

The part played by the church in the war and its peace has been, from the point of view of the church's professed ideals, so cowardly, blind and compromising that one has to apologize for suggesting that the church might in the future take any noteworthy stand against war. Nevertheless I am convinced that the church will take such a stand, for the logic of its most fundamental teachings, as well as world events will force the church to choose between conscientious objection to war or complete forfeiture of the moral respect of mankind. The Christian church professes to believe in the divinity of Jesus. Well then, can it scrap its leadership in time of war and crawl out by saying that this was forty-nine per cent compromise which it had to make because it had to choose between two alternate evils, and that there was no possible other choice which would not have involved participation in the Devil's game of war? Again the Christian church claims that it is holy and catholic, that it exists to give utterance to the voice of God and to shelter all of his children in a universal

The Redlands School of Missions

By S. FRASER LANGFORD

The school of missions as we have been developing it in the First Church of Redlands is the greatest single agency that we know anything about for stimulating the missionary interest of the church and for the organization of a strong home base for the evangelization of the world.

Fifty per cent of the entire membership of the Redlands Church has been enrolled this past year in the study of missionary books in the organized school of missions which held its fifth annual session, Oct. 16-Nov. 20. There was an average attendance in all the classes throughout the six weeks of 335 and a total attendance in all sessions of 2,009.

The preparation for our school of missions begins very early in the year, in the commission of religious education, the commission selecting delegates to the training school of missions in Los Angeles, choosing those who are being thought of for responsible positions in the work of planning for the school. This year the delegates selected were Mrs. J. F. Arthur, Mrs. W. H. Heacock and Miss May Cross. Shortly after returning from the training school the commission selected the following faculty: Mrs. J. F. Arthur, women's class; Prof. H. E. Tilton, men's class; Prof. C. H. Marsh, B. Y. P. U. group; Miss Joybelle Hatcher, high school girls; Mr. Harold Scott, high school boys; Mrs. S. A. Conrad, intermediates; Mrs. Guy Fairbanks, juniors; Mrs. W. E. Richardson, primary.

The following books were selected for study: "The Kingdom and the Nations," North, adult classes; "World Friendship Incorporated," Murray, young people; "Noble Army," Ethel Hubbard, intermediates; "Under Many Flags," Cronk-Singmaster, juniors; "Stories of Many Lands," arranged by the teacher of class.

On the opening night in the general assembly the room was decorated with flags of all nations and with slogans and posters to stimulate missionary interest, such as "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," "God is the owner of all things," "Christianize your bank roll," "Stewardship is God's kindergarten for raising men, rather than for raising money," "The need of the hour is for a church that lovingly gives to God at least the first fruits of all time, energy and money," "When we know we care, when we care we pray, when we pray we give," etc.

The key word this year in all the opening exercises was Christian stewardship. Dr. V. L. Duke, president of Redlands University, presided and directed the opening exercises. A series of interesting talks on stewardship of time, prayer, possessions, money and life were given. The school hymn "O Zion haste!" was sung at every opening session; the music included orchestra under the direction of Mr. Harold Scott.

The following is a record of average class attendance: Women's class, 95; men's class, 57; B. Y. P. U., 91; high school girls, 24; high school boys, 7; intermediates, 16; juniors, 25; primary, 22. The total attendance in all classes each night was: Oct. 16, 402; Oct. 23, 198 (rainy night); Oct. 30, 326; Nov. 6, 346; Nov. 13, 330; Nov. 20, 407; total, 2,009.

There were some special features connected with the school, including addresses by Mr. Theo. Fieldbrave, worker with the Hindus in the Imperial Valley. Rev. Peter Frederickson and Mrs. Frederickson, of Sonoma Bata, Africa, and Miss Viola Hill of China. Special features were developed in several of the classes. The juniors dramatized the different kind of workers that were needed in the foreign field; the intermediates dramatized a missionary theme called "Three Knocks in the Night." The women's class dramatized "China's Needs," and on the closing night of the school twenty-seven high school girls gave "The New Hallelulah Chorus" and the pastor of the church, Rev. S. Fraser Langford, gave a missionary address on "Adoniram Judson or the Prisoner of Aungmye." In the closing session of the school all classes took up the topic of Christian stewardship and stewardship cards were given out to be signed. The school will go on in the reading of many missionary books among the men, women and children, under the direction of a committee.

There have been many delightful echoes from the school which are worthy of note, and we quote a few: One junior boy said to his mother during the sessions, "Mother, would you care if I decided to be a medical missionary?" Another junior boy, on a night when his parents were somewhat reluctant to attend, said, "I want to go, we learn things at that school." The child led the family out that night. A junior girl, hearing the teacher say "I wish I had heard about Mary Slessor when I was a child, I might have been a foreign missionary," turned to one of the helpers and said, "Can you tell me where I can find something to read about Mary Slessor; you know I am going to be a missionary." A junior boy surprised his mother one morning by saying, "I am going to be a Sam Higginbottom some day." In the women's class this remark was heard, "Every session has been so interesting I wish the class would continue." Teacher of the women's class: "I never taught such a group of faithful, willing women. Thirty-five different women took part in the class work."

One of the best effects of the school of missions appeared at a missionary banquet of men addressed by Rev. F. P. Manly, of Nellore, India, and Rev. and Mrs. Peter Frederickson of Sonoma Bata, Africa, in which twenty-five men pledged themselves to read five missionary books during the year, and a committee is now handling this matter among the men. One of the big successes of the school was the development of missionary interest among the high school girls. Comparing the school with other courses it is the largest we have had, and has deepened the missionary conviction of the church so that the church is now giving two dollars abroad for each dollar it gives at home.

There is now in the University of Redlands a strong student volunteer band. This band was organized in the third year of our school. One year seventeen young people pledged themselves for this work. The school is developing very marked ability in the teachers which are being appointed each year and in presentation of missionary demonstrations.

We feel that it is worth all the effort put into it, that it does not interfere in the least degree with the audiences in the main auditorium of the evening services of the church. Looking at it from every point of view it is one of the best things in the line of church work that we know anything about.

An Apostle of Christian Goodwill Visits England

By S. W. HUGHES

AMERICA is rendering great service to our nation in the loan of her gifted leaders. They come to us not only as representatives but as symbols of the highest life of the great republic. We are able, through their ministrations in our midst, to apprehend the moral and spiritual significance of America as a servant of righteousness for the whole race of mankind. We therefore welcome your apostles of Christian faith and goodwill as among these international thinkers, who are girdling the earth with the architecture of divine citizenship.

All the nations need an interchange of heart and mind that shall make bridges of all our frontiers and so facilitate an exploration of the racial mind which makes for universal friendship. The world is one in the bond of necessity and it is for our master-minds to promote its joyous unity in the knowledge and love of Jesus Christ. To this great end Dr. Rolvix Harlan has recently served in really strategic centers in our land. Our principal pulpits and platforms have afforded him splendid opportunities which he has redeemed with great power and widespread acceptance. His scholarly gifts quickly marked him as a man whose well-knit mind was at the service of "the Mind of the Master." In his name he taught and expounded the essential truths that constitute the only adequate basis for the new international superstructure.

He has made many friends in formative fellowships, and we rejoice to feel that he has linked us the more intelligently to the soul of your great nation in the faith and practicality of Christian idealism. We beheld him prophetic as he discoursed on civilization and brotherhood before our National Assembly. Here the thought of universal brotherhood was lit with the philosophy of Christian Faith, and raised to the confidence of a hope "too fair to turn out false" by the proclamation of its exclusive secret in the gospel of Christ. Our friend stood in one of our most honorable associations in this grand task, for he was delivering the first "Clifford Lecture" in succession to Dr. John Clifford whose wonderful message of 1920 marked the establishment of this lectureship. He rose to the occasion by the power of him who quits his devotees in the places of secret discipleship, and, as we shared the fellowship of this masterly representation of the world's true hope, we thanked God and took courage. In this simple tribute to the powerful service of one of your most gifted sons, I share the hope of increasing good for the world through the mutual intercourse thus promoted.

Philadelphia Letter

By ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

"A Christian without cant, a Baptist without bigotry, a patriot without price," was the terse summing up of the life of Ernest L. Tustin, made by his pastor Dr. Carter Helm Jones in an address of rare beauty. The funeral services were simple. The Scriptures were read by Dr. Nichols, the prayer was by Pres. Emory W. Hunt, and Dr. Jones made the remarks. The great church was crowded. The mayor and the city officials, the council, and people of every walk of life were present. The Ministers' Conference on Jan. 9, had a memorial service where many appreciative words were said. Pres. Milton G. Evans, Dr. J. Milnor Wilbur, president of the conference, Rev. John A. Hainer, moderator of the association, Ray L. Hudson, president of the Baptist Union and of the state convention, together with representatives of the Negro and Chinese races, took part.

An outstanding event in Baptist circles was the Church Workers' Training Institute held Jan. 9-13 under the auspices of the Publication Society and the Promotion Board of our Union. A program of unusual richness was offered. The faculty included twenty-four names, the entire staff of the Publication Society and other specialists like Sumner Vinton, Mrs. Wm. H. Farmer, H. F. Stilwell, Ray Petty, Prof. Isaac G. Matthews. The subjects of study included everything that goes to make up the life of a modern church. Our churches showed their appreciation of this rare privilege by pouring out in such numbers that even the facilities of the great Temple building were taxed to take care of them. Any city will be favored indeed that can get the Publication Society to put on such a program as this; and it will be doubly fortunate if it has such an executive agency as our local Promotion Board to push it through.

The idea of a church day in the middle of the week with a supper, study classes, a social expression and the prayer meeting seems to be catching hold in this city. It is receiving notice in the daily papers. Other denominations are using the plan and developing it. One Presbyterian church of West Philadelphia with a membership of nearly 2,000 begins its activities on Wednesday morning at ten o'clock. Until late evening something different is going on each hour. There are movies at the right time for young people, study classes, sewing, and many things more. I cite this as an illustration of the needed effort in the scattered membership of a vast city to bring the people together into the church as a common home.

Many friends of Dr. Wm. H. Main will be interested to hear of the marked success that is attending this, his second pastorate with Memorial Church. He is now in the third year of this pastorate after a first pastorate of nine years. Large congregations are the rule; the Bible school, a model graded school with many young men, is flourishing. In the last year and a half the church has paid more than $20,000 on the New World Movement. The record of baptisms has been good. Five were baptized on Christmas evening and three at the last communion. At the White Gifts service Christmas night an offering for charities, including the Old People's Home, the needy of the parish and the Armenians in the Near East amounted to more than $600. The last three Christmas offerings for these objects have totaled over $3,000. I told a prominent member of Memorial that I was going to make an example of this second pastorate and he replied warmly, "You can't put it on too thick."

Among events in the near future are the annual dinner of Rochester alumni with President Barbour on February 13, various social unions in February, and the dinners that represent the beginning of the drive by the women for the interdenominational schools of the Orient. The latter gives us pause, not that the object is not of commanding interest and importance but on account of a question as to the effect of this great campaign upon the other plans of our Baptist women to raise $6,000,000 to help our own Board of Promotion. Is there not danger that the ground will be so burned over by the interdenominational appeal that our own vast needs and unprecedented debts will not have the proper hearings? After all, while the women do the work, every man and woman knows that all the funds come out of the same pocket, the family purse, and there is a limit. We are facing an unprecedented denominational situation and must exercise our faith in wisdom.

The Next Meeting of the Baptist World Alliance

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

The first meeting of the Baptist World Alliance was held in London in the year 1906. European countries and America, as well as the British Isles, were well represented, and the program was of a high order. The delegates returned to their home lands with a distinct feeling that a long step had been taken in the direction of denominational solidarity. The next meeting was held in Philadelphia in 1911, when the presence of numerous brethren from Russia was perhaps the most impressive feature of the gathering. The president at that meeting was Dr. John Clifford of London, who was succeeded in the presidency of the Alliance by Dr. R. S. MacArthur of New York, the present incumbent. The Philadelphia meeting appeared to have done much to develop a world-wide denominational consciousness. The next meeting was set for 1916, and was to have been held in the city of Berlin, but the outbreak of war in 1914 frustrated all such plans. Now it is announced by the executive committee of the Alliance that the Baptists of Sweden have asked that the next meeting be held in Stockholm in July, 1923.

In 1920 the Episcopalians of the world sent representatives to the Lambeth Conference in London. In 1921 the Methodists and Presbyterians held similar gatherings. It is highly important now that Baptists of the world hold another meeting. The time has come for the renewal of fellowships. The time has come, too, for Baptists to do everything possible to promote the solidarity of their denominational forces the world over. The hour calls for fraternal cooperation in the delivery of our distinctive message, without in any wise lessening such cooperation with other evangelical bodies as we believe is acceptable to our Lord. In recent years certain movements, which Baptists for centuries have resisted, are showing evidence of new strength. Isolated groups in our denomination acting independently can hardly proceed effectively against such movements, but unitedly we can do a great deal.

It is appropriate that the next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance should be held on the Continent of Europe, and no better place than Stockholm could be found for such a meeting. The city itself is one of the most attractive of all European capitals, and is easily accessible from those sections of the Continent where Baptists are numerically strongest. There are several good steamship lines from American ports to the Scandinavian countries. Then, all in all, the Baptists of Sweden are the strongest group of our denominational kinsmen to be found anywhere in Europe. Although the first church was organized only in 1848, the total membership now is well beyond 60,000, and their work is thoroughly organized. Their consecrated able leaders, such as Broady, Bystrom and Benander, are already well known to many of our people. They were wise in planning and developing a theological seminary, which has trained many able preachers of the gospel. Today there are more than 600 Baptist churches in Sweden, and they are supporting a foreign mission work with more than forty missionaries under appointment. One of the finest groups of Baptists in all the world is found in Sweden.

The meeting at Stockholm should prove a blessing to the work in all sections of Europe. It is to be hoped that many of our Russian brethren, after their long period of isolation, will be able to journey to Stockholm. But the next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance should be world-wide in its representation. Baptist bodies in the Orient and in Africa should feel the thrill of fellowship with the great denominational family. Its thrill should be felt in every direction.

This article is written to call the attention of our own people to the meeting in Stockholm in July, 1923, so that those who entertain thought of a journey to Europe within the next few years will be led to time their visit with a view to attendance upon the next meeting of the Alliance. Let us begin even now to pray for this meeting, and to do our utmost to make it an occasion for the promotion of fellowship and solidarity in our denomination, and for the preparation of Baptists everywhere for larger Kingdom service.

St. Louis Letter

By W. E. DARROW

Monday evening, Jan. 2, was an eventful day for the Grand Avenue Church, of which the writer is pastor. For some time negotiations have been under way for the transfer of the property at 2701 North Grand Avenue from the St. Louis Baptist Mission Board to the church corporation, the church having been self-sustaining for the year previous. On Nov. 25, the transfer was made and a deed of trust for $8,000, to secure denominational money, chiefly from the Second Church, executed. This deed of trust secures a note for the $8,000 and both have meaning only when the church shall cease to function as a Baptist Church, disposes of this property without the consent of the Mission Board, or fails to pay the $1 interest due from year to year, the deed of trust being practically a gift-mortgage. Almost from the beginning of its organization, in 1890, the church has been without ownership of its property, there being a deed of trust to secure money borrowed, this until 1914, and then ownership by the St. Louis Baptist Mission Board as impediment thereto. Naturally the church celebrated. Dr. S. E. Ewing in a very happy manner spoke at the celebration meeting. There were addresses by the representatives of the various departments of the church activity. All present felt that a new chapter of Grand Avenue Church history had been opened with the beginning of the new year. The church was never so prosperous as now, financially and spiritually. It is united and hopeful, ready for the tasks that lie before.

Our Baptist Ministers' Conference starts the new year with a new program committee and a new program. The members of the committee are the writer, Dr. R. B. Whiteside and Rev. W. L. Nash. We had the first meeting of the year on Jan. 2, Brother L. M. Hale leading a discussion on "The New Year: Its Retrospect and Prospect." There was general participation in the discussion. On the first and third Mondays fifteen minutes of the time is given to field reports. On other mornings there will be opportunity for book reviews. On Jan. 9 Bro. G. C. Schwartz of the Tabernacle Church read a paper on "Peter Cartwright: Pioneer, Preacher, Patriot." On Jan. 16 Mr. C. J. Prince will lead a discussion on "Sunday School Efficiency." The last Monday in the month is for the meeting of the Ministerial Alliance, an interdenominational organization. Of our Ministers' Conference, Bro. H. C. Combs of the Compton Heights Church is president; Bro. J. W. McAtee of the King's Highway Church, vice-president and Bro. Oliver Shank of the Fourth Church, secretary-treasurer. The meetings are in the Third Church.

IDAHO

THE EMMETT CHURCH, Rev. A. C. Lathrop, pastor, is rejoicing in a gracious revival. During December, Evangelist Bruce Evans, of Long Beach, Cal., held union meetings with the Methodist, Christian and Baptist churches cooperating. These meetings were the best ever held in Emmett. Our churches were quickened and many led to accept Christ as their personal Saviour. In the Baptist Church the revival spirit still continues. To date fifty-three persons have united with the church, thirty-five being by baptism. At least ten more are booked for baptism, and others are inquiring. We expect the additions will reach between 65 and 75 by Feb. 1.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

THE ANNUAL RALLY of the B. Y. P. U., under direction of Rev. T. H. Hagen, director of religious education, was held in Everett Jan. 2. The president, Mr. C. B. Forland, of Mount Vernon, presided over the afternoon session which was given to roll call of unions by districts, conferences, business, social hour, devotional service and the annual message, which was delivered by Dr. Geo. M. Lehigh, of Olympia. The banquet, partaken of by 500, followed, Dr. J. F. Watson acting as toastmaster. The closing address was given by Dr. A. M. Bailey, of Seattle. Everett B. Y. P. U. proved a royal host.

A LARGE NUMBER of Bremerton members gathered at the supper table which preceded the annual meeting, Dec. 28. Reports were encouraging, seventy-four additions, thirty-four by baptism. Notwithstanding a year of unusual financial depression, many members of the church being affected by reduction of wages, dropping of men and reduced hours of work in the Navy Yard, the treasurer's report showed all current expenses for the year provided for and the church voted to continue the same budget as last year. Rev. W. H. Eaton, pastor, is cheered at the outlook.

Schools of Missions

First Church, Everett, held its third school of missions for seven weeks during October and November with an average attendance of 183. There were eight classes, one each for men, women, young people of senior age, for those of intermediate age, two for juniors and one for primary children. One class for juniors met at 11 o'clock; the others at 6:15. After a five-minute study period the classes assembled for a closing period of fifteen minutes. This was the largest and best school the church has had.

Sixth Avenue Church, Tacoma, held its second annual session of school of missions during October and November. Five groups made up the school: junior, intermediate, younger and older senior, and adult. The sessions were held at the B. Y. P. U. hour on Sunday, taking the place of the regular program during the mission study period. The only extra group was the adult. The textbooks were: adult, "The Kingdom and the Nations"; senior, "The Gospel and the Plow"; senior, "Playing Square with Tomorrow"; intermediate, "A Noble Army"; junior, "Under Many Flags." Several returned missionaries' lectures were able to make the entire evening services strongly missionary in their appeal.

First Church of Seattle will hold a school of missions beginning Jan. 8 with at least four classes. The adult study book will be "The Kingdom and the Nations."

University Church, Seattle, will hold a school of missions beginning early in the year. Definite arrangements have not yet been made. The school will be held under the auspices of the church board of education.

Women's Miracle Ship

The women of Northern California have entered enthusiastically into the Continuation Campaign. A cabinet has been formed, composed of campaign director Mrs. C. E. Tingley; secy-director, Mrs. M. E. Fox; state president, Mrs. John Snape; chairman of special gifts, Mrs. H. S. Johnson; prayer chairman, Mrs. M. W. Thomas; publicity chairman, Mrs. Geo. M. Thomas.

It is the plan of the cabinet to fill a ship, loading it with passengers composed of the women of Northern California, the name of it to be "Miracle Ship," the price of the passage for a three years' cruise $30. The ship will set sail April 30, and the passengers will go with it in spirit to the various mission fields of the world. The ship will also carry dollars and missionaries which will be dropped off at places along the line of travel.

The Orientals clamoring for schools, the children attending day school in Mexico, girls needing scholarships in Santa Ana, will hail with joy the arrival of the ship. News of the results of the trip will appear in THE BAPTIST and Missions periodically.

All Aboard!—at 20 cents a week!—Mrs. GEORGE M. THOMAS, Publicity Chairman.

THE QUARTERLY MEETING of the Penobscot Association met with the church at Brewer on Jan. 10. Moderator J. S. Pendleton presided and also gave a forceful address on stewardship. The devotional meetings were features of the session. Promotion Director Whittemore spoke of the achievements of the New World Movement and the new goals of the year. He also asked for the organization of the association stewardship council. This was heartily voted and Mr. A. F. Anderson, of Bangor, a big-hearted Christian layman, was chosen its head. Two of the Bangor churches are holding special meetings. At the first church, Rev. Benj. C. Bubar, of Blaine, is assisting Pastor Bernauer, and Pastor-Evangelist Perley E. Miller is with Pastor Pendleton at Columbia Street. Both have been heard with great interest. In the evening at the association there was a sermon by Rev. Mr. McKillop, of Levant. The ladies of the Brewer Church served dinner and supper. This church is strongly led by Pastor Brewer. It went over the top in the N. W. M. campaign and every department is flourishing. The Boy Scout troop is considered the best in the county.

THE OLDTOWN CHURCH, under the leadership of Pastor Schurman, is not only greatly improving its edifice but is making new records in congregations, Sunday-school attendance, church support and benevolences.

DURING THE YEAR, thirty-four new members have been received, most of them by baptism, into Freeport Church, Rev. Clarence M. Fogg, pastor. The Sunday school has reached its record, the teachers' training class, which meets after prayer meeting, increasing the value of its work from an educational standpoint. Early in the season social plans were made and a social calendar printed. These events have been well and profitably attended. General business depression is not allowed to interfere with support of the church or missionary contributions.

A BROTHERHOOD has been established at Main Street Church, Saco, by the efforts of the pastor, Rev. Harold W. Curtis, and men of the church. Monthly meetings are held on a week night with an inspirational address by a speaker brought in for the occasion, followed by a social hour and light refreshments. Three such meetings have been held with interest and attendance good. A constitution has been adopted, officers and committees chosen. The speakers have been exceedingly helpful and it is expected that the organization will prove a growing factor in the work of the church. The December speaker, a clergyman who spent nearly a year at the front as chaplain with the A. E. F. and eight months with the Army of Occupation in Germany, spoke on "The Army of the Occupation and Its Lessons for American Citizenship."

Things a Pastor Should Know

First Church, Sanford, found a unique way Christmas to show appreciation of its pastor, Rev. Irad B. Hardy. At the close of the Sunday evening cantata he was presented with an original book, a deluxe edition of only one copy, written, compiled, typed and edited by members and friends of the church. The book is bound in handsome seal leather, the title inscribed in gilt, "Things a Pastor Should Know." It contains many pithy, original and complimentary paragraphs, each contributing to the purpose of the volume—to let the pastor know of the esteem in which he is held in the church and the community. Appreciative articles were contributed by representatives of the merchants, banks and schools of the town. A typical item says: "The Baptist church is doing much for righteousness in Sanford. It has a broad, practical program that has a strong appeal to those without as well as to those within the church. Mr. Hardy is a man's man, devoid of artificial grace and manner, full of vigor and alive to the vital problems that affect every one of us. He is a man we like to meet in our business and on the street. The wholesome thoughts he expresses in sermon and address are always helpful."

One page of the book is entitled: Bird's-eye View of the Baptist Church. Sermons by the pastor—strong, able and inspiring; congregations—large and appreciative; Sunday school—growing steadily in numbers and enthusiasm; women's organizations—alive and rendering splendid service; church giving—generously to relief work in Far East; Boy Scouts—one of the most inspiring organizations in the church, with the pastor as scoutmaster; statement of treasurer—church subscribing 50 per cent more toward current expenses than five years ago and approximately twelve times as much for missionary and benevolent work. The volume is dedicated to "Our Pastor, Irad B. Hardy, as a token of the love and esteem of his people."

The idea of the book originated with Evangelist J. W. Hatch, and the presentation was made by Mrs. Hatch, and Mr. E. D. Folsom, one of Sanford's popular business men. The last pages of the book bore checks amounting to $200.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the State Convention held its regular meeting Jan. 4, with all members present. Secy. D. S. Jenks read his quarterly report and several items of business were attended to, among which was an arrangement for the enlargement of the missionary work at Goshen and vicinity under the supervision of Rev. J. W. Rafter, pastor of Newport Church. The same day a meeting of the State Board of Promotion was held. One important item of business attended to was action taken calling for the week beginning Jan. 22 as Pay Up Week in New Hampshire for pledges to New World Movement.

THE FOLLOWING CHURCHES have voted to make the Convention trustee for their funds: Chocorua, Gilmanton Iron Works, New Ipswich, Newmarket. New Ipswich will also give the convention the reverent right in its property.

DEERFIELD CHURCH, after being closed for ten years, opened its doors last June, having called Rev. Christina MacKenzie as pastor. The attendance has been most gratifying, with conversions and baptisms.

REV. F. S. BOODY, for nine years past at Wakefield, has accepted a unanimous call to Franklin Church and will begin his work February 1.

The stereopticon lecture, "In the Foreign Field with the New World Movement," is being given in the churches. Arrangements for this lecture can be made at the office of the State Convention.

MASSACHUSETTS

DUDLEY STREET CHURCH, Boston, closed one of the greatest years in its history. More money has been raised (almost $50,000) and paid into the treasury, for local and missionary purposes, than in any other year in its century of service. Great crowds have thronged the evening services. 140 members have been received into the church. The building has been renovated, its capacity enlarged and a new organ, electrically equipped throughout, with the latest stops and combinations and cathedral chimes, installed and dedicated. It is fully paid for and is said to be one of the finest organs in Boston. Memorial windows were unveiled in memory of George S. Child, a prominent Boston business man, for many years a member of the church; and Chester R. Lawrence, formerly superintendent of the Sunday school, and an earnest church worker. The Sunday school now numbers over 900. New England Baptists are rejoicing over this re-awakening in old Dudley Street. Rev. Arthur T. Brooks in his year of service as pastor has preached ninety sermons, made forty outside addresses, held over 1,400 office conferences, made between 800 and 900 pastoral calls, given over 100 prayer meetings and Bible school talks, beside caring for funerals and weddings. Between 1,500 and 1,600 members are now registered on the church roll.

REV. GUY G. BLEAKNEY'S RESIGNATION from the pastorate of Braintree Church releases a minister of unusual initiative and competency. His five-year service at Braintree is a story of constant enlargement.

THE UNUSUAL SUCCESS of the recent school of missions at First Church, Medford, points to the value of such effort and the readiness of our workers to welcome them. 135 were enrolled. The teaching staff was made up of Pastors D. J. Neily, Frank W. Swaffield of West Somerville, Rev. Wm. Reid, state promoter, and Mrs. Gertrude H. Millet, of Medford.

FIRST CHURCH, MEDFORD, closed an unusually prosperous year. Pastor Denton J. Neily is leading a strong and cooperating church. Accessions in 1921 were 109.

Evangelistic services for January, conducted by Rev. York A. King, are planned.

REV. THOMAS S. ROY of London, Canada, accepts the call to First Church, Brocton, and begins his service Feb. 1. The people have happy anticipations, and will give the new pastor a great welcome.

CONNECTICUT

NEW YEAR'S DAY MARKED the beginning of the thirteenth year of Rev. Edgar R. Hyde's pastorate in First Church of Middletown, the longest in the history of the church, which covers a period of 120 years. Mr. Hyde is also dean of Baptist pastors in the state. The occasion was one of special services with rededication of the remodeled church auditorium. The work consisted of removing the side galleries in the auditorium, installation of an electric lighting system for the whole building, laying of a cork carpet in the auditorium, placing of new cushions in the pews and new hymnals in the racks and decorating the whole interior. At the morning service the pastor was assisted by Prof. Binney Gunnison of Wesleyan University, a deacon of the church, and Rev. A. B. Coats, secretary of Connecticut Convention, who preached the sermon, following which the Lord's Supper was administered, and new members welcomed. In the evening the two Congregational and the Methodist churches united with First in a union service.

REV. H. J. WHITE, First Church, Hartford, baptized three candidates on Christmas morning.

NEW YORK

MRS. ELIZA A. BRIGHAM, widow of the late Rev. George H. Brigham, passed away at Cortland on Jan. 2 at the age of ninety-four years. Mrs. Brigham was a native of Wyoming, N. Y., the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson Perry. She was united in marriage at Wyoming on Aug. 26, 1853, to the Rev. George H. Brigham. After pastorates in Homer, Groton, and some other places for a period of twenty-three years his work was confined largely to the interests of the Foreign Missionary Society. Mrs. Brigham was a faithful member of First Church of Cortland and always manifested a profound interest in all its activities.

Religious Education

At least thirty-seven towns and cities in the state are doing work in week day religious education on school time. Rev. A. H. McKnight, Potsdam, writes: "We are organized in accordance with Dy Young's Four Points. Two grades from the public school are dismissed at a time. The schedule is so arranged that a child misses only one hour in thirty of a given school subject. It is part of the school system. After parents have once signed, indicating the church of their choice, the children are compelled to attend. Absence or tardiness is cared for by the public school authorities. Our teachers, courses of study and work in training all have to be approved by the superintendent of public schools. Our work comes the same day each week, and groups of two grades each follow on consecutive hours. Attendance runs 99 per cent of enrollment. Results have been: several new families discovered, church and Sunday school better attended, and children and community holding the church in a new regard. With us it has largely made possible the junior church. Best of all, instead of a single hour a week as before, our children are now receiving four hours of religious instruction per week. The cost of the school is less than 25 cents per pupil."

At Geneva, where Pastor Havaard Griffith took the lead in organizing the community and promoting week day religious instruction on public school time, more than a thousand of the 1,500 school children are being regularly taught religion on week days in their churches.

At Phelps, Liberty and Afton the pastors go together to the public school and take over the school for one or more hours per week, teaching the Bible to all the children one or more hours per week. The Catholic priest gathers his flock into one department room by themselves, the other pastors taking one or more grades each. Where the community votes for this it is not ignoring the principle of separation of church and state, and it has the distinct advantage of bringing Bible instruction to every child in the community.—CHAS. W. BRIGGS.

NORTH DAKOTA

DURING THE NEW YEAR forty-six were baptized, thirteen received by letter and four by experience in Chelsea Church, Atlantic City. Rev. Thos. J. Cross, pastor. Present membership is 304. The building fund treasurer received from all sources $4,100. Total moneys passing through various treasuries amount to $12,250.

FIRST CHURCH, BAYONNE, C. H. Rannels, pastor, entered the year with work at high-water mark. At the Watch-Meeting the key verse selected for the year was Matt. 5:16. At the first prayer meeting of the year it was decided that personal work in soul winning should be the principal objective for 1922. The first Sunday in January was marked by congregations that filled the house. The choir repeated its Christmas music and the hand of fellowship was given to one.

DELAWARE

THE FIRST SUNDAY OF THE YEAR closed with an impressive revival demonstration at Bethany Church, Wilmington. Two young men made declaration of faith in Christ and others accepted the Saviour. At the last two communions young men have been received into the church, while others show a deep interest. Recently Dr. C. C. Earle, pastor, held a special Bible-school church day which brought the entire school into the morning worship. One of the large classes attends church the first Sunday of the month and remains for communion.

PENNSYLVANIA

MRS. ELIZABETH M. FINN, assistant director of church vacation schools and week-day religious education for the publication society, has been secured by the education board to conduct intensive training schools of religious education in strategic centers where churches are willing to cooperate. Mrs. Finn is available for this service only until May 1, 1922.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

FIRST CHURCH, NORRISTOWN, is making steady progress under the leadership of Rev. Will H. Houghton. Christmas morning thirty-three persons were baptized, sixteen being young men. A similar class for business girls is held each Friday.

REV. J. P. CURRIN, pastor of Central Church, Steelton, baptized thirty-three persons in the eight days from Christmas through New Year's day.

DAVISVILLE CHURCH, Southampton, has extended a call to Rev. Geo. W. Tupper, of Ambler.

REV. RAYMOND J. CORNISH was ordained in Berean Church, Carbondale, Dec. 29, examination occurring the previous afternoon.

IMMANUEL CHURCH, Scranton, Pa., Rev. Charles H. Rust, minister, reports membership of 1,143, 76 members received last year; 250 in three years; $15,700 raised for current expenses in 1921 and $12,700 the New World Movement. The church has an active educational board and under its leadership the Sunday school is departmentally organized and progressing finely. Largest congregations are Sunday evenings. Three months of stewardship, missionary education and evangelism from Jan. 1 to April 16.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE ANNUAL MEETING, JAN. 9, showed that Meadville Church has had a good year. Membership is 657; $12,000 was contributed, over $5,000 of this being for the New World Movement. The number at the January communion exceeded 300. The Christmas pageant had to be repeated, and even then the crowd could not be accommodated. The pastor's book, "Words of the Faith," has been very well received.

INDIANA

MONDAY EVENING, JAN. 2, First Church Indianapolis, met to tender Dr. and Mrs. F. E. Taylor a reception given under the auspices of the Ladies' Social Circle. A large number gathered to wish the pastor and his wife a happy New Year, pledging their help to make this, the sixteenth year of Dr. Taylor's pastorate, the greatest in its history. The rooms were beautifully decorated, music was rendered by the Sunday-school orchestra and W. W. G. girls assisted in serving refreshments.

KANSAS

CHILES CHURCH has closed a two-weeks' revival conducted by Rev. J. E. Woods, of Alta Vista, with V. Chester Guthrie, of Manhattan, as singer. In the year and a half pastorate of W. Harley Smith at this church twenty-nine have been received into the church.

REV. W. E. DEDERICK has changed from Frederick to Cedar Vale, beginning his new work Nov. 13. Since that time eighty-four members have been received into the church, fifty-one by baptism. A new church building, to be started early in spring, is being planned. Contributions toward this would be gladly received.

DURING NOVEMBER, FIRST CHURCH, Atchison, held the greatest evangelistic campaign in its history. The crowds were large from the start and grew steadily. On several occasions the building was too small to hold them. Dr. W. O. Shank, pastor, was his own evangelist and his preaching was one of the big elements in making the meetings such a success. Other large factors were the great popularity of Dr. Shank among his own people and throughout the city; the splendid work of the special chorus choir, and the hearty, enthusiastic cooperation of the church members. The meetings resulted in great spiritual uplift in the life of the church and a large number of accessions.

REV. ROBT. J. CHURCH has gone from Arkansas City to Girard, where he began work with Kincaid Memorial Church Jan. 15.

NORTH DAKOTA

REV. JOHN S. NORDELL recently visited his former pastorate at Kenmare. He reports eight meetings at Kenmare, three at Nobe, and one at Norma with good crowds and interest. Rev. Nordell and family are on their way for a visit to Sweden.

THANKSGIVING DAY the ladies of Lone-tree Church served a free dinner in the church. Miss Emma Anderson gave an address in the afternoon.

PASTOR B. H. THORLAKSON and Rev. C. J. Hill assisted Prophet Mountain Church in a series of revival meetings. A Sunday school was organized at the consolidated school house, seven miles northwest of Prophet Mountain.

DIRECTOR E. WISLE recently visited the Jamestown field and brings encouraging reports of the work under the direction of Pastor W. E. Sharp.

FEARING SEVERE WINTER WEATHER a number of the German churches have begun revival meetings earlier than usual. Rev. S. Fuxa held well attended meetings at Tabor, a preaching station of the church at Rosenfield. Rev. E. Broeckel conducted evangelistic meetings in Underwood, a number of conversions are reported. Brother Broeckel took charge of the church in Washburn Oct. 1, after a successful pastorate in Goodrich. Rev. F. Dobrovolney of Ashley, assisted by Rev. C. Balough of Chancellor, S. D., held a busy campaign in his field. Rev. Balough takes charge of the church in Hebron in January. The church at Napoleon has bought and remodeled a church building of another denomination.

SOUTH DAKOTA

FIRST CHURCH, LEAD, rededicated its enlarged house of worship Oct. 23, and now has one of the finest workshops for Sunday school in the Black Hills. Cost was $2,800, fully provided for. A banquet was held the evening preceding the dedication. Sunday, Dr. S. P. Shaw, superintendent of Baptist state missions, delivered the morning sermon; Rev. W. H. Bayler, state director of religious education, and Miss Elsie Kappen, under direction of board of promotion, had charge of the afternoon services; Rev. L. L. Mann preached the evening rededication sermon. Christmas night the Cornish carol singers, a score of male voices, sang to a capacity house. On New Year's eve annual roll call and election of officers drew a crowded house. The annual luncheon was served at 9:30 o'clock, after which a program arranged by the pastor was given. This is one of the largest pastorates in the Black Hills. During the five years of the Rev. J. Maurice Hupp's pastorate he has witnessed eighteen changes in the city pastorates. The work in the mining district is not an easy one, but during the past years there has been a decided growth.

DR. S. P. SHAW, general superintendent of Baptist work in the state, who is recuperating at Mound Park Sanitarium, St. Paul, came to Sioux Falls to officiate at the marriage of his son Lowell Shaw to Miss Sandberg. He returned at once to St. Paul to undergo a nose and throat operation. As soon as he recovers sufficiently he will go to Florida for the remainder of the winter.

MICHIGAN

SCOTTEN AVENUE CHURCH, Detroit, recently held two weeks of successful evangelistic meetings. At the Watch Night Service three young men were baptized as the old year was dying. Baptismal services are scheduled for every Sunday in January.

THANKSGIVING WEEK. BATTLE CREEK CHURCH celebrated its fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of its house of worship, with services every night, including the two Sundays. Former pastors, B. Frank Tabor, of Washington, Pa., and John W. Crouch, of Lagrange, Mo., were present, contributing much to the occasion. Tuesday night nearly 500 members and friends sat down to a fellowship supper served by the women's union. Wednesday, pioneer night, all living members who were present at the dedication contributed something to the occasion. Pictures of pioneer families thrown on the screen recalled happy memories. The beautiful pageant, "Bearers of Light," under the direction of Miss Mary Curtis, was presented Thursday night. In this was told the story of the church from the beginning. Friday, educational night, the program was presented under the direction of Mr. W. W. Hamilton, Sunday school superintendent for twenty-five years. Mrs. Sarah Robinson told of the Sunday school seventy-five years ago. Dr. Frank B. Bachelor of Kalamazoo college closed with a lecture on Christian education. The following Sunday was one of dedication in which many volunteered to give their life in service to Jesus Christ. The thank offering collection will purchase a carpet for the auditorium.

SIXTEEN HAVE BEEN RECEIVED into First Church, Lapeer, recently. Prayer meetings are well attended and therein is breathed forth an earnest desire for souls and spiritual blessings. Christmas night an impressive program was given by the Sunday school and the men of the church showed their appreciation of the pastor, E. T. Potter, by giving him a Morris chair. The church took its part in helping fill the Fellowship Ship; the Sunday school made a generous cash offering to the Near East Relief as their Christmas gift. A ten-days' meeting was held in the fall with Rev. C. R. Osborn, of Coldwater, assisting and in cooperation with Flint River Association's campaign of evangelism.

IOWA

ON CHRISTMAS EVE the SUNDAY school of Ames Church gave the Cantata "Santa Claus," with seventy participating, led by the pastor, Rev. R. B. Davidson. After the entertainment well-filled baskets were carried to four needy homes and an offering was taken for children of the Christian Centers of our country and Europe. A sermon on "The First Christmas" was preached Christmas morning; in the evening the chorus choir sang "The Hope of the World" by Schnecker. The services of the day closed with a dramatization of the "Birth of Christ," under the leadership of Mrs. F. H. McClain, wife of one of the college professors. Mrs. McClain came to Ames last fall from three years' experience in social service work in Gary, Ind., and has been asked to become executive secretary of the city's Social Service League.

FIRST CHURCH OF ATLANTIC held its annual business meeting Dec. 27. A banquet served at 6:30 p. m., at which a majority of the membership was represented, was followed by the business session with satisfactory reports from the various departments of the church, showing growth and development. An efficient corps of officers was elected for the ensuing year. Rev. Ferguson is just entering upon the work here. New avenues of labor are opening.

FRIENDS OF MRS. O. C. KIRKHAM, widow of Rev. O. C. Kirkham, who was pastor at Tiskilwa, Ill., at the time of his death, may be interested to know that she passed to her reward Dec. 17, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. James Leslie of Clinton, where she had been ill since June. The body was taken to Tiskilwa and buried beside those of her husband and daughter.

FUNERAL AND MEMORIAL SERVICES for Lieut. Laurens C. Shull were held at First Church, Sioux City, Dec. 11. Lieut. Shull was a graduate of Sioux City high school in 1912, of University of Chicago in 1916. He died Aug. 5, 1918, in France of wounds received in action in the service of his country.

ILLINOIS

AN ALL-DAY CONFERENCE on evangelism was held at Second Church, Chicago, December 12. Over fifty pastors sat down to a dinner served by the ladies. Dr. J. J. Ross spoke on "The Holy Spirit in Soul Winning"; Dr. Geo. R. Stair on "Special Meetings"; Dr. P. J. Stackhouse on "The Pastor's Convert Class"; Rev. Albert Gage, "A Decision Day in the Sunday School"; Dr. A. G. McClashan, "Adjusting the Church to New Converts." A discussion followed each subject after which a season of prayer was held.

CENTRAL CHILDREN'S HOME, Maywood, Donald H. MacGillivray, superintendent, was generously remembered at Christmas, all the children receiving personal gifts, candy and toys. Sunday schools and churches sent donations of eatables too numerous to mention. The Tabernacle and Austin people furnished chickens for the Christmas dinner. Irving Park people took the children by auto to Oak Park for a treat. Berwyn Sunday school invited them to share in their Christmas entertainment by giving the pageant rendered at the annual meeting of the home. Besides the annual gift of flour and cash, a special offering of canned goods was made at the entertainment. A number of cash offerings from Sunday schools and individuals were received. There are seventy-seven children in the home and all are well. Thankfulness is expressed toward all who contributed to the welfare and the joy of the children during the Christmas season. All correspondence and special offerings should be directed to the superintendent of the home, 504 South First Ave., Maywood.

JANUARY 1 ended the second calendar year of the pastorate of Rev. T. Elmer Jones at First Church, Barry. During this period the membership has increased from 186 to 235; the Sunday-school enrollment from 205 to 220, while the average attendance of the two schools has risen from 75 to 125. The young people's society is doing good work with Mr. Julien Strubinger as president. Miss Lottie Hubbard is the efficient Sunday-school superintendent.

A FIVE-DAY BIBLE CONFERENCE was conducted by Rev. Charles H. Gray, pastor First Church, Canton, Ill., at First Church of White Hall, Dec. 12-16. It is doubtful if in the history of the church the White Hall people have before heard so much gospel truth in one week's time. Those who enjoyed this spiritual feast have a new appreciation of the wealth of truth the Book contains, and its power in human life. Churches that appreciate the teaching of the great Christian fundamentals, and who are unable to have the leaders of the world-wide movement to teach them, would do well to secure the services of such a man as Mr. Gray.

OLNEY CHURCH had a serious loss through the burning of its parsonage. The pastor's library, as well as many personal effects, was seriously damaged. The church is now holding a series of special meetings.

Chicago Women Meet

THE JANUARY MEETING of the Woman's Mission Union was held at the new North Shore Church. The building was filled to its seating capacity. Eight hundred delegates from women's circles were served to a dainty luncheon. The keynote of the program was the Continuation Campaign for the $100,000,000 fund. Dr. Frederick F. Shannon, of Central Church, gave an inspirational talk in the morning on the missionary incentive: "Love one another as I have loved you." In the afternoon Mrs. Robert Hilton spoke on the present task of the central district, and Mrs. Topping on the Illinois association's big job of raising $170,000 in three months. Mrs. Andrew MacLeish, president of the Woman's American Foreign Mission Society, was the principal speaker. She presented the thought that unity and harmony would better fit the women for the great task before them. Following the meeting a reception was given Mrs. MacLeish by the women of the North Shore Church.—MRS. CARL D. CASE.

OHIO

CHRISTMAS SUNDAY was a great day at Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, when Dr. Bustard baptized nearly fifty at the morning service and received 100 members at the Christmas reception. This makes the greatest year in the number of people received in the history of the church, nearly 400 having united during 1921. The Bible school has also broken all records, having reached the highest mark in attendance and is now on its way to an average of 1,000 present every Sunday. The crowds have been so large at Sunday services that recently Dr. Bustard has taken his evening meeting to the Masonic Temple, which seats 3,000 people, and from which as many as 1,500 were turned away. This spring Dr. Bustard will begin his fourteenth year as pastor.

JAN. 1, FIRST CHURCH of Cambridge extended a unanimous call to Rev. Alonzo R. Stark of Glenville Church, Cleveland, and was pleased to receive his acceptance the following week. Rev. J. Hector Palmer, former pastor, was taken away by death Nov. 6. Dr. Stark has been pastor in Cleveland for ten years.

FIRST CHURCH of Mr. VERNON, Rev. I. J. Clelland, pastor, had the services of Dr. J. I. A. Henry, Rev. Fredk. H. Baker, of Titusville, and Mr. McKeever, soloist, of Pavilion, N. Y., in a recent evangelistic campaign. The results were gratifying, about fifty coming forward, the majority from the Bible school. The entire church and community felt the soul stirring influence of the meetings.

REV. ALBERT READ, of Xenia, has accepted the pastorate at Van Wert, where he begins his work Jan. 22.

"It Is to Laugh"

Two laborers were trying to place a stone in position on the foundation wall of a new building. A crowd was standing around looking on, and each one offered his criticism and counsel freely and loudly, but did not so much as lift a finger to help.

"That reminds me of our church work," said a passerby to his companion.

"Why?"
"Because," was the reply, "two men are doing the work and twenty are doing the talking."—The Lutheran.

"Yes, there's a church near," said the country farmer to his paying guest, "not that I ever puts my face inside of it."

"Anything the matter with the vicar," asked the guest.

"Well, it's this way; I sold the old vicar milk and eggs and butter and cheese, and seeing as he patronized me I patronized 'im. But this new chap keeps 'is own cow and 'ens. If that's your game, thought I, we'll 'ave 'ome grown religion too."—Central Christian Advocate.

fellowship together. Can it then put arms in their hands and cry, "Slay one another?" The church has not yet perceived the full anomaly of her present position, but the multitude of telegrams from churches pouring in to the Washington Conference show that the church's conscience is beginning to be troubled. When that conscience awakes it will see that the church must, for her life, take an out-and-out stand against all armament and war. The church will be late in joining the procession, but when she does come she will join in strong.

same is true of teachers. Many of the teachers are just primary-school pupils. You say, "Why not give them more training, for they cannot teach with such little knowledge?" Well, we must sacrifice the first ones to carry on the most urgent work while we try to train another group for higher and more efficient work.

8. Besides the needs which are indicated in No. 2, we have a great need for buildings adequate and suited to our needs. The greater part of our churches and schools function in rented halls which resemble the old-time country store of the states. There is insufficient light, air and space, and the price of rent is terrible. We buy the buildings many times in the course of a few years and yet do not own them. We are taking care of the building problem better now through an organization for that purpose. This organization loans money on easy terms to the more needy places and requires them to build certain types of buildings. That will be a great aid to us for some time to come. But the progress is exceedingly slow.

About this six-million dollar campaign. When they took up the offering I sneaked in one cent, And Irma, with loving and beaming intent, Pointed out with the joy of a radiant fairy:

"Look! mamma has paid for a missionary!"

With gasps of delight the ladies turned toward me,

(There wasn't one of them who ignored me!)

"God answered our prayers!" they exclaimed with a cheer,

"We had faith we'd receive that twelve hundred a year!"

I sat as if I had turned to stone, For I'd never been generous with what I own—

But surely you see that I couldn't expose My miserable gift to such women as those! So my husband and I did some figuring that night

And decided twelve hundred would be all right.

Indeed we're so happy we now think it's as well

That Irma's too young to have learned how to spell!

HINTS FOR THE CHOIR

One of the common mistakes of inexperienced players and singers is to rush from one verse into the next one without making a sufficient pause between them. We all know that the first and the last measures in a given piece are supposed to fit together perfectly, so that if the piece is in four-fourths time and the last measure has three-quarter notes or its equivalent, then the first measure will have the other missing quarter. But that is far from being a hint that one verse should be joined to the next one at that speed. Whenever it is done, the effect is bad, and is suggestive of the nervousness of singer or player. Just how long a pause should be between verses is largely a matter of taste. Generally speaking, one might allow about the value of a full measure of time to elapse before beginning the next verse.

It is a great advantage if a choir has at least one leading voice in each part. To assure that some churches engage a paid quartet and build the choir around it. The main duty, however, of a leading voice is not so much to lead as to inspire confidence in the other voices. As soon as the element of leading becomes prominent, the effect is bad. In ideal choir singing no particular voice stands out, but the choir sings as a unit. Let none dragglingly wait for the leadership of any voice, nor assume the functions of leadership which properly belongs only to the director.

Always use the same seat. This is one of the little things that go to make singing in the choir just a bit easier. For if every singer is always in the same seat, then you always have the same singer next to you, and one gets so used to singing next to certain persons that a sudden change is always more or less disturbing. Then one also is always in the same position relative to the source of light, to the organ, and to the director, and all these little things tend to put one at ease, which is an important element in good choir work. Don't change seats if you can help it.

—The Choir Leader.

MUSIC REVIEW

From the A. P. Schmidt Co., Boston, Mass.

Hope thou in God ..... Nevin ($50)
Aspiration ..... Cox ($50)

Two interesting songs by two composers of reputation. The first is a good sacred song, with a finely conceived melody and supporting accompaniment. The text is Scriptural, and the declamation is well-handled—not very often the case where the text is a prose one. Mr. Nevin knows and appreciates the practical needs and limitations of the average choir, organist and instrument; and he is sagacious never to let his creative enthusiasm run away with his good judgment. This song is a case in point; it is a sample of the maximum in results with the minimum of requirements. The song is issued in two keys—high and low. The Cox song is a serious song, not definitely "sacred" as to text, but of ethical import sufficient to allow its use in church if the sermon-subject warrants. Built on the text-statement "To build is joy," it well expresses the urge of its subject-matter. It is singable to a high degree, will please both the singer and the listener. While making more technical demands than the Nevin number, it still stays comfortably well this side of any considerable degree of difficulty. It is published in two keys also.

From the Lorenz Co., Dayton, O.

The Choir Leader for January.

Again this valuable and interesting monthly choir magazine appears on the desk. As always it contains practical, effective choral selections well-adapted to the uses intended, together with some pithy, pointed editorial comment and suggestions for the improvement of church music, as well as some well-written articles having to do with salient points in the problems of the choir director and organist. This issue contains anthems by Wilson, Heyser, Williams, Wildermere, and Ashford, of varying moods and styles, but all equally adjusted to the needs of the average church choir. The set articles include a consideration of "The Song-Service" by von Berge; "Phrasing in Popular Hymns" by Mansfield; "The Pastor's Viewpoint" by the Rev. Henry B. Hudson, and an article by Wm. Zerff on "Commonsense applied to singing." Truly, a goodly feast; the modest price put upon the volume makes it a fine bargain for the choir using such material.

From The White-Smith Music Co., 40-44 Winchester Street, Boston, Mass.

The Lord Rewarded Me ..... Coerne ($10)
By the Pool of Pirene ..... Stoughton ($60)

The first title above specifies a finely conceived and well-worked-out choral number by a composer of quality. Devotional in mood, of the "hymn-anthem" genre, possessing unusual melodic appeal, this anthem should win a wide hearing for the sincerity of the message put forth, and the simplicity of its statement. The text is Scriptural. The organ number is from a set of pieces issued as "Tanglewood Tales." Mr. Stoughton has developed a mania for "oriental" coloring and modes that seems to be settling down into an obsession. No doubt the field is financially profitable; but one wonders if there will not soon be a surplus of eastern program music upon our market. Mr. Stoughton has too much ability to justify his crystallization into such a localized type. A restless search for strange ways in which to put down thoughts can never balance up weakness of the ideas themselves. A conscious search for unusual harmonies and peculiar colors is too often prone to obscure the importance and necessity of supplying ample thematic material. We too often get more clothes than man—and then, when the clothes get shabby . . . ! The number under consideration at this time, is no better and no worse than much of Mr. Stoughton's recent output. It cannot come up to the Fairyland Suite put out a couple of seasons ago by Ditson, and it lacks the freedom of the earlier oriental cycles for organ, in the catalogue of the White-Smith people. The greatest usefulness of such music as this is in the movie-houses, and as occasional spice for recital programs. Such material has little place in church service use, for its very peculiarities would prove too disturbing and outre for the preservation of a reverential mood.

NOW that political diplomacy has done its best at the Washington Conference, what our world most needs is an untrammelled discussion of its acute and sensitive problems from the Christian point of view. The ideals of democracy wait for realization upon the Christianizing of public opinion. It is dawning gradually upon our best minds that the discussion of religion must be extended beyond the present esoteric circles of specialists into the open forum of public opinion, where favors are neither asked nor given. The vital issues of the social order, of industry, of internationalism; the problems arising out of the modern view of the world, with its doctrine of evolution, its higher criticism, its pragmatic philosophy, its changed thought of God; the problems of the church institution: whether, for instance, our denominationalism is a providence or an impertinence—all these issues must be talked about in open court, where their discussion will directly mould and guide and vitalize public opinion.

The Christian Century is distinguished by its candid discussion of living issues in the light of the mind of Christ

Fresh from the Field

Dr. William Axling is at Gothenburg, Neb., spending a few weeks with his aged parents. Then, after meeting some appointments on the Pacific Coast, he, with Mrs. Axling, will sail from San Francisco for Japan on the "China Mail" on Feb. 21.

The stone and steel for the National Baptist Memorial, in Washington, D. C., are now being prepared and the work is under way for actual construction, which, it is expected, will be rapid. As Mr. Lloyd George is not coming to this country, the corner-stone laying, which might have been placed earlier on his account, is now expected to take place in the early spring, with Mr. Chas. E. Hughes, secretary of state, as the speaker.

On Jan. 15, Dr. Thomas J. Villers resigned as pastor of the First Church, Detroit, to accept an urgent and unanimous call to "The White Temple," Portland, Oregon. He will begin work there on March 1. Since the beginning of his pastorate in Detroit, June 1, 1913, 1,455 new members have been added to the church—564 by baptism, 756 by letter, 123 by experience, and twelve by restoration. The current expense budget the first year was $12,925; for the year 1920-1921 it was $23,269. The benevolences then amounted to $6,591; for 1920-1921 they were $42,360, an increase of more than 600 per cent. Within these nine years $157,910 were raised for current expenses; $179,362 for benevolences; $34,693 were raised from other sources, making a total of $371,965.

The Metropolitan Board of Promotion, cooperating with the two city societies of New York and Brooklyn, has secured, as promotion director, Rev. Edward C. Kunkle, formerly pastor of the First Church, of West Chester, Pa., and for several years closely related to the promotional work of the State of Pennsylvania. Mr. Kunkle succeeds Rev. F. King Singiser, who resigned, as of May 1st, to become pastor in Troy. Rev. Charles H. Sears still retains the relationship of director of the Metropolitan Board, but Mr. Kunkle will be immediately in charge of all promotion work in the Metropolitan New York area.

The small audiences which gather in our churches have been taken as an index of the religious interest of the people. The Christian Century tells of a man who recently went out to investigate lodges and found them tenfold worse in this respect than the church. One lodge with 700 members had thirty-five present. Another with 500 members claimed an average of thirty. The American Legion of this town with 1,100 members had an average attendance of sixty men, while his church of 1,200 members had 445 in the morning service and 206 in the evening service. The much-berated prayer meeting had a much higher average than any of the lodges visited.

The Northern Baptist Theological Seminary reports a registration of 100 students for the present school year. Quite a number of other students have reported that they will be present on or before Jan. 24 when the second half of the year opens. This is the largest registration that has been reported in any year of the history of the seminary. During 1920-1921, eighty-six students registered, which was the best enrollment up to that time. This school was organized in 1913 and held its first classes in that year.

A total of 388 students, the largest class in the history of extension courses at Brown University, is enrolled in the community school of religious education. Dr. M. E. Bratcher has been appointed lecturer in Biblical Literature, and is conducting weekly classes. He is associate pastor of the Calvary Church of Providence. The school is now in charge of an advisory council of nine members, six appointed by the Rhode Island Sunday School Association, and three by Brown University.

The Harlem Church, so long and honorably served by Rev. Adam Chambers, through the aid of the New York City Mission Society, has secured Rev. Frank W. Lorimer as pastor. Mr. Lorimer is a native of Maine, his father being one of the leading Baptist pastors of that state. He has been trained at Yale University, Newton Seminary, Chicago University and Union Seminary. He has had overseas experience, both in the ranks of the United States Army and as a Y. M. C. A. worker and settlement house experience in Chicago and New York and pastoral experience in Maine. He, therefore, comes well equipped for the difficult work of administering a center of Christian work in a congested district of the city.

The Council called on Dec. 28 by the Carroll Church, N. H., to consider the ordination of Miss L. B. Treadwell, convened with that church and not with the Manchester Church, as stated in the issue of Jan. 14.

At the meeting of the board of trustees of McMinnville College on Jan. 10, Mrs. F. E. R. Linfield gave deeds and securities, all income bearing, to the president and board of trustees of the college amounting to over a quarter of a million dollars in value on the one condition that the name of the college be changed from McMinnville to Linfield in honor of her deceased husband. The board voted unanimously and heartily to accept the gift and to take immediate legal steps to comply with the conditions. It is a great boom to our Baptist educational work in the Pacific Northwest and the presentation of this gift practically assures the securing of the additional $200,000 offered the college by the General Educational Board on condition that the college secure $400,000 additional endowment funds. Mrs. Linfield is a member of Grace Church of Spokane and also a member of the board of directors of the East Washington-North Idaho Convention.

A recent message from Dr. John Y. Aitchison, who has been attending a number of western conferences, reports that Southern California has determined to meet its share of funds in the New World Movement Campaign. "The Southern California Convention after full consideration of the financial crisis, voted heartily and unanimously approving the New World Movement," Dr. Aitchison states. "Southern California is pledging its renewed support to the New World Movement. The convention delegates numbering nearly 500 express their determination to meet their share of the funds needed, in order to prevent retrenchment in Northern Baptist work. The meeting here was a great spiritual victory."

Chapel Car "Glad Tidings," Rev. and Mrs. F. I. Blanchard in charge, has been dispatched from Nebraska to Wyoming. At Loup City, one of the last stopping places in Nebraska, three young ladies were converted and immediately began to prepare for missionary work. Twenty-three persons became "Comrades of the Quiet Hour," pledging to make it the rule of their lives to take at least fifteen minutes a day for quiet communion with God. Nebraska wanted to keep the car longer, but Wyoming had been promised its aid some time ago. Wheatland was the first appointment. "During my last six weeks in Nebraska," writes Mr. Blanchard, "I had the privilege of having on my list six, and possibly seven, who intend to prepare for the ministry and missionary work. Three of them have already started for college and three intend to start next fall. Three of them

By Their Fruits

In discussion of the affairs of a certain church we reminded a good woman that the Bible says, "By their fruits ye shall know them." "Yes," was the quick reply, "but their fruits are mostly lemons." Many a truth is spoken in jest. We all believe in growing citrus fruits but we are opposed to growing them in the churches. One of the best preventives is the grace of God and a genuine interest in somebody else. THE BAPTIST and Missions in every issue bring appeals for your love and service. Give them freely. This will prove a sure cure for sour church members. Do these journals go to every family in your church or do you produce lemons?

Killam's Kollum

How Does He Know?

Some one, to us unknown, through a member of the newspaper committee, sends us the following comment on the funny column in the back of the paper: "A fine collection of yarns to go into a Christian home! Reads like the Police Gazette." How does he know? Does he have the Police Gazette in his home or does he read it surreptitiously?

What Is Your Score?

100 .....	We did.
90 .....	We will.
80 .....	We can.
70 .....	We think we can.
60 .....	We might.
50 .....	We think we might.
40 .....	We wish we could.
30 .....	What is it.
20 .....	We don't know how.
10 .....	We can't.
0 .....	We won't.

What is the score of your church? You know that the interests of Baptists at home and abroad would be greatly stimulated if your people generally knew what a few of them know. The mediums of information are found in THE BAPTIST and Missions. It will not be a difficult task to secure a list equal to at least 10 per cent of your membership. This would make the rate of THE BAPTIST but $2 per year. The combination rate with Missions is $3 for one or 100 subscriptions. If you do not make up a great list find the reason on our measuring stick. Score 100. Say, "We did."

Keeps Wife Quiet

"Don't kill Killam, he's harmless. Besides he furnishes my wife amusement. She says that she doesn't understand him but she reads him anyway. Killam has more real sense in his Kollum than many column writers with brains. Q. E. D. Spare him."—A. Z. Hall, Eaton, Col. We have been stirred by conflicting feelings as we have read and re-read this communication in an effort to classify it. Is it for or against? It says, "Spare him" and seems to base the vote on the fact that each week for a brief period the Kollum occupies the attention of Mrs. Hall. One thing we know. Mr. Hall is the friend of the denominational newspaper and at one time sent in one of the largest single lists of subscriptions in his state. That is the only way by which the subscription list of THE BAPTIST can be made what it ought to be. Some one must make it his business to place the paper in every family in his church. Is that somebody you?

A Seafarer's Sketch Book

By WILLIAM B. LIPPARD

NO. 3. THE CAPTAIN OF THE ESTONIA

FROM time immemorial the men of the Scandinavian countries of Europe—Denmark, Norway and Sweden—have followed the sea. Possibly the geographical environment of these countries and their enormously extended coast lines explains why every Scandinavian boy as soon as he reaches the age of understanding looks with eager longing eyes to the surging tides near his home and fondly anticipates the coming of the day when he too may go to sea. We first hear of these men of the sea in the stories of the early Norsemen and the Vikings, the original discoverers of America. Throughout all the centuries that have passed since then these men as a race have been born sailors, daring seamen, skilled navigators and adventurous pathfinders of the deep.

The captain of the "Estonia" exemplifies to an unusual degree the maritime traditions of his race. As a descendant of an honorable race there seems to be in his blood an unconquerable love of the sea and a most despondent feeling of homesickness whenever he is compelled to tarry for a few days on land. Doubtless the honor accorded me by assigning me the place at the dining table at his right was in recognition of the immense cargo of relief supplies carried in the hold of the "Estonia" and which were contributed by Baptist churches for distribution in destitute regions of Europe. I have, therefore, immensely enjoyed this unique privilege of becoming intimately acquainted with one of the most interesting men I have ever known.

Captain H. K. Christensen is a man still this side of middle age who has followed the sea since boyhood. Born in Denmark, he had his first experience on the highway of the ocean at the age of fifteen, when he sailed on a tiny bark of only seventy-five tons freight-carrying capacity on a six-weeks' voyage to America. The crew consisted of the skipper, the mate, two other boys and himself, a total of five, one of the boys serving as cook. A trip like that is a most fitting initiation into a career of seamanship. When I recall my own recent stormy voyage across the Atlantic in a relatively big ship it seems utterly incredible that so tiny a vessel with five in her crew should ever have survived the perils of the sea.

During the years that followed his first trip at sea the captain of the "Estonia" has visited almost every known part on earth. He has circumnavigated Africa and South America, has made three voyages in sailing vessels to Australia and five voyages in modern oil burning ships. He has journeyed up and down both coasts of North America, has been in most of the harbors of the Caribbean Sea and of Mexico; and has made fourteen trips through the Panama Canal. He has sailed far up the Yangtze River into the very heart of China. He knows the ports of India as well as most English navigators and is almost as familiar with the harbors of Japan as was the late Capt. L. W. Bickel. He has long ceased to keep count of his many trips across the Atlantic, for they have become almost innumerable. Today he looks upon such a trip with the same degree of unconcern as a Jersey commuter faces his daily crossing on the Hudson River ferry. Astounded at this record of maritime cosmopolitanism I ventured to ask him just where he had not been on this earth. There were just two places. One was Alaska, which he had not visited because no Danish shipping company had interests there. The other place was Switzerland. With characteristic sea humor he explained that he had not gone there because the allies at the Versailles Peace Conference had failed to give Switzerland a seaport.

With such a record of sea travel Captain Christensen has naturally had numerous adventures. Many and exciting were the tales that he told us at the dining table and in the ship's parlor during the evenings when the three cabin passengers including myself and the captain and the first officer gathered for a victrola concert and for the exchange of experiences. Once he was shipwrecked on the west coast of South America, his ship striking the rocks late at night. His officer and five men decided to risk a lifeboat while the captain and the others decided to remain with the ship until morning. The former were lost and the later were rescued. On another occasion on the west coast of Mexico more than 1,200 miles from land the engine broke down and for five days the ship drifted. The wireless brought no response and the break could not be repaired. At that time he was first officer and with characteristic abandon and fearless courage he, with five men, volunteered to sail 1,200 miles in a lifeboat and summon assistance. Once more the engineer worked all night to repair the engine and by morning had located the trouble thus making this self-sacrifice unnecessary.

During the war Captain Christensen escaped with only one encounter with the German submarine. He was sailing merrily along on a smooth sea with an American cargo consigned to an American firm in Copenhagen. This was before America had entered the war. Out of the depths rose the submarine, fired several shots, ordering him to stop and then summoned him aboard with the ship's papers. Upon review of the papers the German commander handed them back and regretfully announced that he had orders not to sink him and would therefore have to allow him to proceed. The only explanation which the captain can suggest is that in some way the German government had received advance knowledge of this cargo and had been informed that Germany through Denmark was to be its ultimate destination.

The humorous experiences of the captain's career are equally numerous and possibly account for the delightfully humorous streak in his personality. Once as an ordinary seaman he was arrested for walking aimlessly about the streets of Valparaiso and since he could not pay the $10 fine he spent two days in prison, his task being to sweep out the horse stables. On the "Estonia" he keeps a daily record of the amount of fresh water used for drinking and washing, the amount varying from eight to sixty tons each day. With "dry" humor he remarked to me that in looking over the record of the year he can tell exactly the kind of were converted in one of our series of revival meetings."

Rev. Chas. H. Stull, who is directing the campaigns in evangelism in Ohio with such excellent success, has resigned the pastorate at Marietta and will remove to Granville. Rev. J. W. Weddell, the assistant pastor, will carry on the work at Marietta.

John W. Grainger was ordained at the Calvary Church, Bridgeport, Conn., on Jan. 10. The sermon was by Rev. D. B. MacQueen, ordaining prayer by Dr. Horace B. Sloat, charge to candidate and welcome to denomination by Rev. Walter Gay, charge to the church by Rev. W. M. Richardson. Rev. D. B. MacQueen acted as moderator and Rev. Frank S. Clark as clerk.

H. S. Myers, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City, announces that there have been of late requests for the purchase of hymn sets and that his department is now able to supply such at fifty cents a slide. The following are available: America the Beautiful, 17 slides; My Country 'Tis of Thee, 23 slides; I Gave My Life for Thee, 15 slides; Greenland's Icy Mountains, 20 slides; Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life, 21 slides; Hymn of Continent, 41 slides.

weather on each trip from the amount of water consumed. In fair weather the passengers drink plenty and wash frequently, whereas in rough weather they remain in their bunks, drink little and go unwashed.

The passing of the years finds him not less daring, but more cautious and conservative. Although not compelled by law to have a lookout in the "coop" during the day, the captain has a man in the "coop" at the top of the foreward mast every hour of the day and night. On wild stormy nights he himself seldom sleeps. Thus during the thirty-six hours of fog and storm of the English Channel and the North Sea he spent most of the time on the bridge and secured only an occasional hour's sleep on the sofa in his room. About half a day out of the channel a ship seventy miles ahead sent a wireless that she had just passed a huge floating mine—gruesome reminder of the war. Immediately the captain retired to the chart room, located on the chart the approximate position of the mine, estimated its drifting speed and the rate of the ocean current and then sharply turned the "Estonia" southward on a wider detour so that we entered the channel from the southwest instead of from the west. During the night I shuddered at what might have happened had we struck that mine and I thought of those thousands of people in Europe awaiting the arrival of this relief ship who might have had to be told that the gifts of Northern Baptists were buried in the depths of the sea.

With such a careful, experienced, skillful navigator guiding the "Estonia" there comes an assurance to the traveler not otherwise possible. So each night I retired to my cabin in the serene confidence that everything humanly possible was being done to assure my own safety on the deep and to assure the safe arrival of the precious cargo in my charge.

What Failure Means

A RECENT letter from Assam tells of the annual conference which met in Jorhat on Dec. 1 and spoke of the faith in the Master which is moving among the missionaries as they attempt to do the impossible for their Lord. Then it adds that during the conference word was received from America that, unless large gifts are received from the churches, fewer missionaries will be sent, less funds be available for the present years and it may be necessary to close parts of the present work. As there has never been a time when workers and funds have been adequate this news was a severe blow. In addition it was indicated that, although the missionaries are losing from 15 to 20 per cent of their salaries owing to the standard basis on which the value of the rupee has been calculated and although the price of commodities continues to increase, there can be no adjustment of salaries. The missionaries listened to the old story and then, with unbounded faith, girded themselves again for their task. But can America afford to allow them to do their work under such conditions?

Dr. Lerrigo has been telling of the remarkable movement towards Christ on the Congo. During his recent trip he saw 300 baptized on one morning and learned that these are only part of some 1500 who have been baptized in that place in five or six months. The Pentecost on the Congo promises to be far surpassed by the present movement. The situation calls for more workers and better equipment. Failure of the churches at home to give the money means that the door the Lord has opened cannot be used except in part.

Multiply these facts many times, consider the work in all our foreign fields, in our home mission field also, whether in country or city, see the workers who must lay down their task, the buildings which must be closed, the children and women who cannot be served, the multitudes to whom the gospel cannot be preached in their own language, the religious education work which must languish, the students in colleges to whom we cannot minister—in other words see in human terms the work we are doing all over the world, and you can see what the failure to keep our pledges to the Lord and to the churches will mean this year. It is not money for which our denominational servants are pleading; it is rather for all these people and for the work of the Lord that it may not halt.

We have talked of drives and campaigns and pledges and all kinds of machinery, and have not always found it inspiring. Now let us talk of people and of their suffering and their need of the gospel. The Lord has called us to minister to people—in Asia and Africa and Europe and America. Without us there must be a famine of the hearing of the word of the Lord. Every cent we give during the next three months is not for the glory of some great program, but for the sake of people and in the name of our Lord. Think of some missionary you know, at home or abroad. Do you want him to live on a smaller salary? Do you wish his work cut in half or closed? Do you want his witness to stop? Do you wish the people to whom he ministers to be left destitute? Of course not! But that is what failure, in whatever degree it may come, means. We cannot fail. Our money is the Lord's; shall we not give it to him for his work?

Laymen Get Under Way

IN ANOTHER column will be found a report of the meeting of a representative group of laymen who in Chicago on January 20 made plans for the long-discussed national laymen's council and elected temporary officers to serve until the annual meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention.

These laymen, in all the organization they may set up have before them an immediate and an ultimate goal. The immediate aim is to enlist all the laymen and all the laymen's organizations of the convention field in an effort to meet our present denominational crisis. To do this, they have set before them as an objective to be reached before May 1 the raising of $15,000,000. Of this at least $6,000,000 may be expected, if heroic effort is made, to come from pledges previously made and the women are in a campaign to secure $2,000,000. This leaves $7,000,000 over and above all the rest for the men. The amount is not excessive when the means of our Northern Baptists are considered and the men are confident that it can be raised.

The ultimate goal, work on which begins at once but which will demand the service of years, touches evangelism and stewardship. The men believe that the time has come to press upon all laymen the need of personal work and the use of gospel teams. The men of the churches must take up again their primary work of witnessing for the Lord. Stewardship work must be continuous. There is a stewardship of time inasmuch as every Christian owes to his Lord a portion of his time for that Lord's work. There is also a stewardship of property which has been too much overlooked. The men believe that by stressing together stewardship and evangelism they will produce in the churches a condition which will make impossible another crisis like that in which we now find ourselves.

During the next few weeks, there will be gatherings of laymen in all our states. The opportunity of a lifetime for great work is before them. We have no question of the response when once the facts get to them. The best manhood of our churches will pull the denomination out of the hole into which it has fallen and then fill up the hole so that the situation may not be repeated.

Preach the Gospel

DR. CHARLES F. AKED believes that the only excuse on Sunday evening for striking subjects and unusual topics, no matter what the field from which they may be drawn, is to give the preacher a congregation to which he can preach the gospel. He declares that for many years he has spoken on biographies, novels, dramas, controverted social and political questions, and the like, but that "as in the presence of my Savior I assert that I have yet to preach the first one which has not Christ in its heart and which does not lead to Christ before the final words are said." Just now he has been giving a course on "The Moral Value of Shakespeare's Greatest Plays," with the purpose, through them, of preaching Christ. Consider this:

"We really must not abandon the attempt to preach the gospel to the multitudes of 'unsaved' that stream through our city streets and crowd the movies on the Sabbath evening; we can do better than show them 'The Bluebird' or 'The Inside of the Cup.' We can do better than bring a professional lecturer to explain the iniquities of Soviet rule. By great effort we may attract people to our churches, and when they come we can preach Christ. To the pastor of the church with the closed door on Sabbath night, or of the church which shows film pictures, or of the church which offers an Open Forum, I desire only to say very lovingly, Try again."

The object, after all, is to reach the people with the gospel. Some of us may not personally care for the methods of some of our brethren but if they are really doing the thing which Dr. Aked says that he is doing, then we can only rejoice with Paul that in every way Christ is preached.

The Master Passion

JESUS said, "My meat and drink is to do the will of him that sent me." His passion was to do God's will.

Paul said to the Corinthians: "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." His passion was the preaching of the crucified and risen Lord.

John Knox said, "Lord, give me Scotland, or I die." His passion was a reborn Scotland.

"Mr. Spurgeon," says W. Robertson Nicoll, "always made salvation a wonderful, a supernatural thing—won through agony and garments rolled in blood. That the blood of God should be one of the ordinary forces of the universe was to him a thing incredible." Spurgeon's passion was to be the mediator to men of God's wonderful salvation.

To Henry Drummond the gospel was good news and he delighted to preach it in terms which he believed the young men of his time could understand.

Ian Maclaren thought of his pulpit as his throne. He was possessed of the great thoughts of the incarnation and the atonement. He was always thinking, not of ideas but of people as affected by ideas and great forces. He delighted to minister to people.

As a pastor, as a parent, as a Sunday-school teacher, as a friend, as a Christian, there is some one thing above all others which gives value and tone to your life. Does it compare well with those of the great servants and lovers of mankind?

What is your master passion?

Respect for Law

IF THERE is anybody who does not now know that there is an international conspiracy to break down the prohibition law in the United States, he is inexcusably ignorant.

The same powers which in the past have debauched our cities, which have fattened on alliance with every kind of crime and evil, which have defied all law which they themselves did not make, are doing their utmost to promote a campaign of ridicule and of law-breaking.

Decent people who take up their propaganda are lining themselves up with every bootlegger and every criminal who asserts that laws may be for other people but not for him.

If this prohibition law is broken down, there can be no certainty that any of our laws will stand.

Those who will take the trouble to investigate will find that already remarkable gains have followed the coming of prohibition. Any concession which allows beer will in a short time undo all these. No such partial prohibition is workable.

The present task of all right-minded people is to defeat this lawless conspiracy. Knock that in the head and conditions, even in the big cities, will show vast improvement along all lines.

Innocence in the Senate

ALITTLE more than a bare majority of the members of the United States Senate has voted to seat the junior senator from Michigan. These men hasten to disapprove of the methods by which the election was brought about but yet profess to believe that the candidate's ignorance of what was being done and the fact that personally he had not transgressed make him excusable. On this plea of "sweet innocence and complete lack of knowledge," the editor of the Living Church has some words to say which we are happy to pass on:

"Yet forty-one senators voted against this reward of irresponsibility. And there can be no doubt that the acceptance of this sort of defense for wrongs that one could and ought to have prevented but did not, is certain to be fraught with vast evil some day, alike in church and in state. We need in high places men whose sense of responsibility is thoroughly developed.

"There was a time when evangelical religion stood strongly for the doctrine of personal responsibility. Its decline is a real menace.

"Thank God for the minorities that realize that personal responsibility is a reality upon which God insists, and for which he demands an accounting, however contrary to the lax spirit of these days it may be."

* * *

Particular attention is given in this number to the work being done by laymen, both in the United States and abroad. Conditions of the times are making an imperative call for lay activity in the churches. Baptists have reason for gratitude that the men of their own denomination are hearing the call so plainly.

POPE BENEDICT XV

The short reign of Benedict XV resulted in a gain for the Roman Catholic Church in the political recognition given by various states like France. Other gains are not so obvious. If there is a better feeling in France, there have been on the other hand great losses in Bohemia and other portions of Europe. By his own church Benedict is hailed as a great and good man; common opinion in the rest of the world is that he was pro-German throughout the war, or perhaps we should say pro-Austrian, and that he utterly failed to speak clearly and persuasively on the great moral issues involved. To say that a man was neutral in such a conflict is no credit to a religious leader, especially one who assumes to speak with the voice of Christ.

A CONTEST FOR CONTROL

A letter sent out from New York on Jan. 14, on the letterhead of the Committee on Conferences on Baptist Fundamentals and over the signature of J. C. Massee, contains this paragraph, which is repeated here for the general information of the Baptists of the North:

"This year more than ever we must keep the fight going all along the line in order that we may come to the next Convention sufficiently well organized and in forces strong enough to be recognized in the election of Convention officers, the appointment of Convention committees and the determination of Convention policies. We can never consent to stop short of seeing the denominational machinery in control of the great Conservative constituency which makes up at least three-fourths of the denomination. We must therefore eliminate from our Boards and offices of responsibility all those men who have put in jeopardy the spiritual life and purpose of the denomination and who wink at the subversion of our schools to the propagation of a modernistic program."

This is the clearest statement yet made publicly of the present denominational purpose of the Committee on Conferences on Baptist Fundamentals. In the view of this committee, there is now going on throughout the North a struggle for the control of the denominational machinery.

A WOMAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY

Emma Goldman has left Russia and has been spending a short time in Sweden. Characteristically during this interval she has broken her promise to the Swedish government and published matter of a political kind.

Sweden has been saying to her, "Your visit is now at an end. Please depart." But no other country will have her. She has been deported from the United States to Russia; now Russia refuses to receive her back, saying that she has already made trouble enough. Germany will not even allow her to pass over the borderline. No country will welcome her. So Sweden has on hand, "The Woman Russia Gave Me," and does not know what to do with her.

The penalty of preaching hate is not always visited in the eyes of all the world. In this case it is. Emma Goldman has been an evil force in society. Her hand has been against every man. As old age comes on the hand of every man is against her. The mills of the gods sometimes grind with fair rapidity.

One can be sorry for an old woman who has become a woman without a country. But no one can wish the doors of the United States open to an alien who has for years bitten the hand which fed her and who is today as bitter as ever.

MILITARISM IN FRANCE

Great resentment has been expressed among Frenchmen at the charge that, as a result of the war, the center of militarism has been moved 1,000 miles westward. And yet the recent resignation of Aristide Briand as premier means that for the moment militarism and extreme nationalism are in the saddle. Poincaré's insistence on the fulfilment of the treaty to the letter, on the payment of the last drop of blood, clearly indicates a spirit which has been Europe's bane for decades.

Briand was conciliatory. In order to help Europe out of its present stagnation he had made certain concessions which other statesmen regarded as necessary. In return, Lloyd George for England was willing to agree that Great Britain would come to the help of France if she were again the object of German aggression and violence. But the extreme element would for the moment have none of this and so there came the change in the ministry. The situation is both absurd and tragic. For the day is sure to come when the common sense of the French people will lead them to make even greater concessions than Briand was proposing. Meanwhile reconstruction is held back and the world continues to wallow in its suspicions and agony.

ARE COLLEGE ATHLETICS OVERDONE?

President Lowell of Harvard University is inclining to the opinion that college athletics are not yet on the right basis in the United States. He seems to think that a limited number of intercollegiate contests may be desirable in order to stimulate interest, but that the great majority of contests should be intramural, the object being to give the students the best possible physical development and recreation. He especially raises the question of the collegiate value of football games which have become great public spectacles, preparation for which keeps men from their studies for many weeks and which keep out of most of the games the better athletes who are trained and saved for the one or two "big" contests.

Response to his views, presented in his annual report, has come from many parts of the country. Some educators agree. Others think that the men engaged in sport are saved from undesirable recreation. Yet others believe that intersectional games, even if they do keep students for a time from the class room, give a knowledge of the country and its people and develop a spirit which is well worth while. The chances are that we are now in for an interesting debate on this subject.

This topic might be debated: "Are intercollegiate athletics for the sake of the man or does the man exist for the sake of the athletics?"

"We Cannot—God Can"

Say Women of the Continuation Campaign

THERE is something almost inspiring in the challenge of the eleventh hour. At least Baptist women feel so, and if they are unafraid to face the facts and realize the seriousness of the situation confronting the denomination, they are also unwilling to admit any discouragement. Was not the greatest victory of all history won by the allied armies under Marshall Foch at the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month?

From all the districts reports of progress continue to flow in steadily. The beginning of the New Year finds leaders everywhere girding on the whole armor to fight the good fight. The women are aroused and their fertile minds are producing as many ideas and plans as there were plums in the Jack Horner pie of Mother Goose fame.

"Central District is getting up four-minute speeches and working on a financial plan which promises to be very attractive," writes Mrs. Robert A. Hilton, and Mrs. J. E. Huchingson, sends along the encouraging report that "with Mrs. F. I. Smith as district campaign leader, Rocky Mountain expects to do her part!" Atlantic District is arranging for an inspirational mass meeting in the First Church of Philadelphia for January 20, with Mrs. G. W. Coleman and Mrs. Andrew MacLeish as the speakers. Mrs. Geo. W. Swift, writes in reference to the same district, "I find that the more the state women are given to do, the better they like it. I am in touch with each state president and each has promised in a very lovely way to cooperate always, and to try to find the right woman as campaign director in her state."

"Enthusiasm and courage prevails, which presages success," says Mrs. W. E. Chalmers, the president of the Pennsylvania state society. "I have been most delighted at the wonderful spirit of harmony which prevails within our board, and at the general eagerness of the women to be put to work. The greatest courtesy and interest has been accorded the publicity directors and the editor of our state paper who received an article too late for immediate publication had it issued as a special supplement, and sent out to all the churches. He said, 'I want not only the women to get the message. I want the pastors and laymen also to see what you are planning to do. I hope something of your spirit and enterprise may enter into all of us, and that we may put through this task of ours at once.'"

Mrs. O. E. Howe, president of the District of Columbia woman's society tells of the way she is handling her prayer groups. "I called women in different churches whom I knew were interested, praying women, and asked each one to call two more to arrange that the three might pray together each day. They were to meet if possible; if not, to pray at the same hour, each in her own home. Then Friday of this week we met in Calvary Church for a season of prayer together. We prayed first that as a denomination we may turn to prayer, and then prayed definitely for the success of the movement. You would be surprised to know how the women have responded to this."

With such a spirit as this, coupled with the earnest, active zest of Baptist women country-wide, the Continuation Campaign of the Hundred Million Dollar Fund cannot but succeed. There are no little women in these big times—there is no room for them.

We cannot—God can! When the thirtieth of April dawns and shouts of victory go up from over half a million Baptist women, it will be because they have called for aid on the one who can give triumph to trusting hearts.

The Layman in Action

By FRANK H. ROBINSON

IN putting on campaigns for the raising of money for our denominational enterprises, the chief difficulty I have experienced is the lack of information on the part of our Baptist constituencies. The reasons for this are easy to understand. Most of our churches have an average membership under 300, and yet these small churches are "gold mines" if you know how to "prospect." They are not often visited by missionaries or secretaries, because they are not so accessible as the large churches in the cities. Their pastors are cut off from meeting their brother ministers and so do not get the denominational news. Again, probably not one Baptist family in six takes a denominational paper, so even the printed word does not reach them. Then, we have been emphasizing the independency of the local church for several hundred years, consequently the bulk of our membership have not thought in terms of the denominational life and activities, and have not been keenly interested in anything outside of their own community activities. Again, many of our churches in the country and towns are pastorless. They do not have regular preaching services. In many, the members are discouraged and disheartened. There is an opportunity for doing aggressive work in many of these localities, if fellow Baptists in nearby churches, preachers, women and laymen would occasionally visit these fields. This is one of the large possibilities for laymen service, such as is contemplated in the new laymen's movement in our denomination. What would it not mean to a small church, to have a team of half a dozen keen, active, spiritually-minded laymen visit them, with their message of hope and optimism? I have found, in the three campaigns in which I have been interested in Pennsylvania, that the results are encouraging and almost instantaneous when sympathetic and instructive information is given. Our people do not respond, oftentimes, not because they are "tight-fisted" but because through lack of information, they are not interested. In other words, the subject is foreign to their thoughts, so they do not give consideration to the question of giving to such objects. In the million dollar campaign, we set out to get an offering from every Baptist Church in the eleven associations in western Pennsylvania. A few churches did not respond, but we secured sufficient offerings from missions and from churches that had been closed for a long while and were not listed as active Baptist churches, so that our total was slightly more than the number of churches reported by these associations. Our responses in the other two campaigns, while not quite so sweeping in their scope, were equally gratifying—the amount subscribed being much larger in almost every case. It was interesting to note how these formerly unresponsive churches increased their offerings with each campaign. It was the personal touch that contributed most largely to these results, and where we failed to secure results, it was through lack of contact.

There is no open sesame to success in these campaigns. Just the wearing out of shoe leather and the sound of the human voice. Information, as a rule, means response. Of course I am not forgetting the absolute necessity of prayer, and the need of tactfulness. But after all, the enlisting of our membership in giving, is not the chief objective. We must have the life, the "witness" that in the early church brought such magnificent results. We are expecting too much of our pastors and laying too heavy a burden upon them. We must have a return of lay evangelism, and in some degree, of lay preaching, in the simplicity of genuine trust in God and the need of regeneration in the human soul. With a return of religious fervor, the prayer meeting will not be a problem, nor will the Sunday-night congregation. Methods may change, but I know of no substitute for Romans 12:1. What, then, should be the objectives of our laymen's movement? First, the securing of sufficient funds this current year to put the societies and boards out of debt. Second, the teaching of stewardship and the organization of a Christian Stewardship League in every church. Not technical or mechanical giving, simply because it is the law, but the glad surrender of the life and all that we have, because we are his, and in the joy of the Lord find surrender is a privilege and stewardship the keenest pleasure. Third, lay-evangelism for the reaching of souls. Just the personal seeking of the unsaved—the straight, kindly question put to our friends as to their relation to God. We know how to sell products; why should we not know how to witness in Christ's name so as to save lives? In addition, the laymen in every numerically strong church should adopt some nearby small church when such adoption is welcomed and done in the spirit of the Master.

What Baptist Laymen Are Doing in Europe

Christian men in the British dissenting churches are fairly well on their job. On the Continent men have yet to find an active place. Woman power also undeveloped.

By ROLVIX HARLAN

THE place of the laymen in Baptist churches in Britain is not very different from that of laymen in other communions. Certain fairly well defined duties and responsibilities are placed upon the laymen in the dissenting churches of England. American churches have not as yet clearly defined many of these functions and duties. For example, in every church in which I preached, the church secretary, who is a layman, gave most careful and courteous attention to having all the details of the service arranged for; and in most cases, it was he who ushered the minister into the pulpit. The part the layman plays in thus preparing for the service, and having every detail cared for inspires a dignity, especially in respect to announcements and other matters, very often lacking in the American church service.

It was my privilege to meet a number of splendid laymen who are interested in community work. Dr. McAfee, of West Kirby, near Liverpool, is very active in the promotion of Bible conferences, and in addition to his professional duties as a physician, is the founder and director of a children's hospital, which is a church philanthropy. This is the first children's hospital where, in addition to older, approved methods of treatment of children's diseases, outdoor open-air treatment is provided, in Britain.

The men of the churches in England seem to be especially interested in evangelistic work. In one community where I preached, and which has three high-grade churches, ministering very largely but not exclusively to well-to-do commuters, a service of evangelism is conducted in a community house, cooperatively, by all the churches, under the direction of a number of the laymen. The service in the churches is held at six thirty, and they aim to close at seven forty-five. Following the service in the churches, this large evangelistic service—an additional evening service—is conducted beginning at eight o'clock, for eight months of the year. This gives the layman opportunity for personal evangelistic service, and acquaints him with the unchurched people of the community.

Englishmen in Evangelism

I was in one of the quarterly meetings of the London Baptist Association, where Dr. Clifford presented his plan of personal evangelism, and where he made report concerning the growing interest of the laymen in that movement. All over the British Islands churches are found in which personal evangelism on the part of the laymen is as distinctly recognized a part of the church program as is, for example, a Sunday school in connection with an American church program.

My attention was drawn to one particular case in which a fine bit of church extension was being undertaken and conducted by a Baptist church under the direction of a group of laymen. It is the new Baptist church at Ealing, London, which was organized in January, 1921. Not having a church building, a group of laymen undertook to provide for a special type of religious service to their community by engaging a large moving-picture theater called the Paladium, and became responsible for the rent of the place and for the management of religious services such as could be conducted in such a building. It was my privilege to preach one Sunday in early September for this organization. They had what would be a splendid congregation in the morning for an ordinary church service, but only partially filling the first floor of the theatre. The evening service, which has been planned to be a presentation of the claims of religion upon the thoughtful people, was attended by an immense audience which required the placing of the "Full House" sign ten minutes before the service began. This kind of a service and such an audience has been a regular thing from the beginning of the enterprise. These laymen felt that they had an obligation to the community to have the claims of religion presented under conditions which would secure a large hearing, and thus far they have wonderfully succeeded. There is no question but that the evening service in most communities could be made a splendid opportunity for Christian propaganda if a group of consecrated laymen could only take hold of the proposition and cooperate with the pastor. If the regular pastor is not able to put across the message, these men could arrange for a special speaker, and special music, and have the pastor take care of the regular morning service, the teaching, and parish functions of the church.

Brotherhood Everywhere

The Brotherhood organizations in Britain run through all the denominations. Our Baptist men are very well organized in most of the churches, although perhaps the Wesleyan Methodists have pushed the Brotherhood work more zealously than others. The Brotherhood service, coming Sunday afternoon, makes the third service, and is addressed ordinarily by some outside speaker, although the function of the pastor in connection with the work of the men in the church and the community is ordinarily provided for. It is remarkable with what zeal and interest professional men, working men, business men, will serve on the committees which are intended to make the Brotherhood meeting a success. In one large Brotherhood meeting in East Ham, London, which I addressed 2,000 men were present on Sunday afternoon. The organization is democratically governed and controlled from within. Men aspire to the offices and to a place on the committees in the Brotherhood organization with somewhat the same zeal and interest that is shown in the offices of a popular lodge. The local program of the Brotherhood would be called one of propaganda and relief. They have groups which are studying the ethical principles of Christianity, and their possible application in the every day world of civic and economic life. Many of the Brotherhood organizations carry on a certain amount of relief work among the destitute of their community.

Brotherhood work on the Continent is not very well organized, and it is difficult to estimate the influence of the laymen in the Protestant churches there. Through an article in Missions, we have been made acquainted with the splendid work of Mrs. Kolatur in Prague, but the work of her husband, a man who was converted from Romanism, is equally remarkable. He is most faithful in supporting in every way the full program of the Baptist church, and often addresses meetings in the mission stations.

The World Brotherhood Congress, held in Prague, brought together a number of laymen as well as ministers from the nearby cities. They participated in the program and in discussions.

Of course, Brotherhood work on the Continent is largely promoted by the British Brotherhoods and Mr. William Ward, who for many years was a leader of Brotherhoods in Britain, has been unusually zealous in seeking to establish organizations of Christian men on the Continent. The war scattered these groups, but there are signs to indicate they are being brought together again. In fact the word Brotherhood, is a word which applies to a group of Protestant Christians in many parts of Central Europe. The Protestant groups of Christians are dominated by the men for the most part. One

Southern California Re-Affirms Loyalty to New World Movement

Probably the most enthusiastic state convention ever held in Southern California came to a close Jan. 17, with a vote unanimously re-affirming the loyalty of the Baptists of the convention field "to the great world tasks of the New World Movement."

of Protestantism's problems in Europe will be the developing and utilizing of the woman power in the churches.

We had a fine conference with one of our Baptist laymen in Paris who was delegated to arrange our itinerary to Baptist points of interest. His intense interest not only in the work of his own local group but in all the relief work that was being undertaken, was very heartening.

On the whole, it would be true to say that the Christian men of the British dissenting churches are fairly well on their job but that Protestantism on the Continent is either made up of strong state churches where laymen have little or no direct participation in church work, or of weak dissenting groups, and that the influence and work of men in connection with the church varies greatly from place to place.

This loyalty on the part of Southern California Baptists was further shown by the passing of a resolution to undertake to raise by April 20, the full amount due on their pledges, plus $320,000, their share of the twenty million. The convention was permeated by a spirit of victory. The greatest readiness to begin the hard work that lies ahead during the next few weeks was manifested by everyone.

Dr. John Y. Aitchison made a stirring address on Jan. 16. Dr. W. F. Harper, state convention secretary for Southern California, later sent a message to the General Director of the Northern Baptist Convention that a large and energetic Laymen's Council had been organized. There were 769 enrolled delegates at the convention, and an attendance of over 1200. A message was sent to every state convention, suggesting that each one call a special convention. The convention came to its close in a spirit of faith, readiness to work and a belief in ultimate victory.

Opportunity Still Open

The Ministers and Missionaries' Benefit Board suggested to the churches prior to the holidays that they pay the first year's dues of their pastors to the membership of the Retiring Pension Fund as a Christmas present. Many accepted the suggestion and brought joy to the heart of the pastor.

The board realizes that the annual meetings of perhaps the majority of the churches do not occur until the beginning of the new year, or in the spring, and the budgets of expenses will not be made up until that time. The board would, therefore, suggest to those churches whose pastors are still not members of the Retiring Pension Fund that this first year's dues be put in the budget of annual expenses of the church for the ensuing year. Distributed thus among the entire membership of the church, the cost would be a comparatively small item. Small indeed when compared to the pleasure it will bring to the pastor.

Your pastor is worthy of such backing! Put your church in the progressive list. —P. C. WRIGHT, Associate Secretary.

A Growing League of Baptist Brothers

By J. FOSTER WILCOX

WHEN, in 1908, at Oklahoma, the Northern Baptist Convention recognized the Baptist Brotherhood as a department of its work, our leaders believed that only when the men of our churches are organized in leagues and brotherhoods for Bible study, practical service and missionary support can our laymen render the largest possible ministry. In 1910, at Chicago, the convention again placed itself on record as favoring the Brotherhood by the following resolution: "That in the Brotherhood we have the most practical and efficient agency for promoting those Christian activities which are of vital interest to men." Again, in 1912, the convention insisted on sustaining the work of the Brotherhood, but the child of its adoption was not sufficiently nourished and the Publication Society was asked to provide money and direction for its extension. At this meeting of the convention the same society was asked to promote the social ministry of the church, and conferences were held with the members of the Social Service Commission and the Brotherhood Council and it was decided to organize in the Publication Society the department of social service and brotherhood. This was speedily accomplished and on Oct. 1, 1912, Dr. Samuel Zane Batten became secretary of the department. The department created a noteworthy literature and promoted the organization of many new brotherhoods. In May, 1919, the Denver Convention voted to make the conference committee of the Home Mission Society and the Publication Society the Brotherhood Council. Under this new arrangement, Dr. Rolvix Harlan became executive secretary of the Brotherhood, and J. Foster Wilcox, director. Samuel Zane Batten, secretary of social education of the Publication Society was charged with the preparation of the study courses and educational work for the brotherhoods. Under this plan we are now enlisting and enrolling organized groups of Baptist men in our federation. The director has to do with organization, activities and programs. The following statement of general policy and objectives was adopted and the Federation has stressed them in all parts of the convention territory:

General Policy

To continue, conserve and strengthen existing brotherhoods and other men's groups, and to continue approved lines of work heretofore undertaken.

To regard the men in every Baptist Church as the local Baptist Brotherhood, and to urge them to come together, regularly or occasionally, to consider matters of importance to the local church, as well as the great objectives of the church and Kingdom at large.

To regard all the men in Baptist churches as our Baptist Brotherhood, whether organized locally or not, and to represent them in the National Interdenominational Brotherhood, and in the World Brotherhood Movement.

To promote interest on the part of the men of our churches in national and international brotherhood tasks.

Objectives

1. To reorganize and revive interest in the existing men's organizations by disclosing present needs and new lines of work.

2. To organize a brotherhood in churches where heretofore they have had no organization. To interpret to them their church responsibility and their community and Kingdom tasks.

3. To vitalize the whole life, thought and activity of the church and to assist in some form of aggressive evangelism.

4. To promote fellowship and closer acquaintance on the part of the men of our churches, locally and denominationally.

5. To foster worthy ideals of citizenship and community service.

6. To enlist the energies of the men in the great missionary enterprises of the churches at home and abroad.

7. To secure and apply the united influence of Baptist men to such moral questions, local, national and international, as require united Christian action for their solution.

8. To encourage all the men of the church to enroll in study classes.

Plans and Program

1. To procure lists of men's organizations already in existence for the purpose of establishing a Baptist Brotherhood Federation, with a corresponding secretary in each local organization.

2. To revise the old and create new promotional literature.

3. To cooperate with state conventions in securing attendance of men at the conventions. To present men's work at these conventions. To interest state conventions in promoting brotherhood work.

4. To develop evangelistic interest and activities on the part of the men of our churches in cooperation with the superintendent of evangelism of the Home Mission Society

5. To promote fathers' and sons' gatherings and to develop a sense of responsibility on the part of the brotherhood for the boys of the community.

6. To mobilize the men of the denomination for law enforcement. To create a sense of world-wide responsibility for temperance.

7. To disseminate knowledge of social conditions and needed reforms.

8. To present the challenge of Kingdom tasks to the men of the denomination by publicity campaigns as urgent need arises.

9. To bring about interdenominational cooperation for the dissemination of the spirit of brotherhood.

In the executive secretary's report, which was also an announcement of the above plans to the denomination, this significant statement was made: "The work of the Baptist Brotherhood Federation is henceforth not merely an aspect of, or an adjunct to, any department of social service, but will have to do with the work of the men of the churches as such, whether those activities are thought of as evangelism, religious education, missions, or social service." Thus it will be seen, the Brotherhood Federation exists to promote every worthy objective of the local church or the denomination at large.

The Federation has been steadily growing and now we have 800 men's groups enrolled and to these we are ministering constantly. Various denominational agencies use our mailing list and thousands of pages of informational and inspirational literature are mailed to our men. In these groups we have upwards of 2700 selected leaders through whom we send information to the thousands of our brothers holding membership therein. Naturally, brotherhoods are organized more readily and successfully in the larger churches. Comparatively few of our churches are blessed with men in sufficient number to warrant the organization of men's groups outside of the Bible School. 2567 of our churches (30 per cent) report fifty members or less; 2292 report between fifty and 100 members (27 per cent); 4859 (56½ per cent) 100 or less; 1985 (23 per cent) report over 100 members but not over 200. To any person who has studied the problem of men and the church, it will be clearly realized that the choicest men in hundreds of our churches are now enrolled in Bible classes, and any movement which successfully reaches these men must consider the organizations already existing. We have many of these small groups in our Federation and we are endeavoring to line up these men back of the minister and his program.

The Baptist Brotherhood Federation exists to help every church and pastor organize and lead out into service Baptist men. There are no fees or dues. We do not ask any group to change its constitution or even its program, if such program is a real challenge. But we are desirous of offering to our men all of the helps available for the strengthening of the work. The federation rejoices in the new plans adopted for the promotion of men's work throughout the Northern Baptist Convention. We offer our facilities for the advancement of the interests of the Kingdom. A great league of Baptist brothers stands ready to cooperate now as in the past.

Cazenovia Men Enjoy Witnessing

THE church at Cazenovia, N. Y., Rev. C. C. Winter, pastor, is enjoying a continuously wholesome and unique experience, covering a period of more than a year, arising spontaneously near the beginning of the second year of the present pastorate. In November, 1920, in response to the request of a neighboring pastor, about twenty of the men of the Cazenovia church accompanied their pastor and under the direction of the president of the brotherhood the men conducted a testimony meeting which resulted in great blessing both to themselves and to the church visited. This new and novel experience prepared the men for a still greater blessing the following month, when a group of Spirit-filled men from the Delaware Street Church, Syracuse, were invited to attend and speak at the regular monthly meeting of the Cazenovia Brotherhood. At this meeting the evangelistic fervor of the visiting brethren became contagious, and the local men were encouraged to attempt what they had never done before. For more than a year the men have been continuously busy and happy in Christian service. They have conducted several meetings in their own church, conducting a decision day in the Sunday school with the result that ten members of the school united with the church. The men conducted the week of prayer in January, 1921, and again this year, attracting a large number of men to these meetings. The men have put virility into the regular mid-week prayer meetings throughout the year. These mid-week services have felt the reflex influence of the men going out to other churches on about fifteen different occasions and conducting meetings, in many cases extending the invitation to accept Christ, and securing decisions. Truly, the Lord can work wonders today with men who are willing to do His will!

Momentum for Missions

By HERBERT W. HINES

THE word "momentum" for the purpose of this paper is derived from "mo," Home Mission dialect for "more"; "men," a good Anglo-Saxon word meaning the gender not usually prevalent in missionary study circles; "tu," Bostonese for "to"; and "m," the curtain-raising consonant of a word needing to be branded on the cuticle of many a church official board. If we can attract more men to missions we can add momentum to missionary activities. But how?

First and foremost we must take a step that will make the number of men interested in missions as numerous as those interested in the work of the church. We must so link church and missions that interest in one is per se interest in the other. We cannot take time to put on two campaigns, one to win a man to the church, another to win him to missions. Enlisting under the banner of Christ must imply accepting his program or plan of campaign, of which missions is a necessary part, like the fourth quart in a gallon; if you haven't that quart, you haven't the gallon. If you haven't a missionary vision, you are not a full Christian.

The initial step, therefore, will be the clear recognition by the church that it is not a real church if, instead of doing missionary work itself, it lets whatever is being done among its members be done by the Woman's Society, a W. W. G., or a B. Y. P. U. committee. It must do its own missionary educational work, having its own committee for the work—its own committee! A church missionary committee! This should be a strong committee with its majority men who will get informed about missionary progress, and plan the work for the church in such a way that when it brings forward plans and propaganda, the whole church will "sit up and take notice." A missionary committee of the church, with men on it, planning and talking, and reporting to the church about missions—that will add a bit of momentum, and will accomplish at least three things.

1. It will bring home to the church the realization that missions are an integral part of its task. Many people have the idea that missions is something added to, extra, or superimposed upon the church, whereas, it is organically and vitally connected. It certainly is, scripturally considered! When Jesus gave his brief farewell message to the eleven, as recorded in the last few verses of Matthew's gospel, he said plainly: "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations," and just before his ascension, as recorded in the first chapter of Acts, the very last words the disciples heard from his lips were: "Ye shall be my witnesses... unto the utmost part of the earth." From our Lord himself the emphatic parting message made the church's task clear—its main task—not to be cast lightly aside for a subsidiary organization to pick up heroically and perform, but for the church itself; its responsibility, and its privilege, to be delegated, if at all, to a strong missionary committee of the church.

2. It will create a wider circle of interest. The church missionary committee can reach a wider circle than any subsidiary organization. The writer knows a church which took this new step and appointed a missionary committee of five; two of them men of the church, two from the woman's organization, and one from the young people's society. This committee, cooperating with the pastor, put on a church school of missions of the following form: The church met in five groups from 6:30 to 7:30 Sunday evening for the study of the text-book, "The Kingdom and the Nations." These five groups were men, women, young people, intermediates and juniors. At 7:30 the five groups came together in the church auditorium for an illustrated lecture by the pastor on the subject discussed during the previous hour. Observe that one of these groups was men, men under a man leader studying missions! This was considered marvelous by the whole church and community, but it has been made possible by the church missionary committee—missions had been made the business of the church, and in that the men were leaders and willing to take a hand, especially when men led off.

3. It will do away with the enormous extra effort to extend the circle of missionary interest. There is a tremendous effort on the part of a faithful few to interest more people in the work of missions, in its achievements, and in its need of financial support. Many of our churches have a loyal and devoted band of women who have performed miracles in drilling through the lethargy of groups utterly lacking in missionary vision. They have given the youth of tomorrow the vision of world evangelization through the Sunday-school sessions, and they have reached many of their own sex through their missionary programs faithfully rendered, month by month, year by year. But the men folks regard their meetings and activities as something belonging to the women, like women's clubs and finery—something to smile about indulgently. Faithful efforts, earnest prayers, and intensive organization for the "Little Jewels," "Heralds," "Crusaders," "World-Wide Guild" have laid lasting foundations, but have not yet furnished a superstructure of a church missionary to a point of saturation, and to the point where it is taken for granted as essential, as are praying, personal work, and praise. If the impact of effort now being made through all of the above organizations, by means of literature, lectures, reading courses and study books could be focused upon the church through its missionary committee on which men functioned, far greater results would immediately be registered. This would kindle the flame of missionary zeal in the place where it really should ignite—in the whole church as a church. It would immediately give the cause the dignity it should demand, and the standing to which it will eventually expand.

Give missions a church standing and add to its momentum!

A Dedication at Shigei on the Inland Sea

FROM far-away Japan comes an inspiring account of the dedication of the first church building on the Inland Sea field, the Hakes Memorial given by a dear old lady one hundred years old.

The church stands on a commanding hill truly a light set on a hill whose rays shall penetrate the darkness far and near.

President Chiba preached the dedication sermon. The house was packed, all the front pews being full of the elite of the place from the mayor down. All wore full ceremonial dress to do honor to the occasion. Some not acquainted with the customs of Christian worship applauded the sermon and even the prayer.

Deacon Watanabe made a great speech. He told how the feeble beginnings of the work had been ridiculed, how Captain Bickel held on tenaciously, never letting go when once he took hold, never getting discouraged, never wavering; how one by one men and women were won from the different islands and the foundations laid. "But this day," said the deacon, "marks a new era in these islands. Hitherto we have had 'the little white ship' coming and going among us, but it never remained long in one place. We never knew in fact if it might not some day sail back to America. But now we have a building here on land, something that can never sail away, something that is all our own, that will remain among us, a permanent evidence of the new day of incoming Christian faith and conquest, forever carrying on the work so gloriously begun by Captain Bickel. Nor should we think of to-day as marking a goal reached. It is rather a beginning. To-day I share the Captain's faith; I see not this one church only in this one town;

I see Christian church spires rising in every village in all these islands, I hear the voice of song and praise ascending to our father, God, and his son, Jesus Christ, from every hamlet, from every household throughout this wide parish, the home of the Fukuin Maru. God speed the day of ultimate triumph."

Another inspiring address was given by Mr. Shibata. It had a lesson of faith in prayer for every one of us. He spoke of the fact that Shigei was the town of the old rick shaw puller whom Captain Bickel called "Old Pilgrims Progress."

He told us how the old man had urged the needs of Shigei time and time again, how he plead for a kindergarten and a church building in his native town and how he was told over and over again to wait. We put him off, said the speaker, telling him it was too soon to expect such things for Shigei, that there were a dozen or more places that must be provided for first. But we never discouraged old Ode San. He kept on praying that God would open a kindergarten in Shigei, and here we have it, not only a first-class kindergarten already running but a modern plant to accommodate it! He prayed for a church for Shigei and here it is, the first in the whole Inland Sea. Who can say in the face of such things that our God does not hear and answer prayer, even the prayer of an old, ignorant coolie? Prayer is a triangle. The petition and the answer meet in God. Here was an ignorant old coolie in Shigei waiting on God for a church building, and there was an old lady in Pasadena waiting on God for guidance in the use of $5,000. God brought these two together and helped the one answer the prayer of the other.

Northern Baptist Laymen's Council

Northern Baptist Laymen's Council gets under way at great meeting in Chicago. Out for $15,000,000 before May 1. To stress evangelism, stewardship and immediate enlistment for the present task.

THE churches do not need more males but more men—not more men but more man," said Judge Freeman of Denver in his opening address as temporary chairman of the first meeting of representatives of the laymen of some twenty-five states in Chicago, Jan. 20.

For years there has been felt a great need for more general use of laymen in the work of the societies, boards and in the Northern Baptist Convention itself. Gratifying evidence of a growing interest upon the part of an increasing number of men has been seen in recent years. The rank and file of the churches little realize the vast amount of time and money which is now being freely given by the large number of men on the various committees and boards of the denomination. In this Chicago meeting there were several from the coast who were under the necessity of giving more than a week of their time in order to be present to help in the plans to meet the present crisis and to perfect a permanent organization of the laymen of the convention.

The ideal for this new organization is to so correlate and unify all the existing groups of men in the Baptist brotherhoods, the organized classes and other local and state men's groups that from coast to coast and from the great metropolitan church to the isolated rural band of disciples the men may be set to a common task by speedy and effective methods of communication. We are all familiar with the fact that the women of the churches have for years been able to do that which is little short of marvelous because of their thorough and complete organization in all the states, associations and in the vast majority of local churches.

Opportunities Hitherto

It was pointed out that in most of the movements hitherto the laymen have been "opportunists"; that is, when the denomination was in debt the laymen organized and went after a million. A little later they went out for six millions. There is grave danger, it was pointed out, that now we will build up an organization to help meet the financial crisis which is upon us and then settle back into our old ways. Henry Bond of Brattleboro in addressing the men said, "We are trained in business methods. We ought to bring our training to bear upon the business problems our denomination must solve. But we must do more than that. We should become not simply financial agents in our local churches but we should be soul winners there. If this organization is to be worth while it must increase our joy as laymen in Christian service." Bringing an Old Testament expression down to date he said, "Lord, thou hast given us more joy than when the board of directors sit about the table with a good big balance on the right side of the balance sheet." Mr. W. G. Brimson also addressed the men briefly along similar lines. Dr. J. Y. Aitchison reported the action of the special meeting of the Southern California Convention, recently held to consider the denominational situation, and urged that some plan must be made which will reach down to every local church and give each church the real facts. He was confident that when the facts are understood the churches will, as usual, respond heartily.

In the afternoon, committees appointed in the morning reported, giving the outlines of a possible organization and also suggesting the task which lies before the laymen. The committee on aims and objectives reported that three things should be kept in the forefront in the new movement, namely: Evangelism—stressing the need of personal work on the part of men all the time and the use of gospel teams; stewardship—of time and property. Laymen must be taught that they owe their Lord not only a share of their income but also a portion of their time for personal work (an inquiry by the chairman revealed the fact that 85 per cent of the laymen at this meeting practice tithing); the enlistment of every layman and of all laymen organizations in an effort to meet the present crisis. This committee also urged that there should be established in every state a laymen's council to work in cooperation with the national council, that the state conventions should be urged to call special sessions where this is possible in order to forward the ends the laymen have in mind, and that all agencies of the denomination be used in this great effort.

Temporary Organizations

The committee on organization and finance reported the following temporary organization, the officers elected to serve until the Seattle convention when a permanent organization will be formed:

General Chairman, F. W. Freeman, of Denver;

Vice-Chairmen, Albert L. Scott, Boston; F. A. Grow, Chicago; L. A. Bodeway, Los Angeles.

Secretary, Frank C. Nichols, Minneapolis. Executive committee: F. W. Freeman, A. M. Harris, Albert L. Scott, H. M. Fillebrown, D. C. Shull, C. E. Milliken, F. A. Grow, F. H. Robinson, E. H. Rhoades, Jr.

It was further recommended that the executive committee shall have power to name additional members and to fill vacancies, and that all officers shall be ex-officio members of this committee.

It also recommended that the finance committee of the General Board of Promotion be asked to add $30,000 to its budget to provide for the work of this laymen's council from its organization until the Seattle Convention.

This report was adopted and the officers elected. Judge Freeman in announcing his acceptance of the position of general chairman spoke of a covenant made years ago with the Lord that if additional years of life were given him he would hold those years subject to the Lord's service, and that in fulfillment of that covenant he was undertaking this difficult task which his natural inclination bade him decline. Later the names of L. A. Bodeway, J. Foster Wilcox, John A. Brock and Mr. Davis, of Nebraska, were added to the above-named committee.

The evening session was devoted to a consideration of the financial objective which the laymen should place before themselves for the period ending April 30. Most careful consideration was given to the needs of all the great societies and of the schools, the present world financial situation, to the ability of the churches and to the call of God for service. Finally it was decided that the objective should be placed at $15,000,000, exclusive of the amount already paid in on pledges for the current year. The raising of this sum will enable the societies to pay all their debts, to maintain their work on the scale now projected, and will bring us to the new year with a fitting idea of our resources and of our competency to do the task to which God has called us, provided we have faith in God and use to the utmost the powers God has given us. A part of this sum, of course, will come from the payment of pledges already made as part of the New World Movement; the Continuation Campaign of the women is expected to yield $2,000,000 more, and the men will attempt to raise the balance. None of the business men present, devoted Baptists all of them, minimize the magnitude of the task, but all of them believe that if the ability of the Baptist laymen of the North is placed in God's hands, the objective can and will be reached.

With God We Can

"One of the things which has brought us to our present situation," said the General Chairman, "is that we thought the thing before us in the New World Movement was an easy thing to do and that we were going to do it in our own strength." That idea is gone. But the men do believe that God's strength will be added to their own when they do their best out of faith in him and love for men. And God willing, they propose so to work that the present crisis will be passed and so to organize that Northern Baptists will never again face a situation like the present. Every man in the churches will wish to have a part in a work begun in the spirit of this meeting and carried through with the principles which actuated the men who had part in it. The new laymen's organization must be a permanent body for the doing of the Lord's work through our churches. Detailed outlines of the plans in mind will go out to the churches at once.

A Useful Book

Parish Evangelism. by Frederick L. Fagley, New York; F. H. Revell Co. $1 net.

A plain sensible program for the church in which the pastor wishes to build up not an audience but a congregation. There is nothing sensational about it or very original. Here are worked out ideas tried by many men in many places. But the chapters are mighty suggestive to any man who himself is possessed of spiritual life and wishes to lead others into it. The author believes in setting the people to work in cooperation with the pastor and shows how it can be done. Chapters on the Evangelistic Committee, on Visitation, the Pastor's Training Class and on the Prayer Life of the People are particularly good.

The Washington Conference—Its Record of Achievement

By WILLIAM AXLING

THE obstacles and crises which have beset the conference have only served to inject iron into the wills of its leaders and stiffen their purpose to write a record of large achievement. Thus in spite of the setbacks which it has met along the way it moves on toward its close laden with epoch-making accomplishments.

A Landmark in Naval Limitations

The staggering blow administered by France shattered the conference's hopes of realizing all its goals relating to the limitation of naval armament. The delegates, however, simply took a fresh grip and have pulled out big results.

Nearly 2,000,000 tons of capital ship will be scrapped and the ratio of future strength as to these ships between the United States, Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy has been agreed upon. Moreover the size of capital ships has been limited to 35,000 tons and their guns to sixteen-inch calibre. The size of cruisers has been fixed at a limit of 10,000 tons and they are allowed to carry nothing larger than eight-inch guns. Aircraft carriers have been limited to 27,000 tons; and their ratio between the nations has been fixed. Their guns also have been limited to eight inches.

Although France blocked the limitation of submarines, the conference pulled the teeth of this demon of the sea by outlawing it as a weapon of war against merchant and passenger shipping and by making the violation of submarine regulations an act of piracy. The use of asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases in war has been banned. Provision has been made for a future conference to deal with aerial warfare and such practices as that of bombing hospitals and unfortified towns.

A scrutiny of the above actions will show that not only has the conference succeeded in bringing about a vast reduction in the number of capital ships of the nations concerned and a ten-year holiday in their building, but it has brought an end to the mad race for naval construction, by limiting the size of both capital ships and auxiliary craft. This will act directly in a far reaching reduction of back-breaking taxation.

The temporary set-back caused by France's position on the submarine question has been circumvented by making them useless as a weapon for offensive warfare, since in the last war their offensive power was effective only against unarmed and unarmored merchant vessels.

England has definitely abandoned her age-long claim to the right of maintaining a navy equal to twice the size of that of any other nation by agreeing to an equality with America in the tonnage of capital ships and aircraft carriers. The inhuman practices of warfare resorted to by Germany through her barbarous use of the submarines, poisonous gases, and the aerial craft have been banned as between the nations represented in this conference, and invitations have been extended to the non-cooperating nations to fall into line and make these regulations amendments to international law. These agreements regarding capital ship tonnage, a naval holiday, the submarine use, the tonnage of auxiliary ships and aircraft carriers and the ban on the use of poisonous gases constitute a mighty stride toward world peace.

Problems of the Pacific

The Four Power Peace Pact, providing for consultation between America, England, France, and Japan in case of a threatened breach of peace in the Pacific, puts a barrier in the way of trouble arising in this vast section of the world and inaugurates there a new era of good will.

The Anglo-Japanese alliance, which was more and more functioning as an irritant in Anglo-American relations has been scrapped. Moreover this delicate feat was accomplished without embarrassment to England or Japan—the nations immediately concerned—and without compromising America in her relations to either of them. This in itself is a great diplomatic victory. As one of the by-products of the conference the Yap controversy between America and Japan has been settled to the complete satisfaction of both nations.

By an agreement between America and Japan to maintain the status quo as to naval bases and fortifications in the Pacific another barrier to good-will between these two nations has been destroyed. This will enable them to devote their thoughts and energies to pursuits of peace and mutual helpfulness in that section of the world rather than to preparation for war and mutual destruction.

But better than treaties and agreements is the larger understanding that exists today between America and Japan as a result of this conference. For more than two months the representatives of these two nations have been sitting around the conference table and thinking aloud. Controversial issues have been thrashed out. They now understand each other as they never have. In heart to heart conversations they have made known to each other their problems, policies, and purposes. This has enabled America and Japan to settle their decade-long differences and enter upon a new era of mutual understanding and friendly cooperation.

China's New Charter of Rights

China's demand have not all been granted. Enough has been done by the conference, however, to usher this republic across the Pacific out into a new destiny.

At the top stand Mr. Root's four principles by which the nations assure China of, "protection from acts in derogation of her sovereignty, independence and administrative autonomy." They also provide "that there shall be a careful observance of the principles of free and equal opportunities in matters relating to China" and a strict observance of the "open door."

At China's request the 150 post offices within her borders under the control and administration of outside nations will all be closed by Jan. 1, 1923. Restitution is also to be made to China of full administrative independence of all radio and telegraphic stations on her soil.

China made a strong plea on the conference floor for extra-territoriality, tariff autonomy and the withdrawal of all foreign troops from her domains. In response the conference has made provision for an international commission of jurists—one of which shall be a Chinese—to investigate China's judicial system and advise the powers if she is ready to have the rights of extra-territoriality relinquished.

An extended study of the tariff situation led the conference to deny China's request for tariff autonomy. It, however, granted an increase in her tariff rate that will bring in almost immediately an additional annual revenue of $46,000,000. It also made provision to set in motion machinery for further increases when China shall have carried out necessary reforms in her tariff administration.

The conference approved, in principle, the matter of withdrawing foreign troops from Chinese territory and made provisions by which—at China's request—the foreign ambassadors at Peking shall investigate as to when it shall be practicable to actually carry this into execution.

The conference has passed resolutions providing for China's neutrality in case of a war in which she is not a party. The nations have also agreed not to enter into treaties concerning China without consulting her and giving her an opportunity to participate.

China has expressed disappointment that her "ten points" have not been granted in toto. Impartial observers believe, however, that China has made tremendous headway in getting her rights recognized and remedial measures started.

Certain it is that the conscience of the nations is reasserting itself. They see the error of their ways and stand ready to help China climb the upward path. So sympathetic and cordial has been the attitude toward her that if her domestic conditions had been less chaotic China would doubtless have received almost everything she asked for from this conference. It has made it clear to China, however, that she must herself put her hands to the plow and dig out her own destiny. The attitude of the nations is not only "China for the Chinese" but the building of a new China by the Chinese. Senator Underwood voiced the feeling of all when he said, "When China cleans house, establishes a parliamentary government in all her provinces and dispenses with the military control that now exists in many parts of her republic, she may hope to realize the ideals of sovereignty to which she is aspiring."

Unsettled Questions

The Shantung issue is not directly a part of the conference program, yet its solution is closely related to the conference's goals. There is every indication that the long drawn-out negotiations between the Chinese and Japanese delegations in regard to this question will result in a mutually happy agreement. The crux of the difficulty in getting together is still the disposition of the Kiaochow-Tsinanfu Railroad. China offers to make a cash payment for this road and the appurtenant properties or to make deferred payments in Chinese treasury notes or in notes of the Chinese bankers' union extending over twelve years with the option of paying in full at the end of three years. China also agrees to employ a Japanese chief engineer so as to safeguard Japan's interest in the road. Japan's counter-proposal is that China secure a loan from Japanese capitalists with which to pay for this road, this loan to run for fifteen years with the option of paying it all off after five years. She also asks China to employ a Japanese traffic manager and a Japanese accountant on the road until such time as China makes full payment for the same.

The Japanese objection to the cash payment proposition is that China does not have the funds in hand. She would have to raise them by means of an anti-Japanese campaign, a popular agitation which would immeasurably injure Japan's standing and the relations between these two nations. Her objection to accepting Chinese treasury notes is based on their instability and questionable value. Her request that Japanese experts be employed on the railroad during the period of the loan is to safeguard her investment and this, she contends, is in accord with the custom which prevails everywhere throughout China where foreign money is invested in Chinese railroads. Japan is ready to turn over at once the road in full title to China but wants to maintain some kind of a contract with it for at least five years. This will enable the 20,000 Japanese who have settled in Shantung and invested $65,000,000 there, with the prospect that Japan would retain at least a 50 per cent interest in the railroad, an opportunity to make readjustments that will save them from too great financial losses. She fears, moreover, that if she severs all connection with the road at once her nationals in Shantung would find it difficult to get equal treatment in rates and service.

In these Shantung negotiations Japan has agreed to give up the lease which she secured from Germany of Kiaochow, all public properties in Kiaochow, other properties which came to her from Germany and upon which Germany had spent millions of marks and upon which Japan herself has also expended much. She has agreed to turn this all over to China without any recompense. More than that, she offers to turn over without compensation wharves and warehouses valued at 60,000,000 gold marks. She asks for no exclusive or international settlement at Tientsin. She simply requests China to make this an open port for foreign commerce. She has agreed to withdraw forthwith her troops that have been stationed as railroad guards in Shantung. In the face of these concessions it seems incredible that there should be a failure to reach an agreement regarding the railroad.

Japan's return of Shantung to China will be followed by England's restoration of Wei Hei Wei and France's surrender of the leasehold of Kwang Chowan. "Spheres of influence" on the part of other nations in China will be abolished. The game of grab tied up with exploiting concessions will be condemned. China will be encouraged to look the world in the face and say that her soul is her own.

Siberia is on the agenda and is still to be dealt with. It seems probable that a renewed declaration by Japan of her purpose to withdraw her troops from that territory as soon as a stable government is established and pledging herself to respect the territorial and political integrity of Russia will be accepted by the conference at its face value. This will then be reinforced by an agreement among the nations on Mr. Hughes' "moral trusteeship" doctrine and providing for equal trade opportunity for all.

It is difficult to predict just what pronouncement the conference will make on the Manchurian and Eastern Chinese railroad problems. Much will doubtless depend on the character of the statement which Japan is expected to make to the delegates regarding the notorious "twenty-one demands."

A Closing Summary

Many prophesied that England's attitude in this conference would be such as to make team work between her and America most difficult. The exact opposite has been the case. Great Britain's attitude and spirit has been shot through with a high idealism and at each stage of the conference's work the two great English-speaking branches of the family of nations have worked heart to heart and shoulder to shoulder. Good-will between England and America has consequently been greatly increased and Anglo-American ties tremendously tightened.

France, on the other hand, has bitterly disappointed her friends. When Premier Briand made his dramatic plea against the limitation of land armaments everyone said it was a case of nerves. The tragedy of the past years is still resting like a pall upon her. Her wounds are still fresh. Let sympathy and patience abound. When, however, France followed this up with a temporary demand for ten new capital ships and blocked the limitation of submarines and auxiliary naval craft by signifying her intention to embark on a huge program of expansion of these weapons of war, sympathy turned to surprise and patience to cutting censure. France's loss of prestige, sympathy and good will has been inestimable, and only an early repentance and reversal of her policies both on sea and land can save her from absolute isolation from her erstwhile allies.

Japan has been a disappointment only to her foes. During pre-conference days it was freely predicted that France and America would in every case see things eye to eye, while Japan and America would find themselves at opposite poles. Here a great surprise was sprung on those who thought they knew the line-up of the nations. France has seemed blinded by a sort of militarism and has blocked America's proposal at every turn, while Japan has seemed to glory in America's idealism and lined up straight and strong behind her peace program. Undoubtedly Japan has been seeing visions these months. It will be very strange indeed if this conference does not mark Japan's about-face from the ways of war to the paths of peace.

China has shown up in this conference in a new role. Instead of continuing to be an opportunist in international politics and endeavoring to attain her end by playing one nation off against another she has come out with a constructive straightforward program and fought for it on its merits against all comers. She has made her appeal not to the rivalry and prejudice existing between nations but to the right and justice of her case. And the exploiting nations of the West that for four score of years have selfishly forced their will on China have manifested a sincere purpose to give China a chance.

America has come to herself. She has come out from under the spell of self-centeredness and self-sufficiency that for a season possessed her soul. Again she has taken the world into her heart, made its burdens her burdens and marched up to take her place at the head of the line of the builders of a new world. Many have been the evidences that this reappearance of America on the firing line of world reconstruction has inspired world leaders with a new hope.

Aside from agreements reached and treaties signed this conference has put international cooperation on the map. It has established the principle of limited armament. It has set a precedent of substituting consultation in international affairs for conflict. It has erected high barriers against the possibility of war between the four great powers that dominate the Pacific. It has paved the way for a better understanding between nations East and West. It has demonstrated the power of the people and the efficiency of open diplomacy. It has put the dynamic of faith behind international agreements instead of force. It has made the calling of similar Conferences inevitable. It has established cordiality as the big word among the nations and has made the path of peace a broader and a safer highway for humanity. Here is a story of progress in the ironing out of international problems unparalleled in ancient or modern history.

"DON'TS" FOR FUNDAMENTALISTS

I am vitally interested in the preservation of the integrity of the Scriptures in the teaching of our Baptist churches and have not hesitated to take a public stand in defense of the Fundamentalist movement; but in the crisis that we are facing as a denomination I would suggest a few "don'ts" for Fundamentalists:

1. Don't denounce our Baptist publications for striving to give a fair presentation to both sides of a question.
2. Don't class all men as heretics who do not agree with you in interpretation of Scripture.
3. Don't insist on a Fundamentalist pre-convention if the same messages can be brought in the regular sessions of our Northern Baptist Convention when more of the brethren are present.
4. Don't harshly criticize our schools and colleges until you have definite cases of information.
5. Don't discard our missionary societies and Board of Promotion until you have some better method to suggest of carrying on the work.
6. Don't dodge your responsibility to God and your denomination by mistakes that the Inter-church Movement may have made.
7. Don't forget to pray that the next meeting of our Northern Baptist Convention be the sweetest and most inspirational that we have ever known.
8. Don't forget that the best argument for Fundamentalism is your transformed life and Spirit-filled preaching.

May I suggest that there might be just as many "Don'ts" for many who are not professedly Fundamentalists.

THE RURAL PASTOR

I have followed with great interest and anticipation the several articles in THE BAPTIST of late dealing with the rural church. I take for granted that it is not only the church of the open country, but of the small village as well. The writer of Dec. 17 calls himself a country pastor. I am one ahead, for I call myself the rural pastor.

From this angle I have drawn eleven years of experience that I would not sell, providing I could, for thousands of dollars. God bless the years of my past experience on rural fields. I have baptized the young and the old, I have visited the sick and buried the dead, I have filled silo, thrashed grain, cut wood, butchered pigs, milked cows and prayed with sturdy farmers who wouldn't say, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

It is true that the problems are many. We are in the wake of the great world war, it has left us more or less covetous and greedy, and the very air that we breathe is permeated with that uneasy, distrustful, longing spirit. It is not only enclosed within the city walls; it has crossed the plain and valley and it has lodged in the village as well. It's against this spirit and this unrest that we must line up our forces.

Allow me to tell how we are doing things at Verona, situated ten miles from Madison, with a population of 500, of which the greater part is foreign born, and four churches—Lutheran, Catholic, Methodist and Baptist—with 110 members.

On the first Saturday of the month the Crusaders meet for mission-study program and refreshments. On the second Tuesday the mixed Guild meets for mission-study program; refreshments, social hour, and has an attendance from forty to seventy. On the third Thursday the Ladies' Union meets for mission-study program, refreshments, with an attendance from 150 to 200.

Let me lead you into the auditorium of the church for one Sunday only. It is the first Sunday of the New Year with the thermometer around the zero mark. About seventy-five present, sermon on "Leaving Egypt," Sunday-school lesson following.

At 7:15, forty young people are ready for young people's meeting, topic on "The Person of Christ," and for forty minutes we study and sing and talk. At eight we open the regular gospel service with eighty present and some have come in from four miles, and as we close the day and clasp hands we thank God for the rural church.

Now how do we do it? Not with brass bands or movies, but by working, praying, calling and most of all by exalting the "Man of Galilee" and as I close this article there is looking down from the wall at my left the face of him who said, "Go and teach the farmer to love me and lo I am with you always."

EGOISM

In your paper of Dec. 17 is a statement referring to Dr. Barnes as follows:

"Another fact in Dr. Barnes' career merits special mention. He holds the distinction, rare in any denomination, of having had two pastorates with the same church."

Now, if you would "bear with me a little in my folly," I would state a bit of my history as pastor of churches, both in towns and country fields, in West Virginia, for fifty-nine years.

I was pastor of Mill Brook Church twice; of Anwell twice; of Jennette twice; of Meadow Grove twice; of Minie Bell, my home church, four times, and of Montgomery twice. I was also pastor of Big Sewell Church twice, eleven years each time.

I am now eighty-one years old, and am retired from active service, but my reminiscences of the pleasant relationship with twenty-one churches as pastor affords me very great pleasure, and in mind and good wishes, I am still with them.

International Uniform Lesson for February 11

ELISHA AND THE SHUNAMMITE WOMAN
2 Kings 4:8-37. Golden Text: John 5:25

Setting

About five years have passed since the events of the last lesson, during which time there is the record of Elisha purifying the poisonous spring at Jericho, multiplying the widow's cruise of oil, calling down punishment upon the mocking boys at Bethel. While there is not the rugged dramatic Elijah tinge to his life, yet he is a worthy successor to the prophet in that he builds surely upon the foundations laid. He was a man of the people, dwelling among them, while Elijah was a man of the solitudes, coming to human habitations only when there was urgent need. Shunem, now called Solem, is three miles north of Jezreel, forty miles from Jerusalem, fifteen miles from Mt. Carmel, situated on the road from Gilgal to Mount Carmel, where was the famous sanctuary. Naturally Elijah traveled often along this road.

Lesson Story

Naturally, too, that a kind-hearted woman of wealth, living at Shunem, should say, "let us make a little chamber on the wall: and let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a seat, and a candlestick." Thus was the prophet's chamber added to the Shunammite's house, that Elisha might have a stopping place on the long journey. Because of Elisha's gratitude a child was given to the childless Shunammite woman, and this boy it was who several years later, went into his father's fields on a hot day and had a sun-stroke. The father, helpless, ordered him carried in to his mother and in her arms he died at noon. There was none of the customary wailing. Instead she carried the boy's body to the room of the man of God, laid him upon the bed, then she went to her husband and asked for a servant and an ass that she might speed to the man of God. Taking a servant and an animal out of the field when it was neither a holy day nor the Sabbath surprised the man, but he complied. When Elisha recognized her from afar, he sent his servant Gehazi to meet her, but she went on to Elisha, threw herself at his feet and persuaded him to come home with her. When Elisha was come to the house he went in and shut the door and prayed unto Jehovah. "And he went up and lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands; and he stretched himself upon him: and the flesh of the child waxed warm."

Leading Thoughts

1. "As ye have therefore opportunity do good unto all men."
2. A substitute cannot do your work. Gehazi was a good servant, but he could not take the place of Elisha.
3. Persistence pays. The Shunammite woman knew what she wanted; she persisted in insisting that Elisha must come.
4. A purposeful life means results. The Shunammite woman seized her opportunity to do good to Elisha and was rewarded with a son. She wasted no time in lamenting his death, but sped to the one in whom she had faith and her son lived again.

THE Colorado National Bank of Denver recently advertised offering a prize for the best household budget submitted. This prize was won by Mrs. Robert Jones, a member of one of our Baptist churches, whose budget included one-tenth for kingdom expenses. The chairman of the board of trustees of the bank and the advertising manager sent for her and handed her the check in person saying that they wanted to see a woman who actually practised that principle and was successful.

The Wheelbarrow That Ran Over My Pocketbook

ONCE upon a time
There was a Very Quaint Lovely Girl.
And she was packing up
To go away to school.

$
She took all she would Need: one pair of tiny satin
Slippers; one pair of quilted
Trousers; one wadded
Jacket; one pair of chop-Sticks; and what more Could any girl possibly Need

At this new-fangled
"Thing—called—a—school?"

$
Her bundle balanced
One side of the wheelbarrow
As she squatted primly
On the other side.
All the neighbors screamed
Enviously: "Good luck! Go Slowly! Slowly!
Store your stomach with Big wisdom!"
For this was an Event!
Nobody in all that Village
Had ever before gone to a
"Thing—called—a—school."
$
Her father trundled the Wheelbarrow.
The wheelbarrow jolted the Daughter.
The home valley turned into
An unknown hill.
The hill dipped into another valley.
Night came.

$
And in the noisy inn
Everyone looked at her Spellbound.
While news spread from Lip to lip;
"Of all amazingness! a Female actually seeking
To store
Her stomach with knowledge!"

$
"It can't be done!"
Said the village papas.
"Just suppose it could!"
Twittered the little females poking
Their yellow faces through the door Wistfully.

$
Morning came.
More hills. More valleys.
More perspiration on the father's brow.
More jolting of the daughter.
Another night.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Another inn.
Another chorus of "Impossibles!"

$
Another morning.
And the daughter aches.
The father aches.
Even the wheelbarrow aches. •
But always this Baptist "Thing—called—a—School" Beckons!
Another night.

$
Another morning.
A straight road,
And by and by
A—building.
The Building!

The father wipes his brow.
The daughter slides off the wheelbarrow
And follows him demurely Indoors.

$
Of all places in the world
She feels in her bones
She could love
This best.
Hadt she been Waiting
And praying
For years?
And now dreams came true,
For here was
Her "Thing—called—a—school!"

$
She bowed and bowed and Bowed
To the Glorious Lady.
Her father bowed and bowed and Bowed
To the Glorious Lady.
"Here we are!"
He cried with polite pride,
"Four days have I
Trundled
This troublesome female,
So now honorably
Stuff her full of knowledge."

$
But the Glorious Lady
Honorably couldn't!
Tearful wetness
Dripped
From her eyes as
She showed the Amazing
Crowdedness
Of that building.
Not another inch to Spare.
For they had squeezed and squeezed
And squeezed
And kept on squeezing
To get others in, earlier,
Until not another little
Female
Could possibly be squeezed
Inside that school-room
Or that dining-room
Or that sleeping room.

$
"But I trundled her
Up-hill
And down hill
Four weary days!"
Quoth the unbelieving Parent.
As if somehow
Or other
Four days could make a room!

$
"I know! Oh, I know!"
Sighed the Glorious Lady
Ingloriously.
"But you see for Yourself the impossibility."
"Next year maybe—"

§

"But here I miserably am Now!"
Wailed the astounded
Female.
"Couldn't I please be tucked In somewhere?"

§

"Alas, we've tucked our last Tuck,
I fear, dear child,"
Sobbed the Glorious One
Yet more ingloriously.
"Next year maybe
Baptist pocketbooks will Leak
Enough to add a wing
To our school.
We've written.
We've waited.
We've prayed.
So now all we can do is
To write again
And wait again
And pray again.
But it doesn't help you
Now, does it?"

§

"Woe is me!" wept
The would-be scholar
Climbing back onto the dismal
Wheelbarrow.

"I am undone!" groaned
The crushed parent as he trundled
Her away.
"I am heartbroken!"
Gasped the anguished teacher.
"Dear God,
How long must we
Keep on waiting?
And turning Thy children Away?"

§

And God,
Who must answer prayers like that Through Baptists like me,
Whispered gently:
"How much longer
Will you keep Me
Waiting? Not only Chinese girls
But—Me?"

§

Then somehow or other
He graciously permitted
That wheelbarrow to be Trundled
Right over my pocketbook,
And what did not
Leak out
I took out
And gave joyfully to
The Continuation Fund.

§

For how could I Willingly
Let that blessed child
Be trundled home
Through
Those scoffing villages
Again:
"Didn't we prophecy Impossibility?
Bah!
You tried to stuff us with
A fairy tale.
We knew better!
Education for GIRLS?
Ha! Ha!"

§

I shuddered to think what
Her answer
Would be: "Oh,
There's the school, all right,
And there's education, all right,
And lots of other girls learning, all right.
But no room for miserable me.
For
Those honorable over-the-ocean
Baptists are Poor.
Suddenly very poor.
All of them? I don't know—
Maybe no rice for their rice-bowls,
No tea for their cups,
No wadded garments for winter:
Nothing.
So I miserably
Wait.
Wait for cash to build that school Bigger."

§

It was then that
I looked
At my larder
At my wardrobe
At my pocketbook.
And what did not
Leak out
I took out—
Gladly!

fully and positively and with an adorable twinkle in his eye: "Peggy Hathaway, do you know what a poet is?"

"They're supposed to rhyme things," I answered.

"Get the dictionary," he ordered, so
Bill and I staggered over with Webster's Unabridged, while Uncletim turned the pages to look up poet, the two of us hanging over his shoulder. Presently he pointed out the Greek word from which "poet" is taken, and what do you suppose? Absolutely all it said there after that Greek word poetas was the one English word: maker.

"That's what a poet is, Peggy, he's a maker. And it seems to me you're a maker, my dear, a maker of a foot of dimes! Now a verse is all very well in its way: I suppose several hundred Young Reserves would have read your verses and said: 'Mercy on what a very poor poem,
I could do lots better than that myself!'
But of course the contest was closed, so it would have been too late for them to compete. But surely you see, Peggy, that that there's truer poetry in that foot of

Are You a Maker?

By "PEGGY."

BILL and I got desperately interested in the poem contest we Young Reserves have just had—I guess you have already read the two pages of verses printed last week in the Chimney Corner, and no doubt many of you who were just longing to compete were really in the same boat with Bill and myself.
We just couldn't rhyme the things we were aching to say! My wastebasket is full of poems that "have no tails to them," as my little brother Timothy says, meaning they never were properly finished! One of the best ones was:

"There was a maiden poor and dingy—
You might have thought she would be stingy,

But no indeed! many a time

She saved a quarter and saved a dime—"

and that's as far as the verse went, because I simply couldn't make a sensible rhyme telling how terribly interested my maiden was in this Continuation Campaign, or how she really did save those quarters and dimes. It was "all in my mind," but it wouldn't get itself put on paper!

"I guess that man was right who said
'poets are born, not made,'" I sighed.

And my darling Uncletim laid down his newspaper and sighed like a regular walrus, imitating me: "Break it gently," he groaned, "are you trying to be a poet?"

"I am!" I sighed, and handed over the first four lines.

"Um-m!" he grunted, "and who is this 'maiden poor and dingy?'"

"Well, it's a secret," I said, "but I don't mind telling you; She's supposed to be me, Peggy! Of course I'm sort of poor and I just put in the 'dingy' because I wanted it to rhyme with stingy.
I guess I really do get dingy sometimes."

"You look a bit dingy around the corners of your mouth this minute," he laughed. "Tell me more about the deeds of this maiden poor-and-sort-of-dingy."

"Well, you see, I thought maybe I could tell how I earned and saved a foot of dimes, the way all of us Baptist children are to do this winter. I had the greatest fun in the world doing it, and I thought if I would only tell the other Young Reserves then they could get busy, too. But I just can't be a poet! I can't!"

"Nonsense!" said my Uncletim cheer-

THE judges wish to announce that they have awarded the prize (one year's subscription to "Everyland") to Claire Jacobs, 926
McClelland Ave., Salt Lake City,
Utah. I imagine they had a hard time selecting the best, there were so many good ones, but several verses were sent in by those who wrote: "I am over 17, or over 20, etc., so am perhaps too old to compete for the prize, but was interested in the contest so am sending

CHRISTIAN PRINCIPLES IN BUYING AND SELLING

Prov. 20:10; Amos 8:4-6; Luke 6:38

"Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over, shall they give into your bosom. For with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again."

1. A Definition. From the poorest to the wealthiest, we are engaged in the business of buying and selling, according to capital in hand. What are the principles which should govern these transactions? The answer must be found in the interpretation and application of the principles of Jesus to modern life. We must answer the question as to whether or not the principles enunciated by the Master nearly 2,000 years ago can be applied to the affairs of life in the twentieth century. Again, the Christian necessarily deals with others who make no profession whatever toward Christianity. What should be the Christian's attitude in such dealings? Should he attempt to meet the chicanery of the other fellow in driving a bargain? Some men do.

2. A Practical Test. The topic in hand must be taken from the realm of abstract theory and brought to the front in everyday life—in all our dealings with the groceryman, the milkman, the dry goods merchant, the real estate man, etc. It is generally conceded that one should have a fair return on investments. What and how much should it be? A Christian buys a piece of real estate for a certain amount, which from his point of view is entirely reasonable. A combination of circumstances makes it possible for him to sell the same piece of property to his neighbor who is a member of the same church, for practically twice what he gave for it. He did not create this extra amount, neither did his money earn it on a legitimate interest basis. Yet, the man takes it and exultantly reports how much he "cleaned up" on the deal. Is this Christian? Did the man have a right to so take advantage of his fellow Christian and neighbor?

3. The Near-Profitier. Of course, we howl loudly at the other fellow who corners on eggs or meat. What about the Christian who turns his money over to brokers who force the "corner," brings in great return on the investment, over which the Christian greatly rejoices? Is he a Christian when he accepts such ill-gotten returns? Think of the many poor people who have been compelled to suffer. The other day a respectable and law-abiding citizen said to me: "Do you ever gamble?" "No," I replied. Then he said: "I never gamble, but I had a tip the other day that such and such stock would be forced upward. I bought, and the stock has now advanced about ten points." Before this conversation, I had watched the face of this man as he scanned the market report of the daily paper. When he came to "his" stock, a broad grin moved across his face, in fact somewhat disturbing a lusty beard. Could such a transaction be called gambling, or profiteering? Was this man a gambler?

4. "Me and Thou." Everybody is a little curious but me and thou, and thou art a little sometimes. How exceedingly hard it is to apply to our own lives, the rules we would force our neighbors and friends to live by! Young people must study life in all of its relations. Above all, they must let the Christ come in. Around him all life's activities should center. With such ideals, the young Christian will not go very far astray.

Secretary T. C. Gardner's report to Texas Baptists showed 136 training schools had been conducted during the year; 11,557 B. Y. P. U. diplomas issued. There are now 2,300 Baptist Young People's Unions in the state, 225 of these being A-1 (standard).

Journal Reports

DEAR DR. WHITE:

At the last Board meeting you suggested that I write you a few words about my method of introducing THE BAPTIST to our young people. The method employed is that of a "Journal Report" at each B. Y. P. U. meeting. Each week there is assigned to some young person the task of selecting what he considers the best current or special article in THE BAPTIST. A definite young person is assigned to make the report each week, and assignments are made a few weeks in advance. The young person who is to report at a given meeting is expected to look through the copy of THE BAPTIST for the preceding week, and select the article or news item he desires to tell about at the meeting. In the course of a few months all the young people willing to report have looked through the paper and become acquainted with it, and in many cases have become interested. Time and again our young people have made enthusiastic "Journal Reports" in which they have said, "We did not know there was so much interesting reading in THE BAPTIST." Many of these young people have become regular readers of our denominational paper, through the making of these "Journal Reports." Incidentally THE BAPTIST is before the thought of all the young people every Sunday in an interesting and effective manner, and ceases to be a stranger to our B. Y. P. U.'ers. This method of making "Journal Reports" is not only instructive and informing to the young people, and a sort of advertising for THE BAPTIST, but it also adds variety to the Young People's meeting, and gives an opportunity for a larger number of young people to take part. Few young people decline to make "Journal Reports." The time for the reports is limited to five minutes. I should like to see this method, which I have seen work so well over a period of months, tried out by other young people's organizations, to see if it will help us in our desire to increase the interest of our young people in denominational objectives.

Talking Points About the Big Baptist Young People's Convention

Concept of Program for St. Paul Convention

June 28-July 2

The keynote for the St. Paul Convention as adopted by the program committee is "Forward With Christ."

On the first day of the convention the addresses will center around the idea of study, or "Forward With Christ" in our study life.

On the second day addresses will center around stewardship, or "Forward With Christ" in the giving of our money.

The third day will center around Bible study and prayer, or "Forward With Christ" in our devotional life.

The Sunday afternoon program will deal with the matter of life service, or "Forward With Christ" in the giving of lives.

The closing address of the convention will be the coronation address. The idea being that since we have agreed to go forward in these various phases of life activities, we will go out to crown Him Lord of all in our lives.

Program Acceptances

DR. W. S. ABERNETHY, pastor of Calvary Church, Washington, D. C., will conduct the quiet half-hours of the convention. He will also deliver the great life work address on Sunday afternoon, July 2.

MISS JESSIE BURRELL, the teacher of the famous Burrall class and professor of religious education in Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., will conduct one conference on tithing and stewardship. She will also deliver an address on this subject before the convention proper.

REV. BERNARD CLAUSEN, pastor of the great First Church, Syracuse, N. Y., will deliver one address before the convention. Mr. Clausen is a young man about twenty-nine years of age and is very popular with young people.

REV. SUMNER R. VINTON, of the General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention, will give three of his famous illustrated lectures, presenting the missionary program for all parts of the world.

REV. CARLETON W. ATWATER will deliver the president's address which will be in line with the keynote of the convention, "Forward With Christ."

MISS EDNA GEISTER, famous social and recreational expert will conduct two conferences on this subject.

MISS VERA RICE, a great leader among young people, will conduct two conferences on "Local Organization and Operation."

MR. THOMAS RICHES, of Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, one of the leading young people's workers in Canada, will conduct two conferences on "City Union and Associational Organization and Operation."

MR. M. M. MCGORRILL, director of the young people's division of the American Baptist Publication Society, will conduct two conferences on "Intermediate Organization and Activities."

MISS HELEN CRISSMAN, of the department of missionary education of the Northern Baptist Convention, will conduct two conferences on "Missions." Miss Crissman is perhaps the leading young woman in North America in this line of work.

Conferences will also be conducted on "Junior Activities" and "Church Vacation Schools."

Invitation has been extended to Dr. F. E. Taylor, pastor the great First Church, Indianapolis, Ind., to conduct two conferences on "The Evangelism of Youth," and to deliver the "Coronation Address," closing the convention.

Watch the Young People's Page of THE BAPTIST and the columns of "Young People" for announcements from time to time about the convention.

We Study That We May Serve

The following lines will indicate how the newly planned Christian Culture Course is being received.

COLORADO: L. I. Hansen writes: "I am mighty glad to see the two B. Y. P. U. leaflets, B. Y. P. U. Round Table and Christian Culture Course. They are needed just now. Send me 300 copies each."

NORTH DAKOTA: Rev. E. Wiese says: "Send me 75 B. Y. P. U. Round Table and 100 Christian Culture Course Outlines."

ILLINOIS: L. H. Koehler, state director of young people's work: "Your announcement concerning the Christian Culture

TO OUR BAPTIST PASTORS, MY ELDER BROTHERS:

The story of the young people's pages of this paper, is the story of the service we are being called upon to render to the young people of the denomination.

STEWARDSHIP

We have before us an exact daily report of leaflet material furnished to the constituency of the Northern Baptist Convention. It will perhaps interest you. Holiday mailings from Dec. 12-Dec. 31, amounted to 25,304 leaflets. Note the daily record: for Jan. 3, 6,466; 4, 5,262; 5, 5,474; 6, 5,442; 7, 17,18; 9, 4,408; 10, 3,925; 11, 4,782; 12, 2,678; 13, 47,315. At this writing, January 14, we have dozens of orders on hand, unfilled. Practically all of the above material was sent out on request.

EVANGELISM

There is all over the territory a new interest in real evangelism. Thousands of young people are taking seriously the 1921-1922 slogan, "Each one win one." We have sent out on request many thousands of copies of the leaflet "Soul-Winning," by Dr. F. E. Taylor. We plead a larger sympathy on the part of the pastors to and for these young people who are turning to the churches in large numbers, ready to give the best they have for their Master.

STUDY

The motto of our Baptist young people is, "We Study that we may Serve." There is unquestionably a new interest and wide-spread enthusiasm for study on the part of the young people. We most humbly plead with our devoted pastors everywhere to capitalize this new interest. An intelligent body of young people, means a responsive body, to all the needs of our beloved denomination.

AND FINALLY MY BRETHREN

We received for December, on account of the New World Movement, $304.63; for January, $202.13. These figures, on the basis of the very small budget of $15,000 tell their own story. The secretary of each and every board connected with the Northern Baptist Convention could write the same pathetic story. Our needs are the same. The pastors and churches are demanding an ever-increasing service of us, and we are trying to give it. But, unless the pastors and churches everywhere come to our rescue with greatly increased receipts all of us face disaster. We serve not ourselves but you. In this hour of need, the faith of other days is still with us. Because of our confidence in our great Baptist brotherhood, and in our God, we face the future with hope. Sometimes we are forced to ask the question, "How Long?"

JAMES ASA WHITE,
General Secretary.

received my O. K. Please send me 300 copies. Now, let's go!"

NEW YORK: Miss Vivian Beard, director of religious education for Buffalo: "Kindly send me at once 1,000 copies of the Christian Culture Course and 2,000 copies of B. Y. P. U. Round Table. These will be put into the hands of the fifty young people's societies which compose the Baptist Young People's Association of Buffalo."

NEW JERSEY: O. F. Laegeler, superintendent of Sunday school and young people's work: "Will you send me about 500 copies of the B. Y. P. U. Round Table for use in conferences and discussions in our young people's organizations? Also, 500 copies of the Christian Culture Course."

MICHIGAN: A. V. Allen, director of religious education for Detroit: "Please send 200 copies each of the Christian Culture Course and B. Y. P. U. Round Table leaflets. I want to make immediate use of them. At our last rally I spoke on Christian Culture Course and we anticipate classes in a number of unions."

OHIO: Wilson A. Holmes, director of religious education for the state: "I want to congratulate you on the Christian Culture Course. I shall do all I can to push this work among our young people. Please send me 500 copies. The Round Table leaflet is fine. I could use 1,000 of these, or if I am asking too much, send me as many as you can. I should like to use them in conferences with groups of workers."

IOWA: Miss Mate Goodell writes: "We want to use the Round Table leaflets in our spring rallies as well as the assembly next summer, and we feel that we should have at least 1,000 of them. We should also have 500 of the Christian Culture Course outlines, as we hope to put strong emphasis on these courses in spring rallies."

PENNSYLVANIA: P. S. Roberts writes: "I am organizing four study classes in the B. Y. P. U. of different churches. I would like you to send me outline. Have been out of the work for the last two years and have lost track of the work. But I am back in it up to my neck. I have this end of Pittsburgh Association well organized. We have in our seven societies an average attendance of fifty-two present on Sunday evening. We are in for special study and definite work. Please give me this information as soon as possible."

"In Christ there is no east nor west,
In him no south nor north,
But one great fellowship of love
Throughout the whole wide earth.
In him shall true hearts everywhere
Their high communion find—
His service is the golden cord
Close-binding all mankind.

"Join hands, then, brothers of the faith,
Whate'er your race may be!
Who serves my Father as a son
Is surely kin to me.
In Christ now meet both east and west,
In him meet south and north,
All Christly souls are one in him
Throughout the whole wide earth."

Memorial Service at Newton

It was a befitting and valuable service to the student body at Newton to gather lessons from the lives of three men who as teachers or leaders had brought honor to the school: Prof. Saml. S. Curry who was the long-time teacher of expression, Dr. D. A. W. Smith, class '63, president of our Karen Theological Seminary at Rangoon, Burma, and Dr. C. H. Spalding, class '68, for twenty-five years the New England secretary of our publication society.

Dr. Edward P. Tuller, of Everett, proved that he was just the man to speak of Professor Curry. His ability to do it was supplemented by his appreciation. Both these qualities kindled an enthusiasm in speaker and hearers. He showed that Curry's whole philosophy of expression was grounded in a mastery of nature and a correct psychology.

Dr. E. F. Merriam's delineation of Dr. Smith was a gem. Evidently it came warm from personal touch and with compelled admiration. In the brusque hurry of our day what should be more welcome to our young students than a vision of a Christian scholar who was especially a gentleman! Dr. Smith was one who exemplified the refinement of a perfect courtesy. He took time to be kind; he irradiated the Master's spirit in every relation, and filled a large place in educational missions.

C. H. Watson spoke of Dr. Spalding, his intimate friend of more than forty years. He claimed that the lesson of his life was one of patient faithfulness. Dr. Spalding did not come to his full power until he was sixty-five, then he fast grew and ripened for ten years, then was a benediction for ten years more. Don't be in a hurry! Be satisfied to have a long prime, then a primacy at last. Prematurity is not quite as desirable as maturity—a great lesson for the young man who cannot wait.

The whole service was impressive and profitable, and not at all funereal. The young men honored it with their intelligent welcome.

A Holiday Suggestion

In a student body gathered from distant states and provinces, the question that arises is, "What shall we do with the short holiday vacation?" President Horr gave one pleasant answer, and about fifty students enjoyed its quality. It was a holiday feast with holiday features. The president became the glad host and entertainer, and the "boys" furnished the guests and the happy appreciation. Of course the now aristocratic turkey with his proud accompaniments was in lordly evidence. Students' wives, if they had them, smiled their approval. Illustrated lectures made art a felicitous handmaid to it all. Perhaps no one's joy exceeded that of host and guests except that of the market-man. He expands at Christmas time.

In the City

We are well through our municipal election, and the successful candidate who before election was dreaded by press and public, is now being groomed for his duties with much serious attention and honor by different civic organizations. He protests that he owes nothing to politicians, and is perfectly free to be good. Surely the crux of democracy is the big city, and the dread of a local "Tammany" is ever with us.

Tremont Temple

Dr. J. H. Norris of Fort Worth has been the preacher and the evangelist at the Temple for several weeks. He had been billeted as the "Tornado," but that announcement seems to have been excessive. The "weather man" makes us apprehensive every now and then by scaring us with an approaching cyclone, but our gulf stream seems to take it in hand, pull its teeth and warm it up, so that we get off very comfortably. Noons, nights, and Sundays Dr. Norris has delighted and done good to large crowds. He has earnestly and ably opened up some heroic themes that have storms stowed away in their middle, but Boston has remained comparatively calm. The old "Hub" must be a sort of religious gulf stream.

The Temple Church does not find the man for its great task and pulpit. Doubtless it is searching hard. Strength, sanity, blood-red earnestness, and great platform power—that is a rare combination. But it is an outfit which in a consecrated leader of that great church would strengthen and hearten all the churches in Massachusetts. May such a captain arrive!

Two Social Unions

The women and the men come on successive evenings with their meetings in Ford Hall. The one seems to supplement the other—they appear not to compete. This was particularly true of the January meetings. The men considered "The World Reach of Home Missions," and Rev. Charles A. Brooks, our denominational scout out on the far-flung line, was the speaker. In vivid fashion he related and connected the supposedly alien districts of our big cities with the present struggle of Poland, Roumania, Czechoslovakia, Russia, and all the rest, showed how closely the gospel had bound them together and how American "aliens" were springing across the seas to help lay the new foundations and lead their bewildered countrymen. Every Baptist in the land ought to hear that speech. Pass it around!

The ladies were getting a deal of valuable information, accompanied by a champion world traveler and picture man. Everybody knows the National Geographic Magazine. Well, the man who talked and showed the wonderful pictures was Editor Williams of that famous periodical. It was all like a comfortable journey through India. Mrs. O. J. White, the charming and capable president, is giving the women an unusual administration.

Home Talent

January 6, the ministers' conference refreshed itself with home talent. Whenever it does that, it comes out very happily. It did this time. Rev. Frank M. Swaffield, the vigorous young pastor at West Somerville, read a paper on "The Church at the Judgment Seat of the World." While the church came off better than we feared she would, the world was damaged somewhat as a just and impartial judge. Often the world has not only blind eyes, but loaded scales in weighing the church. There are things in the world that clamor for judgment while she keeps busy judging the church. It was well for us to have the faults of the church admitted, and have our attention called to the foibles of her judge. It was a strong and plain spoken discussion. We ought to have more of our own young men of promise speak at gatherings like this. Wisdom is undoubtedly with the aged but there is a vast deal of enthusiasm and common sense among the young.

Back to Tremont Temple

By the hearty invitation of the Tremont Temple Church, the conference voted unanimously to return to its old home in Chipman Hall. The ministers judged that the action of the church was self-explanatory, and adequately self-expressive. We shall be permanently welcome, and Baptistically free, and shall be the guests of the church. That is an ideal arrangement. All the roots of our conference, as well as our tenderest traditions are in that building. The hall is high up, cheerful, quiet, and well ventilated, so "all's well that ends well," and confident we are that freedom and welcome will continue. Assistant Pastor Lockrow has won the credit for this happy issue.

Wisconsin News and Notes

By ROBERT W. SHAW

The Annual

The Wisconsin Annual has just come from the press. It is brimming full of the usual information which is so often stored away forever in such publications. Some of these facts are interesting enough for publication. The membership columns show a net gain of 446 over the preceding year, giving us a total of a few more than 20,000 members. There were 1,100 received last year by baptism, 370 more than the year before. The Sunday school enrollment has increased about 2,500, giving us 19,300 in that department. The permanent property values have increased something in the neighborhood of $227,000. The benevolence columns prove a most interesting study. In 1920 about $86,000 was given for denominational objects, and only $6,700 for other benevolent objects. This year nearly $111,500 was given to denominational objects, a worthy increase of nearly 30 per cent; but the offering to other objects for 1921 was $22,600, which is nearly 333 per cent of an increase. We wonder if such an increase is general throughout the states.

Christmas Programs

A change in the character of the Christmas programs has been observed for several years. This year instead of a program of songs, recitations, etc., many churches went in for dramas and pageants, and most of them feel that this is a task worth while. In Wisconsin we have an enthusiast for pageants and dramas in the person of Rev. Chas. A. Boyd, director of religious education for our state, and he has pushed this very much during the past two years. In addition to his dramas of Esther, Ruth, Elijah, and others, he is preparing a pageant based on the December number of Missions, which it is hoped many churches will give during the campaign for the financial relief of the denominational boards and conventions.

The Campaign

The machinery is being rapidly developed for the campaign in Wisconsin. January 10 a large number of workers met in Milwaukee to study methods and plans. There was a confidential feeling that once the people knew the situation they would rise and bring relief needed to our denomination. It was interesting to note that the pastors, for the most part, felt that the local churches needed to be stirred with the financial appeal every year, in order to keep the best financial interest in the work of the denomination. Dr. LeGrand is giving this his most serious attention, and we believe that victory is in sight.

Honorable Mention

For the most part the churches remember their pastors at Christmas time in some substantial way. This year several have done it so well that we mention them with the hope that next year some other churches will do likewise for their ministers. Pastor Pierson, of Janesville, was given a check for $500 and his dues paid in the M. and M. Pension Fund. Pastor Gordon, of Fond du Lac, was given a check to cover the initial payment in the M. and M. Fund. Pastor Phelps, of Milwaukee, and his wife each were given substantial purses, and now have money jingling in their pockets. Other churches may have done similarly with their ministers, but word of it has not reached the writer.

Other Things

Pastor H. C. Carnell, now at Bay View, Milwaukee, is pleased at the way things are opening up in this new field. The church has undertaken a program four times as big as ever before.

Pastor F. L. Holden has removed from Bangor to Antigo, where he has begun his work as pastor of the church. His work was well done at Bangor.

W. C. Osborn, who has spent two years in general work in this state, is supplying Bangor Church. He is ready to locate as the pastor of some good town church.

Dr. A. A. Hobson, of First Church, Milwaukee, has a committee at work on a ten-years' program. They are facing the city problem of a changing neighborhood, but instead of waiting until it is too late, they are getting ready to meet it.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN.

The leaven of tithing and stewardship is spreading throughout the Detroit Baptist churches. There have been a faithful few who for years have taken pleasure in a partnership with God—not alone in the tithing of their income but in a recognition of stewardship of time, energy and prayer. They said little about the richness of their lives as that might seem vain glorious. Now that the campaign for stewardship is on they are most active in the propaganda which includes sale and circulation of literature, holding of conferences, writing, speaking and prayer, by which means they are offering to their friends and acquaintances this glorious new vista of Christian experience and fellowship with their Lord.

Ministers, pastors, laymen and laywomen gave up January 9 to a conference at First German-American Church. Evangelism and stewardship were the great themes. There was a good attendance. Rev. Dr. Norcross, of New York, was the chief out-of-town speaker and his messages were engaging and heart-searching. There was a dinner conference led by H. C. Macdonald and an evening service presided over by W. W. Smith, president of the Detroit Baptist Union. Rev. A. V. Allen gave an illustrated lecture on stewardship that was convincingly appreciated.

In the afternoon Supt. Gleiss gave a rapid sketch of advance work that imperatively needs to be done in the Detroit area this new year: the new $80,000 church edifice at Royal Oak (already under way); a new meeting house for the rapidly growing church at Redford, to cost nearly $80,000; a new church building at Grand River and Clarendon Avenue for the Hudson Avenue congregation, to cost about $75,000; the first unit for the Calvary Church in St. Clair Heights, to cost approximately $18,000; a Christian center for the Polish people on the west side that should cost $90,000; additions to Bethel and something on Grand River, near Monier Road. How can it be done? God alone knows how all these can be financed. But these are not all of the crying needs Baptistically of this dynamic city. A large part of the above must be provided for over and above the New World Movement pledges.

The serious period of readjustment and unemployment is surely bringing men and women back to God. There is a deepening of the Christian life evidenced in all the churches. The Bible schools are greatly increased in attendance. The campaigns for teacher training are already resulting in new and better teachers. Last year was an outstanding period in ingathering and the new year promises to exceed even last year.

Dr. Norcross has been spending several days in and about Detroit with splendid results. His messages are so cheery and practical, so full of actual experience and firm conviction based upon Bible truth that he is welcomed everywhere. We wish that every church in the Detroit area might be privileged with his charming inspiration and heart searching talks.

The work at Beulah Church moves on with earnestness and zeal. Pastor James S. West has been with the church fourteen months, during which time 278 new members have been received, of which 106 were by baptism. No extra meetings, no outside preacher or singer but a full house all the time and always an earnest appeal for decisions. Last Sunday $1,600 was raised toward the church debt. Pastor West stepped into a new building and a large debt when he began his work with Beulah. The intervening months have been most trying financially everywhere, but the business skies are clearing.

Loren T. Bush

By JUDSON B. THOMAS

Loren T. Bush was translated to the heavenly land on Dec. 15, 1921, at which time he was living in Los Angeles. He had reached the ripe and mellow age of eighty-four. Born near Chautauqua, N. Y., reared in Iowa, graduated from the old Baptist Theological Seminary, under Dr. Northrup, a veteran of the Civil war, a missionary of the First Church, Chicago, while in the seminary, pastor for fifty years, including such churches as Cedar Falls, Waukegan, Portland, Ore., Morrison, Ill., assistant pastor in First Church, Cleveland, and Second Church, Chicago, where he was made "Pastor Emeritus"—this is a short summary of a true and modest and successful worker of God. His faith and his face glowed with the beauty of a sterling Christian manhood. Naturally modest and retiring, he was always untiring in the splendid and faithful work of his life's choice. He enjoys the rewards of fidelity but his works follow after and many are living who call his memory blessed. Dr. J. M. Dean of Pasadena conducted the funeral services. A host of friends all over the country mourn the loss of this faithful man of God.

FIRST CHURCH, Tacoma, Rev. C. O. Johnson, pastor, held its annual meeting Jan. 4. Reports showed a successful year's work. There were 250 additions, about half received by baptism. $20,365 had been raised and expended. The church has a large program for the coming year's work. Each department, officer and committee is active and enthusiastic in striving to carry out the program.

DR. J. Y. AITCHISON, general director of the General Board of Promotion, in a hurried visit to the coast, spent Jan. 10 in Seattle. He was kept busy with conferences, meeting a group of leaders at one o'clock, addressing the quarterly meeting of the Seattle Union of Women's Mission Circles at 2:30 and addressing a large group of men at 6:30. His clear statements of the situation helped to remove misunderstandings and awakened a deeper interest in the work. There is a fine spirit of cooperation on the part of the pastors and churches in Western Washington toward the denominational program.

A SCHOOL OF MISSIONS will be held by the church at Centralia beginning this month.

OREGON

REV. THOS. BROOMFIELD died Sunday, Dec. 18. The funeral service was held Dec. 23 in Highland Church, Portland, conducted by his pastor, Rev. W. L. Riley, Rev. J. E. Thomas, Rev. C. E. Tunnell and Dr. O. C. Wright participating, and others of his ministerial brethren were honored as pall-bearers. Mr. Broomfield was born in Ireland. Coming to this country early in life he entered the ministry and attended the Morgan Park Seminary. Miss Daisy Garvin became his wife while he was acting as summer student supply at Garden City, Minn., and she survives him, having ever been a noble coworker in all of their Christian service. Their son, Lieutenant Hugh Broomfield, lies buried among the thousands who fell in France. Mr. Broomfield held pastorates at Lake Benton, Fairfax, Bemidji and Parkers Prairie, Minn.; also at Aberdeen, Wash., and Gladstone, Ore., his final pastorate being with Sellwood Church, Portland. Pastor W. L. Riley, his life-long friend, and Dr. W. T. Milliken, pastor of Salem Church, who has known him intimately for twenty-five years, record the conviction of his brethren when they said that few men exemplified more perfectly the ideals of a person who is God's own man.

Results of the car in this city show fifty-one professions of faith, eleven baptisms, forty-two enrolled in the Sunday school; a church organized. First Church, American, has kindly voted the use of its house temporarily for Mexican work. Bible worker Villanueva reports that he had sold more Bibles in Nogales than in any other city within this same period of time. One man, after conversion, bought fifty Bibles to give to his friends. The car is now located in Tucson to aid Brother Urbina in a series of meetings. The Rev. E. L. Humphrey, of San Miguel, El Salvador, C. A., in United States on furlough, is to become temporarily the missionary for the Mexicans of Nogales, following the work of the Chapel Car. Brother Humphrey has had years of experience with Spanish-speaking peoples.

COLORADO

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF FIRST CHURCH, Eaton, held Jan. 6, with 150 present to partake of a supper, was the best in the history of the church. Pastor N. J. Peterson reported thirty-one members received, twenty by baptism, during the four months of his pastorate. Among seven baptized on Christmas day were the two children of Dr. A. Z. Hall, former missionary to China. Three more have been received for baptism. The Sunday morning congregations fill the building. A five-point goal was adopted at the annual meeting: seventy-five members for the new year; an average attendance of 200 in the Sunday school; prayer meeting attendance of fifty; every member of the church a contributing member; an addition to church building to accommodate growing Bible school.

SUNDAY EVENING, Jan. 9, Park Memorial Church of Springfield burned the mortgage on the main church building, which had been reduced from $12,000 to $5,000 in the past twenty years. Then followed the dedication of the new $75,000 parish house, the gift of one of the members, a woman who has been one of the Sunday school's successful primary teachers for several years. On Thursday evening, Jan. 12, the annual roll call and banquet was held in the new parish house with between 500 and 600 present. The program was the reading of reports by chairmen of last year's committees and the forecast of their proposals for the new year by the new chairmen of the committees. Because of the opportunities opened by the new parish house a greatly increased budget was found to be necessary. Full amount of this budget has been raised by pledges for the new year.

AT CALVARY CHURCH, BRIDGEPORT, a boys' club has been organized under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. J. W. Granger, who was ordained Jan. 10 by a regularly constituted council. Mr. Granger's statement of his conversion, call to the ministry and views of Christian doctrine were most satisfactory to the council, of which body Rev. D. B. MacQueen, Bridgeport, was moderator and Rev. F. S. Clark, Rowayton, clerk. The church was advised to proceed with the ordination, and at 7:30 p. m., the following program was carried out: Invocation, Rev. W. M. Richardson, Bridgeport, who also gave the charge to the church; sermon by Rev. Donald B. MacQueen; ordination prayer, Rev. H. B. Sloat, Hartford; charge to candidate and welcome to the ministry, Rev. Walter Gay, Bridgeport.

MAINE

Institutes in Religious Education

For some time Director Henderson has anticipated the coming to the state of a group of Baptist leaders in religious education. It was a "stormy" reception which the leaders from Philadelphia received upon arrival at Portland, but it was Maine's own way of saying, "Come in, and make yourselves at home." For four days they conducted an institute in religious education.

The members of the team were Rev. William E. Chalmers, secretary of religious education for the American Baptist Publication Society; Rev. Seldon L. Roberts, director of teacher training; Rev. Thomas S. Young, director of church vacation schools; Miss Meme Brockway, director of elementary work; Mr. Milton M. McGorrell, director of young people's work, and Rev. Isaac Higginbotham, Portsmouth, N. H., lecturer on missionary education.

On Sunday these workers were busy at church services, Sunday schools and young people's meetings. A mass meeting was held in the afternoon, at which Miss Brockway gave a unique and stirring address. The claims of the child to better religious training was deeply impressed upon the audience.

On Monday morning Drs. Chalmers and Roberts spoke to the Baptist ministers of Portland and vicinity. Monday afternoon saw the opening of the institute proper. All meetings were held in First Free Church. In spite of wintry weather the first session was well attended. Rev. B. S. Hudson led the devotional service suggesting the text and motto for the institute—II Timothy 2:15. Then followed the classes with lectures on, "Training the Devotional Life," "The Church Program of Religious Education," "Missionary Education," "Young People's Methods," "Principles of Teaching," "The Church Vacation School," "Elementary Work," and "Dramatization and Story Telling."

Eleven lectures were given each day besides a devotional service and an inspirational address. Rev. J. Harrison Thompson and Rev. A. B. Lorimer spoke helpfully at other devotional meetings. The addresses by Dr. Chalmers and Dr. Young were of vital interest, and brought a fresh appreciation of the scope of the work of religious education. The co-operation of Rev. R. R. Kennan, pastor of Free Church, meant much to the success of the institutes. Miss Matilda Utecht, who served as registrar, did a great deal to make possible her partial report of two hundred and seventy-five registrations.

From Portland three of the team went to Waterville, while the other three, including Director Henderson, went to Rockland where intensive institutes were held Thursday and Friday.

The Sunday school work has been strengthened by these institutes. A broader vision of the task has come to many. The work of the church vacation school created considerable interest, and it is hoped that many schools will be started in our churches next summer.

VERMONT

FIRST CHURCH, BENNINGTON, Rev. W. G. Towart, pastor, has established as a regular feature of its work a school of missions, held each fall. Every Sunday morning the pastor gives the children a missionary story as a part of their church worship. In the Bible school the regular missionary stories are used. The first Thursday of each month a stereopticon lecture on some mission station is given. But the school of missions is different: it is an intensive effort to have the whole church concentrate on the study of missions for six Sunday evenings. The first part of the meeting is social, with light refreshments, followed by a devotional service. Then comes the study for forty minutes in graded classes, followed by a short talk or pictures by some prominent man or woman who has had experience on a mission field. Average attendance this fall was 125. The annual business meeting of the church was held January 2. The records, especially along financial lines, were the best ever. The money received during the year was $14,905.34 not including money raised or expended by the Ladies' Society or the Young People: $8,383 was given for benevolences and $6,210 for current expenses with $312 for educational and other needs. This is the fourth year that the church has given more for missionary purposes than it has spent on the local field. Reports from the Sunday School, Woman's Missionary Society and Ladies' Aid Society were encouraging.

SUTTON CHURCH, Rev. Kenneth MacLeod pastor, held a school of missions for six weeks at the parsonage. Pastor MacLeod leading the men in the study of "From Survey to Service," while Mrs. MacLeod led the women through a rapid survey of a continent concluding with the islands.

MANCHESTER CENTER CHURCH, Rev. Joseph S. Brown, pastor, held its annual business meeting Jan. 2. All reports from church, Bible school, Christian Endeavor, Service Club and Women's Mission Circle showed that earnest, faithful work had been accomplished. Roll call followed the business meeting, 64 persons responding in person or by letter. Pastor Brown was retained by illness and unable to be present at the annual meeting for the first time in nine years.

DEACON F. W. SHEPARDSON OF FAIRFAX, who next month will be 86 years of age, sings every Sunday morning in the church choir as he has done for about 70 years.

Peddle Notes

The winter term at Peddle Institute, Hightstown, opened Jan. 4 with indications of continued success and prosperity. The present enrollment includes over 350 students, with an unusually large percentage of "old boys," and the spirit of the entire student body augurs well for the coming months.

Under the able leadership of Headmaster R. W. Swetland, the school faculty, consisting of thirty-two members, is finding the present year one of great progress in all phases of school life. Three additions were made to the faculty at the beginning of the year, as follows: Mr. W. K. Sprague, a graduate of Peddle and of Brown University; Mr. O. W. Elsbree, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and of Crozier Theological Seminary, and Mr. W. T. Frederick, of Temple University.

The school Y. M. C. A. was very active during the fall term. Mr. William Avery Barras, faculty advisor of the organization, and Americus R. Underdown, '24, president, stimulated great interest among the students, with the result that the regular Tuesday evening meetings were invariably attended by a large and enthusiastic group of young men. The annual reception held at the beginning of the year under the auspices of the "Y" was an inspiring affair, marking as it did the entrance upon an equally inspiring year.

Throughout the fall term the students had a series of real treats in the Sunday evening services, the speakers being as follows: Clayton S. Cooper, New York; Prof. Albert T. Davis, East Orange, N. J.; Dr. Paul M. Pearson, Swarthmore, Pa.; Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, Fifth Avenue Church, New York; Rev. Sumner R. Vinton, New York; November 27, Rev. Cuthbert P. Newton, Gethsemane Church, Trenton, N. J. The students also had the frequent pleasure of attending the Sunday evening services in First Church of Hightstown, of which Rev. Harry E. Owings is the pastor.—F. L. FERRIS.

NEW YORK

PEOPLE'S CHURCH, Newfield, started the new year with a clean slate so far as finances go. The new church building, which takes the place of the one burned five years ago, is paid for. Through the zealous work of the pastor, Rev. Clayton I. Swayze, and the hearty response of the people, the last few hundred dollars were paid and the notes burned. Rev. Swayze has been in Newfield about two years, faithfully leading in the Lord's work, ably assisted by his wife.

DELAWARE

THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS' INSTITUTE conducted by representatives of the Publication Society under the auspices of the Delaware State Convention, Jan. 1-4, was an outstanding success. All of the Wilmington churches were well represented in the classes and inspirational gatherings, and all but two of the white churches of the state had delegates. Second Church entertained with a lavish hospitality. Teachers, trustees, deacons and other officers received inspiration for the year's work. A library for the largest number of credits was won by Second Sunday school. A follow-up committee, headed by Mr. Ralph M. Palmer met promptly and set on foot plans for church-night simultaneously in the churches, and future evangelistic and educational work. Week-day religious education was brought to the front and is a topic of widespread discussion as a result. The entire financial budget was raised by the second night of the meetings and a debt on one of the vacation schools of last summer liquidated from the overflow.

on Jan. 1 was attended by over 200, the second, a week later, by more than 300. Mr. Dwyer recently received 150 new members as the result of revival meetings.

THE STEWARDSHIP COMMITTEE of Wilkinsburg Church, Mrs. Elmer E. Cole, chairman, has arranged to have a four-minute speaker present the claims of stewardship each Sunday morning in February. On February 19 cards will be given to the Sunday-school pupils to take home for counsel with their parents. If signed the card should bear the endorsing signature of the parent. On Sunday, Feb. 26, these cards will be called in and opportunity given at the morning and evening service of B. Y. P. U. meeting for adult members to join the Wilkinsburg League of Stewards. The league has now enrolled seventy of its quota of 120.

IOWA

THE ANNUAL MEETING of Calvary Church, Davenport, Rev. A. Frank Houser, pastor, showed that 135 members had been received during the year, sixty-six of them by baptism. Money raised during the year was in excess of $15,000 as over against $7,200 three years ago. The average attendance at the morning service has been 245; at the evening service 295.

DR. FRANKLIN W. SWIFT and wife conducted a successful revival with Council Bluffs Church Nov. 13-27, with meetings well attended. Two large choirs led the music. A goodly number of first decisions were made, seventeen have been baptized and others received by letter and experience. Dr. Swift and his wife made many friends. The after effects of the meetings are good. 224 of the present membership, 45 per cent, have been received during the pastorate of Rev. J. Frederic Catlin. Eighty new members were received during 1921. An interesting Christmas program was given Dec. 23. The pastor was presented with a fine traveling bag. Miss Gilbert, the assistant granted by the state convention board, closed her work here Dec. 21 and has entered Des Moines University.

NEBRASKA

MRS. B. F. FARRAR, wife of Rev. B. F. Farrar, pastor at Wellfleet, died in Lincoln, Dec. 15, after an illness of a few days. She was converted at the age of twelve, and for twenty years was a most courageous and consecrated pastors' wife. Hundreds remember her in love for her deeds of kindness. The funeral service was held at Adams, her childhood home. Besides her husband she leaves a daughter nine years old; a sister, Mrs. C. I. Whyman of Adams, and three brothers—J. A. Meyer, of Remote, Ore.; A. C. Meyer, of Adams and A. L. Meyer, of Crab Orchard, Neb.

INDIANA

REV. PAUL JUDSON MORRIS has completed three months' work with the Emerson Avenue Church of Indianapolis. In this time he has called upon every member of the church and the larger portion of the church constituency. Sunday school attendance has reached 304. Present buildings are taxed to the limit of their capacity. The new gymnasium, the first unit of the new church plant, will be ready for use before February 1. It is the expectation of the church that by Easter the Sunday-school attendance will have reached 400 and the membership of the church doubled. In the past eight months the church membership has increased 40 per cent. Since Mr. Morris came, twenty-two have united with the church. Recently copies of the "New Baptist Praise Book" were purchased for the services of worship, and copies of "The Hymnal for American Youth" for DECEMBER 1 REV. A. C. COOPER began his fifth year as pastor of Dunkirk Church. At the annual meeting, Dec. 28, a gratifying report was given of the church finances. Twenty-two have united with the church mostly by baptism, during the past three months. At communion service, Jan. 8, when sixteen new members received the hand of fellowship, the largest number sat down to the "holy feast" in the present pastorate. All church organizations are wide awake and aggressive.

THE PAST YEAR in the life of First Church, Indianapolis, has been the greatest in its history. The church raised the largest budget for current expenses and benevolences ever raised and not only raised its yearly quota of over $60,000 for the Forward Movement, but exceeded it by nearly $10,000. There were over 100 baptisms and more received by letter and experience. The Bible school has an enrollment of over 1,600 and the church membership is over 1,700. The church ministers to nearly 4,000 who are directly or indirectly connected with the work.

NORTH DAKOTA

POWERS LAKE: The General Superintendent spent New Year's Day at the Powers Lake Church. Rev. E. Monnes closed his work at Powers Lake Christmas Sunday, after eight and one-half years of happy and splendid service. The church in many ways expressed its appreciation of the pastor. Until a new pastor is secured, the state convention will help to care for the interests of the church in providing a speaker for two Sundays a month. For the present, Rev. C. W. Finwall will visit the church the second and fourth Sundays of each month.

PARK RIVER: The church and Sunday school observed their Christmas program in the new church basement, which has been completed and is an exceedingly attractive room. About 200 persons were present. An offering was taken to help in the church-building enterprise. The State Convention and the Home Mission Society are liberally assisting the church in its heroic undertaking. When the building is completed, it will be one of the most attractive small church buildings in North Dakota.

PAGE: The Baptist, Methodist and Lutheran churches of Page united in observing the Week of Prayer. The closing meetings of the week were held in our Baptist church.

DRAYTON: Rev. P. Joneson, who closed his work at Drayton, December 1st, was called to Seattle by the sudden death of his father.

KENMARE: Rev. A. F. Swanson of Newport spent the first week of January with the church at Kenmare, and conducted the Prayer Week services. The plan has been made whereby Pastor-at-Large, Rev. O. S. Jacobson, will visit the Niobe and Kenmare churches every other Sunday.

REV. O. S. JACOBSON: Pastor-at-Large Jacobson, will care for the Swedish churches at Naughton, Wilton, Coleharbor, Kenmare and Niobe, preaching every other Sunday at Kenmare and Niobe. Reverend Jacobson's family is again in quarantine—this time for smallpox and diphtheria.

MINNESOTA

WITH THE NEW YEAR Pastor Arthur Wickenden of Owatonna, inaugurated "church night," and in an effective circular letter addressed to the members has urged that as far as possible all mid-week church activities be arranged for Wednesday evenings. The church annual meeting on Jan. 4 started off the new plan. The church is cooperating actively with a group of six local churches in the maintenance of a training school for religious workers which meets weekly. The church will engage in special services for revival and evangelism Feb. 15—March 5, in which the pastor will be assisted by Geo. E. Burlingame, who is working this winter as an evangelist of the Home Mission Society and State Convention in Minnesota.

PASTOR ARTHUR C. SMITH, of First Church, Brainerd, reports a spirit of fine enthusiasm and devotion among his people, expressing itself in a weekly prayer meeting attended by forty or fifty on a cold winter night; in the recent baptism of four; and in the purpose of one young man to study for the ministry. A church bulletin is now a feature of the work. A building enterprise, for the present checked by untoward conditions, when completed, will provide ample equipment for worship, educational and social work.

CHRISTMAS NIGHT at Canby church was notable for an impressive baptismal service. Pastor Davies gave a forceful sermon on Christian baptism, after which fifteen were baptized. Eight members of a girls' class of nine were baptized, after singing their class song, "O Jesus, I have promised, to serve Thee to the end!" Pastor Davies considers his class in religious instruction, which meets weekly for credit in the high-school curriculum, a fruitful influence in the recent conversion of a large number of his young people.

MICHIGAN

NEW IMPETUS HAS BEEN GIVEN the work of Davison church by the addition of workers to its force. Seventeen, most of them young people, were recently baptized by the pastor, Rev. P. J. Johns. A B. Y. P. U. with twenty-five members has been organized. Men of church and community are holding regular meetings where topics of the day are discussed.

THE BURTON CHURCH, Grand Rapids, tendered a farewell reception on New Year's eve to its pastor, Rev. Morgan L. Williams, who goes to Lansing as director of education for the Michigan State Convention. As a mark of appreciation the members of the church and congregation presented Mr. Williams with a gold watch. The presentation speech was made by Mr. Don Lakie, in which he expressed the regret of the church in accepting the resignation. Mr. Burton in his response assured the church that his interest in its work would not end with his pastorate. During Mr. Williams' connection with Burton Church the congregation has shown a marked growth, the finances improved and the Sunday school made into a model of efficiency. The church has appointed a pulpit committee of which Mr. Everett C. Fish, 139 W. Greggs St., Grand Rapids, is chairman.

"I'LL SEE YOU IN TOLEDO" is the phrase used by the W. W. G. in boosting for its third annual convention, to be held in Toledo March 12-14, in Ashland Avenue Church. Miss Alma Noble, Buffalo, national executive secretary; Miss Elizabeth Vickland, missionary from Assam, and Miss Mildred Kaminski, Americanization worker from Newark, N. J., will be the principal speakers. Dr. Vincent, pastor of the entertaining church, will conduct the annual early Sunday morning communion service and preach the sermon. An attendance goal of 800 Ohio young women has been set. A state booster has the whole state organized for boosting. Ohio has thirty associations with 2,000 members in all and nearly 200 chapters. For Christmas the girls gave their state secretary a watch and a pin, sent five dozen silver spoons to the stocking of Mather Industrial School, Beaufort, S. C., and sent innumerable Christmas boxes to her various specifics in China, Assam, South India, Alaska, and Mexico. In the past two years there have been more than 100 life service recruits from the guild membership. Missionary programs study and plans are pursued according to national plans and the work grows steadily. The girls are preparing to enter enthusiastically upon the task allotted them in the Continuation Campaign of the New Movement. The latest venture is the publication of a news sheet called "The Convention News," giving detailed news of the coming convention, personal letters from leaders and plans for general work. Ohio girls invite Baptist readers to join them each morning at the waking hour in a prayer tryst for the success of their work as God counts success.

ILLINOIS

THE FORTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY of the Woman's American Home Baptist Mission Society and the forty-first academic year of the Baptist Missionary Training School are to be celebrated as Founders' Day on Feb. 2. The program is to take place at the training school, 2969 Vernon Ave., Chicago. An alumnae luncheon; a historical session; living pictures of events in training school life, given by students; a reception; a banquet and an evening address are included in the program. The Baptist public is invited.

Shurtleff College Jottings

Shurtleffians are happy over the increased enrollment of students in Shurtleff College, the "Pioneer College" of the West. The freshman class is the largest in its history. Most of the students have had high-school training and are doing well. There must be 100 freshmen next year.

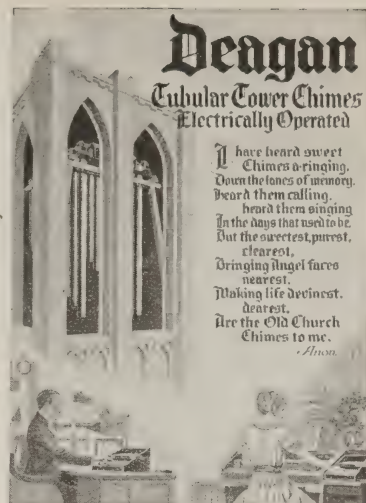

Students are gradually coming back to pre-war conditions. They are doing well in athletics under Coach Lowery. Their games have been clean, the victory over self being considered more important than winning games. Inter-class games in basket ball have just been played, the sophomores winning the cup.

Many faculty members and their wives are engaged in Sunday-school work. On a recent Sunday Professors Carr, Fulbright, Lowery, and Tyner, and Mrs. Bruner, Mrs. Dunkin and Mrs. Potter taught classes, while Professors Bruner, Dunkin, and Stevenson supplied pulpits in Illinois and Missouri. During the Christmas holidays Prof. Dunkin will conduct revival services.

Tower Chimes are the Memorial Sublime

Their location becomes a landmark; the sublimity of their music is in harmony with man's feelings of reverence—an outpouring of musical solemnity and worship.

Just the mere touch of a finger upon the electric keyboard in the organist's console, or the minister's study, brings forth the full power of the magnificent, sweet yet sonorous tones of Deagan Chimes.

What more fitting memorial, what greater philanthropy could be bestowed upon any community than the installation of a set of Deagan Tubular Tower Chimes? May we send you more complete information?

Our Book Shelf

Princes of the Church, by W. Robertson Nicoll, New York; Geo. H. Doran Co. $3 net.

For many years Dr. Nicoll has contributed to the British Weekly sketches of outstanding religious leaders. Thirty-four of the best of these have been gathered in this volume. To commend the style is needless. To commend the volume is easy. It is bound by its variety to make an appeal to preachers and to all who believe that men are the most interesting and vital things in the world. No preacher can afford to neglect such vital and inspiring biographical sketches as these.

A Gentleman in Prison, by Caroline MacDonald, New York; Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.75 net.

One of the most vital and unique human documents which has appeared recently. The book is a translation of the confession of a Japanese criminal, written while waiting execution. The man had found Jesus Christ while in prison and wrote these pages in the hope that they might be of service to other men who had never had a chance. Some will enjoy this book as a study in the power of Christ to save; some will be interested in it as a psychological study; others will find it a thrilling romance. It is good from any of these standpoints.

Around the Camp Fire with the Older Boys, by Margaret W. Eggleston, New York; Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.25 net.

This book is designed for the use of boys in their teens who are called upon to tell stories around the camp fire or on some other occasion. They do not know what to talk about; here is the answer. Bible-school teachers, parents and ministers will find it equally useful. The stories are real enough or true enough to a boy's best ideals so that they can be readily adapted to conditions by the tellers.

Ice-Breakers and the Ice-Breaker Herself, by Edna Geister, New York; Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.35.

To all who have to plan games and socials for young people a book of good suggestions is invaluable. Here it is. The first part is full of clever games, stunts and suggestions for parties. The second part tells how to do these things and how to become an effective leader of recreation. Young people's organizations are referred to in this book; it is what they have been looking for.

The Prophetic Ministry for Today, by Charles D. Williams, New York; The Macmillan Co. $1.50.

We are accustomed to look for good things in the volumes in which are contained the Lyman Beecher Yale Lectures. This volume of lectures delivered in 1920 by the doughty Michigan bishop is no exception. If, as he says, it represents "fragments" of his scattered mind, they are yet good fragments. The art and material of preaching, though old, is ever new, and we fail to see how any minister may not learn new things concerning his important prophetic work from the perusal of this volume. Only those who think that they have already attained will be indifferent.

Are You a Maker

dimes—just think what a poem you've made of it; a foot of dimes to go traveling around the world to send little brown girls to school, and sick yellow boys to the doctor, and to tell frightened black children that there's nothing to be scared about, because God watches out for them day and night. Now isn't that a pretty grand poem, you dear maker?"

I nodded. And Bill nodded. And little Timothy nodded. So Uncletim nodded, too: "Of course, it's the most poetical kind of poem in the whole world. And you only put it in the Chimney Corner, then all those Young Reserves will read about your foot of dimes and will say: 'Now, why wouldn't I be that kind of a poet, myself? The kind that makes the merriest, cheerfulest jingles go racing all over God's world as the dimes start schools and churches and hospitals to tell the red children and the white ones and the brown—and tan ones what makes Baptists so happy! I may be too late to enter the poem contest, but I guess any boy (or girl) can be a maker. A maker's a hundred per cent better than being a poet."

So I'm writing now to ask all you Young Reserves: Are you a maker? The kind of poet who aims to make jingles with dimes in this Continuation Campaign of ours?

Come on, Young Reserves,
Let's surprise everybody
By our generosity—
Why not? ? ? ?

An Enlarged Bible Work Made Possible

(Provided the money is raised)

THE American Baptist Home Mission Society, recognizing the strategic place which the Word of God occupies in all missionary endeavors, has most generously released to the American Baptist Publication Society $750,000 of its askings for equipment in the New World Movement to enable the Publication Society to publish certain editions of the Bible, for which there is a present urgent demand, and also to create an endowment fund with the remainder, the income from which each year shall be available for the publishing of the Scriptures.

The Publication Society now has in hand a splendid edition of the complete Russian Bible, which was undertaken without sufficient designated funds, hoping that individual gifts might be had to enable its publication. The same is true of a separate edition of the Russian New Testament.

The Society is asked to publish an Estonian New Testament with the Psalms, and to provide an extra set of plates of this work to be used in printing the book in Europe. The Gospels in Spanish are already available; the Society ought to provide the whole New Testament, at least, in this language. Then, too, there is need for a larger fund for printing the Scriptures in English. The needs for this work in terms of dollars are as follows:

To complete the RUSSIAN BIBLE, at least	$10,000
To make plates and provide an initial edition of 3,000 copies of the Estonian New Testament and Psalms	12,000
To provide an extra set of plates of the Estonian New Testament and Psalms	500
For the Spanish New Testament	15,000
For the publication of Scriptures in English	50,000
Total	$87,500

The Society hopes that the full $750,000 will be given to the Bible work it is doing for the denomination. The following distribution of this amount is proposed:

That $150,000 be designated for expenditure in publishing the Scriptures; that a fund of $600,000 be set up as a Bible Endowment Fund.

New gifts to the American Baptist Home Mission Society may be designated for this SPECIAL BIBLE WORK of the American Baptist Publication Society, or for any part thereof, and be counted in the $100,000,000, up to the total amount of $750,000. Should designated gifts for this purpose exceed this amount, the excess would necessarily have to be considered as outside the $100,000,000.

The generous act of the Home Mission Society makes it possible for those who greatly desire to extend the distribution of God's Word among the un-churched peoples of the earth, to give directly for that purpose.

Note: It is to be remembered that no part of this money is available except as it may be given, hereafter for this Special Bible Work. The gifts of our people alone make possible the giving of God's Word to the peoples of the world.

Foreign Missions in Peril!!

The two Foreign Mission Societies are in peril! They face an emergency and a grave danger such as the present generation of Northern Baptists has never known.

1. Missionaries report wide open doors and an unprecedented evangelistic opportunity. Hundreds of inquirers wait for baptism, and more than 10,000 converts were baptized in 1920. Statistics for 1921 are not yet compiled but the movement Christward gathers momentum.

There is danger that this work of grace must stop.

2. Medical missionaries have never before had such opportunities for ministering to the sick. In 1920 147,000 patients received treatment and heard the story of the Gospel.

There is danger that this healing ministry must be curtailed.

3. On the ten mission fields, 128 stations are now in active operation, serving as promising outposts for the Kingdom.

There is danger that some of these will have to be closed.

4. Northern Baptists now support more than 950 foreign missionaries. Large sums are needed to pay salaries, evangelistic touring expenses, allowances for mission work and other items in their missionary service.

There is danger that some of these missionaries must be recalled.

What Is the Reason for This Emergency?

To carry forward the work projected for the year, the Foreign Mission Society must receive by April 30, $1,125,860.05 and the Woman's Society must receive $520,767.31, a total of $1,646,627.36.

In view of this crisis some missionaries have offered a month's salary toward meeting the emergency.

Two Things Are Needed

PRAYER. This crisis is leading us all back to God. Man's extremity has always been God's opportunity. Never was prayer more needed by the missionary enterprise than now.

MONEY. This work cannot go on without the financial support of the constituency. The two Societies are confident that the denomination does not wish to see its foreign mission program curtailed. Will the denomination maintain that confidence?
